A year and a half ago I was taken with a severe attack of kidney trouble that pained me to such on extent that morphine had to be giveo me. Was attended by a doctor who pronounced it as stone in the bladder and prescribed Lithia Water. I took Lithia Water and tablets for some time and received oo relief from them. I stopped taking medicines for some time and having some Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root in the house, I decided to try it and felt mnch relieved; while taking the second bottle commenced to pass gravel in urine until I had passed in all at least a half a dozen or more and have not suffered the slightest since and in all have taken one bottle and a half and feel very grateful to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Yours very truly,

UNCLE SAM'S LATEST SCIENTIFIC TRIUMPHS

THE PULMOTOR — THE NEW APPARATUS INTRODUCED BY UNCLE SAM FOR RE-STORING LIFE

NEWLY INVENTED VACUUM GAUGE AT THE U.S. BUREAU OF STANDARDS

THE MOST POWERFUL MAGNET IN THE WORLD

UNCLE SAM has very good reason to plume himself because of a number of important recent achievements that most distinctly make for progress. Some of triumphs have takes the form of new inventions for doing things that were virtually impossible of accomplishment heretofore and others, none the less valuable, have been in the line of discoveries of ways and means for doing things that have been done heretofore, but of doing them more easily, more quickly, more economically or more effectively than has heretofore been deemed possible.

The national government has been taking the lead in scientific, mechanical and engineering development to a constantly increasing extent in late years. For, of course, the reader will understand that in speaking of Uncle Sam's current triumphs in the field of invention and experiment, reference is made not to the federal government as represented by its own experts and employes. Now the national government has always been a contributor to the cause of science and invention, there being dual reasons for its activity in such direction. On the one hand the central government, with paternal instinct, has been bound to contribute in every way to the well-being of the whole people and as is well known such benefit is more often than not conferred through the instrumentality of scientific discoveries and inventions. Obviously then it is up to Uncle Sam to foster Yankee ingenuity by every possible means.

Yet the second incentive to federal activity in this broad field has been even more of a spur than the first. It arises from the fact that the national government is, to an extent but this does not prevent the magnet from doing stunts of great popular interest now and then.

When the magnet is charged with its full electric current of 125 amperes a piece of metal weighing hundreds of pounds might be suspended at the pole pieces and the leakage, that is the "stray magnetic field" way out at the ends of the magnet is sufficient to support in all sorts of positions wrenches and bars of iron weighing as much as five or six pounds apiece, whereas wire nails in series of half a dozen or more, end to end, are supported in horizontal position. One of the most amazing tricks performed by the magnet is to support a glass dish by means of a small piece of iron placed inside the dish, the power of magnetic attraction being exerted upon the iron through the thickness of the layer of glass. Another impressive illustration of the power of this monster magnet is afforded when a handful of nails are thrown in the air perhaps three or four feet away from the magnet. As though enlisted is by an instantaneous impulse they are drawn to the highly magnetized surface.

This new magnet, n world's record breaker in size as well as in power, was constructed specially for the United States government by a firm of instrument makers in Switzerland. The circumstances connected with the designing of the magnet illustrate how great minds may run in the same direction. Mr. Frederick Bates, the United States government expert who is at the head of the division of polorimetry at the bureau of standards and working in conjunction with other government scientists, just worked out the detailed plans for such a magnet when he discovered that the foreign instrument makers who ultimately built this one for our government had been covering the same ground at the same time, each inventor unconscious of the activities of his rival on the opposite side of the Atlantic.

Perhaps the most unusual attribute of this magnet is that it is made available for continuous use, this being necessitated by replacing ordinary insulated wires such as are commonly used with copper tape. This copper tape is surrounded by insulating oil. Through this oil there are run coils of copper tubing about one-half inch in diameter and through this tubing cold water is circulated to carry off the enormous heat which is developed. In the same room with the new magnet is a yet newer invention—the product of government scientists—which promises great things. It is known as a vacuum gauge and it will enable more minute and more accurate measurement than has heretofore been possible in the case of a vacuum.

One of the most notable of Uncle Sam's scientific triumphs of the present year is the new system of multiplex telephony mentioned above and which by its disclosure of a method of transmitting a number of telephone messages simultaneously over the same wire is expected to greatly reduce the cost of long distance telephone conversation. In connection with the development of this new form of telephony which will make one wire do the work of ten, Major Squier and his associates have carried on some experiments which, though originally intended only as a means to an end, now promise to have a distinct value of their own in disclosing the possibilities of transmitting music by telephone.

The music of a phonograph or graphophone

TRANSMITTING PHONOGRAPH MUSIC BY PHONE

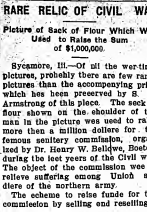
wee the particular form of melody transmitted and the needfis were really surprising in many respects. For one thing the music as heard at the other end of the line was remarkably clear and sweet. Indeed it was seemingly more perfect toes production than that obtainable under eay other conditions inasmuch as the telephone served to entirely eliminate the "needle nose," the one suggestion of the mechanicel which talking machine inventors have never been able to entirely eliminate. It is believed that this disclosure of the possibilities of transmitting music by phone will ultimately enable people to enjoy concerts by the best vocal and instrumental talent when seated in their own homes. This would, of course, prove an especial boon in the case of suburbanites and residents of the rurel districts where the use of the telephone has increased so tremendously in recent years. In the experiments with multiplex telephony the graphophone music was employed to still further demonstrate the possibility of using a single wire for the transmission of various messages simultaneously, each independent of the others. For instance, on one occasion Caruso, by means of a "talker," sang on the line while "The Charge of the Light Brigade" (as recited into a seperate transmitter close at hend) was carried over the same wire at the same time without in any wey interfering with the famous tenor's voice.

Of Uncle Sam's recent innovetions in technical equipment none bids fair to ultimately work greeter wonders than the lately introduced Pulmotor. The Pulmotor is a delicately adjusted machine that occupied a portable case not much larger than the ordinary dressuit case, and its function is to bring back to life persons supposed to be dead. The government provided the first of these new miracle workers for the use of the newly established United States bureau of mines in its work of rescuing men overcome by the poisonous gases in coal mines, but the advent of the invention is opening up life-saving possibilities in other fields, as, for instance, at bathing beaches and in city hospitals—in short in any case where death is threatened through the filling of the lungs with gas or water.

The Pulmotor is, in effect, an automatic breathing machine, its function being to draw the poisonous gases out of the lungs and to force into the lungs in turn the life-giving oxygen. This mechanism includes a cylinder in which oxygen is stored under pressure, a blowing and suction valve actuated by two accordion bellows, and a hood or mask which fits over the mouth and nostrils of the patient, making an air-tight connection between the human lungs and the mechanicel lungs of the machine. It is said of this new invention that it will "make a corpse breathe," meaning that it will compel the diaphragm to move in a body in which life is wholly extinct. The new device costs $200, making it one of the world's most expensive pieces of rescue equipment, as it is certainly one of the most effective. Comparatively little experience is required for its successful operation.

Government officials have within the past few months invented several new machines for quickening and cheapening the manufacture of paper money and postage stamps and whereas these inventions may not find very extensive adoption outside the government workships, they will exert an important influence there. Among these new inventions is a remarkable combination machine which at one operation stamps the successive serial number on each bank note, impresses in color the official seal, cuts the sheets of money into individual notes and counts the bills—tasks that formerly required ee mesy different machines and an immense expenditure of time. Another new invention is a machine which automatically trims at one stroke all four edges of e sheet of bank notes. A third new invention is e mechine for automatically wetting the sheets of paper used in printing our currency—a chore that had formerly to be done by hand—and a fourth invention is a mechanism which neatly arranges in coils the postage stamps which are to be placed on sale in vending or stamp-selling machines which it is planned to introduce in this country following the example of Germany and other foreign countries.

Much bes been printed from time to time regarding the "machines that almost think" invented by the mechanicel experts of the United States census bureau to aid Uncle Sam in the big task of counting noses. However, there is one inventlon, newer then any of the others recently given to the public. This is the automatic card-sorting machine, the function of which is to sort mechenicelly the ninety odd million cards representing the people of the United States—for, under our present system of card-indexing the country the census office has on file a bit of pasteboard to represent every man, woman end child in the republic. The new sorter sorts cards at a speed of from 300 to 325 per minute, sorting the cards into thirteen different drawers. The machine is operated by electricity and the sorting is done through the medium of sensitive needles which eeek out the holes which have previously been punched in each card to record biographical facts and distribute the cards according to the location of these holes.



Uncle Sam's greatest business institution, the postoffice department, has lately fostered its share of new inventions edde from the stamp-vending machines with which it has long been experimenting. The late novelties include an electric canceling mechine for canceling the stamps on letters and postmarking the envelopes; n trolley-system for handling mail in city postoffices and a bait conveyor system for the branch of our postel headquarters, through ifs faculty in automatically printing the money order fees as the amounts of the paid money orders are recorded for auditing purposes. And finelly, the department is on the ave of perfecting a remarkable new machine for the use of every postmaster throughout the country who conducts a branch of the new postel savings bank. This last-mentioned invention is suggestive in appearance of the familiar cash register and its function is to mechanically fill out the deposit slips of the lately-established "poor man's bank," a work that had formerly to be done by hand. Not only will this new mechanical toiler save time and labor, but it will make dishonesty virtually impossible on the part of any employe handling postal bank deposits.

Picture of Sack of Flour Which Was Used to Raise the Sum of $1,000,000.

Sycamore, Ill.—Of all the wer-time pictures, probehly there are few rarer pictures than the accompanying print which has been preserved by E. T. Armstrong of this place. The seck of flour shown on the shoulder of the man in the picture was used to raise more then a million dollers for the famous sanitery commission, organized by Dr. Henry W. Bellows, Boston, during the leet yeers of the Civil wer. The object of the commission wee to relieve suffering among Unioh soldiere of the northern army.

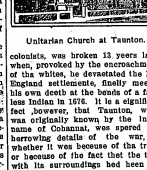
eeck of flour originelly worth $15 was the outcome of an election bet in Austin, Nev. The town wes bolding an election to decide the metter as to whether it would incorporete. On one side of the question wes e men named Gridley, shown in the picture, and on the other wes one Herrick. Gridley egreed that if the election went against him, he would carry on his eboulder a seck of flour and keep step to the tune of "Old John Brown," played by e fife and drum bend trelling after him, the line of merch being from one side of the town to the other. Herrick egreed to do the same thing if the question was decided contrary to his hopes, only the bend wes to play "Dixie." There was e deal of wer time feeling mixed up in the matter.

Gridley's side lost out and so there wes n time eet for him to pay his election bet.



After he had delivered the goods, Gridley et once offered to buy the flour beck for $25 end Herrick at once took him up. At this point Mr. Armstrong, who et that time wes a citizen of the place, offered to give $20 for the trophy, telling in with Herrick's proposition to turn the money over to the fund of the United States Sanitary commission. This was the stert of the movement that ultimetely eaded in swelling the cheritable fund to $1,000,000 throughout the country.

Unitarian Church at Taunton, Mass., Marks Scene of an Early Treaty With Redskins.

colonists, was broken 13 years later, when, provoked by the encroachments of the whites, he devastated the New England settlements, finelly meeting his own death at the hands of a faithless Indian in 1676. It is a significant fect, however, that Taunton, which was originally known by the Indian name of Cohannet, was spered the horrowing details of the war, but whether it was because of the treaty or because of the fact thet the town with its surroundings had been the special hunting ground of King Philip, we have never known.

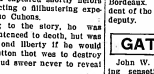
Spy Says American Blew Up the Maine

WASHINGTON.—The United States government has investigated a report to the effect that the Maine was blown up in Havana harbor by an American who had been condemned to death by the Spanish, but won his freedom by destroying the American warship. The spy who turned the story into the secret service bureau at Washington, asserted that George H. Boynton, a "soldier of fortune" who died recently, was the man who actually blew up the Maine. Horace Smith, biographer of Boynton, declares the story is false and he can prove Boynton was in Venezuela at the time of the explosion.

"The Spaniards," said the informer to Chief White of the secret service, "were entirely unprepared for the visit of the Maine, which was sent to Havana suddenly and without warning. Consequently there was no mine attached to the buoy of which she was moored.



"Captain General Blanco and his staff did not relish having a hostile warship in such an advantageous position in the event of war with the United States, which they then regarded as at least a possibility, and it was decided to blow her up, under such conditions as might make it appear she had been destroyed by an accidental explosion of her own magazines. A large boiler from the navy yard was taken to the arsenal and filled with powder. It was provided with a mechanism by which it would be exploded by electricity and then hermetically sealed.

"The boiler was lashed in a sling under a lighter, which was towed across the bay of the Maine at night. When the lighter was directly in front of the battleship the lines which held the boiler were cut, and it dropped into the mud.

"The Spaniards then fixed on Boynton as the person to set off the mine. He had been captured shortly before while conducting a filibustering expedition for the Cubans.

"According to the story, he was tried and sentenced to death, but was offered life and liberty if he would press the button that was to destroy the Maine, and swear never to reveal the secret."

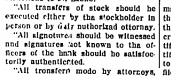
Warns Banks Against Lax Operations

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY MURRAY has been strolling through some of the national banks and glancing over their stock ledgers. As result, the banks must do a little better housekeeping.

In one case the controller spent a whole day with one of the national bank examiners in a bank in a middle west city and personally balanced the stock certificate book, and although this book bore the initials of several examiners as evidence that at different times it had passed through their hands, he found in the book that some of the certificates bore no indorsements; some were indorsed, but the signatures were not witnessed; some were indorsed and witnessed, but were not canceled in any way.

As a result of the controller's investigation he issued the following instructions to all banks:

"All transfers of stock should be executed either by the stockholder in person or by duly authorized attorney.



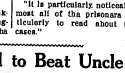
"All signatures should be witnessed and signatures not known to the officers of the bank should be satisfactorily authenticated.

"All transfers made by attorneys, administrators, executors, agents, guardians or trustees should be accompanied by evidence of their authority to transfer, and all transfers from corporations, associations and societies must be executed by duly authorized officers only, and accompanied by evidence of authority to make the transfer.

"Transfers to or from minors should be made through their guardian and not directly to or from the minors.

"Surrendered certificates must be marked 'canceled' on their face, and the signatures of the bank's officers thereon either cut or punched out, or the certificate book is used, the canceled certificates should be securely attached to the stubs; otherwise they should be filed and carefully preserved."

Capital Prisoners May Read Papers



"WITHOUT newspapers prisoners in any institution are almost unmanageable. They get nervous and are always wondering what is going on in the outside world. They do not keep their minds on the things they are doing and make poor workmen. Give them newspapers and they seem to feel that they are in touch with the world and are partly content."

This statement by Louis F. Zinkham, superintendent of the Washington asylum, to the comptroller of the currency, has led to the comptroller authorizing the payment by the government for newspapers for the inmates of the asylum. In the future prisoners at the asylum will have the pleasure of reading both morning and evening papers.

Ever since he took charge of the Washington asylum, Superintendent Zinkhom has noticed that inmates made great efforts to have newspapers smuggled into them. Some of them could go without tobacco and other things they were accustomed to, but all made constant demands for news from the outside world. Often he caught inmates having outsiders bringing them papers.

"It is particularly noticeable that almost all of the prisoners went particularly to read about their own cases."

Dressmakers Tried to Beat Uncle Sam

THROUGH the espionage on dressmakers maintained by special treasury agents with the co-operation of Collector Loeb and Surveyor Henry, a now scheme for defrauding the government of customs duties has been uncovered and checked, resulting in the saving to the treasury of on amount, it is estimated in Washington, between $75,000 and $100,000.

Included in this sum to be covered into the treasury through the watchfulness of cogin eyed special agents is a $10,000 consignment of women's wearing apparel shipped from Paris to shopkeepers in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston which has been ordered seized.

The American dressmaker would pay in Paris one-fourth or one-third cash and take a bill which on the face of it was the bill for the entire amount paid for model gowns and trimmings.

The French dealer would send this "short bill" to the American consulate for certification, and the dressmaker upon her arrival here would show the consular invoice to the appraiser on the pier, with the design of having it approved and her goods assessed on only the feeo value of the invoice.

Later on the Paris merchant would mail to the American modiste a genuine bill for the goods, in order that the customer who ordered imported gowns and finery might pay a substantial profit upon the real cost of the dress goods.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

VICTIM OF AIRSHIP WRECK

He is a lawyer and was for many years an advocate in the court of appeal at Bordeaux. He was minister of justice from 1899 to 1902, has been vice-president of the senate, where he sits as senator of the Gironde, and was a former deputy.

That was a terrible accident which happened in France, when a runaway aeroplane plunged into a crowd of spectators gathered to witness the start of the Paris to Madrid race for heavier than air machines, killing Adolphe of War Berteaux, severely injuring Premier Monis, and quite badly wounding several others.

Premier Monis, whose portrait is shown here, was hurled beneath the wreckage of the monoplane. He was taken out as quickly as possible, and examined by military surgeons, who found that he had suffered compound fractures of two bones in the right leg, that his nose was broken, his face badly contused, and that there were bruises on the breast and abdomen.

Antolna Ernest Emmanuel Monis, premier and minister of the interior in France, who came into power on the fall of the Briand regime on March 1 this year, was born at Chateauneufsur-Charente (Charente),

GATES TELLS TRUST SECRETS

John W. Gates furnished the opening sensation in the investigation when he revealed the history of the United States Steel corporation. President at the birth of the greatest steel manufacturing concern in the world, he described how it was the natural outcome of what he described as the refusal of Andrew Carnegie to be bound by the "gentlemen's agreements" that marked the early day of open competition in the steel business.

He told of millions lost and created almost in a breath; how the Carnegie mills, appraised at $160,000,000, were recognized as worth $220,000,000; the grim clash in the formative days, when John D. Rockefeller was disuaded from joining in the creation of the corporation, and the manner in which others were prevented from engaging in the steel trade.

Relating how Carnegie had been forced to abandon plans for extending his steel business, Gates frankly admitted the gigantic industrial combination was formed to throttle competition, and he surprised the committee with the further information that when John D. Rockefeller had sought to enter the steel business a deal had been put through by which the Standard Oil magnate was forced to sell out for 40 cents on the dollar.

MEXICO'S NEW AMBASSADOR

* Senor Da la Barra's successor in Washington is Senor Zamacona, whose father was minister to the United States from 1876 to 1882. During the father's tenure of office the son lived with him in Washington, so that our government and the ways of things of our capital are familiar to the new minister. Zamacona is about forty-five years of age and for the past two years has been Mexico's financial representative in London. Previous to this he served as director of the international revenue of Mexico and also represented the Mexican government's interests in the Mexican Central railroad. He is a man of brains; if he has discretion in equal quantity he will prove an acceptable successor to Da la Barra.

Senor de la Barra proved himself a gifted and altogether welcome representative of Mexico in Washington, doing much to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries. He is an advanced thinker, thoroughly in sympathy with the advancement of civilization and the growth of popular government.

His worth was recognized when President Diaz, forced by the gathering strength of the rebellion, called him from Washington to become one of his

HEAD OF A BIG EXPOSITION

Charles C. Moore of San Francisco has been unanimously chosen by the board of directors of the Panama-Pacific international exposition company as the active as well as the formal head of the 1915 exposition. The question of executive leadership has been settled finally. There will be no director general of the Panama-Pacific exposition. Moore, as president, will combine the functions which have been divided in all previous world's expositions between a president and a director general.

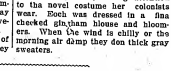
The board of directors of the exposition has adopted a complete plan of organization, differing in its essential features from that of any exposition that ever has been held. The 1915 fair is to be conducted as a business proposition, organized upon the lines of a great business corporation. Moore, as executive head of the exposition, will be the one man upon whom will rest the burden of responsibility for carrying out every detail of exposition management. The appointment of all exposition officials and department heads will devolve upon him and to him every department chief will be responsible.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Real Maud Mullers Now Raking Hay

NEW YORK.—Maud Muller, who "on a summer's day raked the meadow sweet with hay," hasn't anything on the band of 16 clear-eyed, smiling, militant suffragettes ranging from seventeen to twenty-four years of age, who are working in the fields of the farm of Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont on her Brookholt estate at Hempstead, L. I.

The "farmers" are former shop girls, factory hands and stenographers who have abandoned the conventional shirtwaist and black skirt for the more comfortable sweater and overalls. Some prefer to wear the bloomer skirt, but all are attired in a way that gives perfect freedom of movement and full play to arm and limb.



Many of the little band were pale of face and slight of muscles when they began their farm life, but even now they have become ruddy of cheek and their lips are as red as a cherry.

After a two months' trial of these feminine farm hands Mrs. Belmont firmly believes that the work is suited to women and woman suited to the work, and that there is no reason in the world why normal girls should continue to slave in sweatshops and factories and grow pale and wan when they can blossom into splendid womanhood by taking up a pleasant outdoor life which is educational, healthful and remunerative.

The novel suffrage colony is the only one of its kind and has been carefully guarded from the inquisitive eyes of the intruder since its head farmer, a Pennsylvania Quakeress, was placed in charge.

"You can't dig in the ground, do men's work and wear skirts," Mrs. Belmont explained, calling attention to the novel costume her colonists wore. Each was dressed in a fine checked gingham blouse and bloomers. When the wind is chilly or the morning air damp they don thick gray sweaters.

Gift Snake Ousts City Flat Dwellers

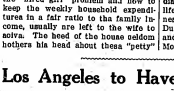
CHICAGO.—C. A. Hartwell, manager of the Hempden apartments at Thirty-ninth street and Langley avenue, found out the other day why he has been having so much trouble keeping tenants in the building. Hartwell had the notion from his experiences of the last two months that all the persons who moved into his place were "seeing things." What they really had been seeing was a large, phosphorescent eyed, pleasant looking snake—a "king" snake from Louisiana, which has been using the Hampden apartments as a happy hunting ground.

Hartwell had just filled up his building with the choicest assortment of tenants he had been for a long time. But one day one of the tenants dropped into his office.

"Mr. Hartwell," he said, "I guess I'll move."

Less than a week later another gift edged tenant dropped in on Mr. Hartwell. He also looked pale. And he moved.

For two months this kept up. Hartwell's hair was growing gray. Half the tenants had moved out and the other half were going about the building like persons in the early stages of insanity, screeming out suddenly in the night and dodging perfectly innocent looking things in the daytime.



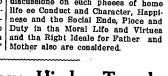
Hartwell couldn't find out what was the matter.

Well, this was what was really happening: When Hartwell had filled the Hampden with tenants, Snake, named T. Knight, who runs the drug store in the ground floor of the building, got as a present from a friend in Louisiana a four-foot "king" constrictor.

Knight put the "king" snake into a box with a half dozen live mice. One of the mice gnawed a hole in the box.

Knight missed his snake the next day, but he didn't dare to say anything about it. He hoped Mr. Snake would come back. In the meantime Mr. Snake was having the time of his life in the Hompden corridors.

Kansas Boys Studying Home Problems



LAWRENCE, KAN.—The growing importance of dealing adequately with problems of the home, and especially with the "men in the home," has led to the introduction of a new course of study—The Family—at the University of Kansas.

Such momentous questions as how to deal with the spoiled child, domestic hygiene, education in the home, the "hired girl" problem and how to keep the weekly household expenditures in a fair ratio to the family income, only are left to the wife to solve. The head of the home seldom bothers his head about these "petty" affairs. Indeed, it may be said that it has been beneath his traditional dignity to concern himself in such matters. This precedent has broken at K. U., however, and this semester nine boys out of a class of 23 are getting a little of the theory, if not of the actual practice, in the conduct of "The Family."

Each member of the class is given a certain subject for reference work. The reports are read before all members of the class. Some of the topics assigned were: "Household Economy," "Domestic Hygiene," "Causes of Race Suicide," "Family Expenditures," "The Care of the Child," and "Higher Education for Women." Lectures and discussions on each phases of home life or Conduct and Character, Happiness and the Social Ende, Piece and Duty in the Moral Life and Virtues and the Right Ideals for Father and Mother also are considered.

Los Angeles to Have Hindoo Temple

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—Swami Bala Premanender Bharati, a celebrated Hindoo ascetic philosopher, whose teachings created great interest when he was in America three years ago, has arrived here to superintend the work of construction of a great Hindoo temple to be built, the Swami declares, entirely from contributions made by devout Hindoos in India.

Before he foreook the world for an ascetic life tha Swami was editor of the Lahore Tribune, at the same time Rudyard Kipling was an associate editor of tha Civil and Military Gazette.

"I knew Rudyard well," said the Hindoo. "And while I have greatly enjoyed his books, he has never been able to write of the actual life of India, for he never knew it. His description of tha country—tha colors are beautiful, but he is lacking in the spiritual understanding—the inner life—of India."

Concerning the temple here where the real spiritual and religion of India will be taught, the Swami says he has procured the grounde and that enthusiasm in India omong the five million converts is so great that tha proposed edifice will be one of the most beautiful in the world. Nearly $100,000 already has been raised.

In personal appearance tha Swami is most impressive. He is a very big man and his head is covered with long black hair, slightly tinged with gray. He has deep black eyes and a massive face. He wears a long khaki covered roha and American mada shoes.

"At home, when I wander from province to province, I go without shoes and wear a cloth about my body, while my arms and shoulders are bare," he said.

LIARS' LITERATURE.

There must be a contest on for story telling, for the reading public are being handed some "lemons" unawares, or, if there isn't, the strangest things ever are happening. The lamppost that wabbled was just plain, simpin drunk, we know about that, but we won't say any more, says the New Orleans Picayune. Then the Plymouth Rock hen and the cold-storage affair, too, made us sit up and take notice, but now comes into court a North Yakima farmer and he tells this without even blushing. He says he fired into a flock of geese and brought down two. He had also cast off the Yakima river bank a fishing line with several hooks on it, so he could hunt and fish at the same time. You know these Yakima farmers are deucedly clever. He was surprised to see another goose rise in the air again and again, only to fall in the ground. Upon investigation he discovered that the goose was caught on a set line nearly 500 feet long with 50 hooks set at intervals. A section of the line was on the land and the geese had swallowed one of the baits. Following up the line he found it down a hole under a stump. Pulling on the line, he dragged out a snarling, snapping otter and an 18-pound Gaelman carp. It's nearly time for some coon to tell how a diamond necklace was got out of a "lobster," and then school can quit.

A French paper is conducting a voting contest for the purpose of deciding what in the opinion of a majority of its readers are the virtues most to be desired in women. Each reader is requested to name ten virtues. So far sixty virtues have been named. The first seven have always been at the top of the list since the beginning of the ballot, in the following order: Goodness, orderliness, devotion, thrift, gentleness, intelligence and amiability. It is noted that wit never comes twenty-fourth in the list, which is a long way down, considering that devotion is third, and which indicates that not a few of the voters are men. However, the virtue of meekness is the sixtieth and last in the list, and has received only 36 votes, while the votes for the first three in the list ranged between 17,000 and 19,000.

Atlantic City is getting very moral. Not content with regulating bathing suits, the solons have now decreed that no oyster may go through the streets without having all its shell on. It seems, however, that waiters have been carrying the luscious bivalve in the open exposed to various germs; and the provision of the health authorities is to be regarded as a sanitary precaution and not another act of prudery.

Ohio has more colleges than any other state. It requires special endeavor to raise one institution into fame above its rivals, when so many exist. The boys of West Lafayette college achieved this distinction by putting oil into the milk of the girls' dormitory. Twenty girls were made violently ill. Soma day civilization will be so general that it will exist even among college students.

One man asserts that blondes are going out of fashion and that big feet for women are coming in. The critics of the sex will immediately seize upon these facts, especially the latter, to prove that women are walking too much over tradition and conservatism in their campaign for more rights, thus sacrificing fair complexion and small feet.

Dr. Wiley, the government authority on pure foods, makes a doleful indictment of the American people. He says we eat too much, drink too much, work too much, sleep too much, load too much and take medicine too much. Would the doctor admit that some of us talk too much? If so, could he do it without a self-conscious blush?

Strange, isn't it, how the tired business man will perk up and take a brighter view of life in the afternoon as the hands of the clock approach the hour of three—that is, when it is not raining and the baseball team is in town.

GEORGE V. CROWNED KING OF ENGLAND

Westminster Abbey, Filled with Brilliant Throng, Is Scene of the Great Pageant—Royal Progress from Buckingham Palace Delights the Populace.

London.—That magnificent spectacle which the entire British empire has been looking forward to for months, the coronation of King George V. and Queen Mary, was staged in Westminster Abbey on Thursday. Seven thousand persons witnessed the stately ceremony and as the Archbishop of Canterbury placed the crown of St. Edward on the head of the ruler they all rose to their feet with loud cries of "Long live King George." At the same instant the great guns of the Tower of London boomed out, and the populace without the abbey repeated the greeting to their monarch until it became a tremendous roar that spread all over the mighty city.

Great Throngs in the Streets.

From the earliest hours of the morning the population of London and the hundreds of thousands of visitors had been moving toward the royal route from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey. As soon as the seats in the numerous stands were filled, gates were closed that kept out the rabble, and then the throngs tried to crowd into the streets adjoining the route. From pole to pole throughout the entire distance gay colored bunting was strung, and the whole city was streaming with flags.

Along the Mall and all thu way from the palace to thn abbey troops were standing, company upon company. British troops of every shade of color, living examples of the countries and peoples over which the new king and emperor reigns. On every side bands were playing patriotic music, and the din of cheering wes continuous and overwhelming.

Procession From the Palace.

As the hour for the coronation approached thn waiting thousands first saw the arrival of the gentlemen appointed to act as ushers during the ceremony. These were led by the earl marshal, the duke of Norfolk. Then thn nobility notified to seats in thn Abhey began to come. Most of the peers and peeresses rods in state coaches that have been used by their families for many years. These carriages, repainted and regilded. were drawn by four horsee apiece. Each was accompanied by ontriders and footmen in gorgeous livarlee stood on the rail behind. Each peer as he passed was greeted with cheers and often with familiar greetings that set thn crowds off in roars of laughter, for nven the solemnity of the occasion could not restrain thn irreverent humor of the cocknsys.

For all the nobility rods in coaches, however, for the king had permitted one violation of precedent and given permission for the use of automobiles by those who have attended hnrsas. Tale was donn reluctantly, and there were not many motors care in the long procession of vehicles.

The lord meyor and his suite, in their gorgeous robes and regalia, were the next to pass toward the Abbey.

King and Queen Appear.

Now the bells of many churches pealed out, and thn people knew thn king and queen were coming. From thn moment their majesties emerged from Buckingham palace there wee a continuous roar of cheers that accompanied them all the wny to the Abbey. Their approach wes heralded by the king's hargemaster and twelve watermen, wearing quaint medieval tunics, knee breeches and stockings, all scarlet, with the crown and hedges emblazoned in gold on their breasts, and wearing low buckled shoes and black velvet caps. Immediately behind these came the closed carriages of the royal party, every one drawn by splendid horses gorgeously caparisoned. Through thn windows of thn great lumbering state coach the people could get a glimpse of the king and queen.

Following their majestiee rode the household troops and especially picked military bodies. Field Marshal Viscount Kitchener wee at the head of the headquerters staff, as he was at the coronation of Khe Edward. In this part of the procession, too, rode the Indian princes and maharajahs and potentates of England's widely scattered dominions. Their gorgeous robes glittered with jewels and added much to thn magnificence of tha parade. But the man who, next to thn king, received the loudest and wermest applause was Lord Roberts, for the people love "Bobs" and their affectionate greetings almost made the grizzled hero of a hundred campaigne blush.

Arrival at thn Abbey.

Waiting outside the west door of Westminster Abbey were the archbishops of Canterbury end York and a lerge number of bishops, and when thn king and queen approached they first entered tha church, followed immediately by the Prince of Wales and his suite. As the monarchs passed in to thn nbbey thn choir sang an anthem. Their majesties moved through the choir to the theater and after kneeling in prayer, seated themselves in the chairs of state.

The first action of the coronation service, the presentation of the king to the people for recognition, is a survival of ancient Teutonic usage. Accompanied by the great officers of state, the archbishop of Canterbury went to each side of the theater in turn, saying: "Sirs, I here present unto you King George, the undoubted king of this realm; wharefore, all you who are come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?" The king meanwhile stood up by his chair and turned to each side, and the people acclaimed him with cries of "God save King George."

Then followed the litany, the communion service and a short sermon preached by the archbishop of York, after which the oath was administered to the king by the archbishop of Canterbury.

The Anointing and Coronation.

King George now was divested of his crimson robes by the lord great chumberlain and seated himself in the chair of King Edward I., which contains the ancient "stone of destiny." Tha dean of Westminster brought from the altar the golden ampulla and spoon, and tha archbishop anointed him on thn head, the breasts and the palms of both hands, and blessed him. The king was next invested with thn colobium sindonis of fine linen and tha cupertunica of cloth of gold, his hosie were touched with the golden spurs and the sword of state was girded upon him, after which the armill and robe royal of cloth of gold ware put upon him. In turn, than, his majesty was given the orb, thn king's ring, the glove and the two sceptors.

All ware ready now for the supreme act. The archbishop placed St. Edward's crown upon the king's head and livered a short prayar, and then, supported by the other clergy, placed the crown upon the king's head. At that instant the trumpeze soundnd, the congregation shouted "Long live King George" and thn peers and kings of arms put on their coronats.

Then thn archbishop wes a handeome part of tha ceremonies. The king was lifted up into his throna by the archbishops, the bishops and certain peers, and all tha great officers and those who bore the swords, the sceptres and other regalia grouped themselves about tha stage of the throne. Next the princes and peers did their homage, led by the archbishop of Canterbury and the prince of Wales. Each of these and the pramier duke, marquis, earl, viscount and baron kissed the king upon the cheek.

The anointing and crowning of Queen Mary came a short and simple ceremony. Following tha example of Queen Alexandra, she was anointed on the head only. Sha was invested with tha ring, was crowned by the archbishop of York and received the scepter and tha ivory rod with the dove.

Few American in the Abbey.

Of all the Americans who have been attracted to London by the festivities of the coronation season, only a very few were admitted to the Abbey. These included President Taft's especial ambassador, John Hays Hammond, and Mrs. Hammond; Maj. Gen. Gresly and Rear Admiral Vreeland, representing the army and navy, and tha latter's secretary; Ambassador Whitelaw Reid and Mrs. Reid and the attaches and secretaries of the embassy, Pierpont Morgan and less than a score of American women who married English peers.

One fact connected with the coronation was the subject of some amused comment. This was that King George, who is quita the reverse of a giant, had selected four of the shortest knights of the garter to hold the golden canopy over him during the anointing.

CONSPIRACY IS CHARGED AGAINST CASS LAKE MAYOR

EXECUTIVE RELEASED ON $5,000 BAIL AFTER EXAMINATION—HEARING SET FOR JUNE 28 IN BEMIDJI.

ACCUSED OF COMPLICITY IN ARSON AND ROBBERY

Accused As Leader of Gang of Desperadoes Who Are Wanted for Many Crimes in Northern Minnesota. —Has Borne an Excellent Reputation Heretofore.

Bemidji, Minn.—Dr. D. T. Dumas held up by Pinkerton detectives as the "king of American crooks," arrested at Hibbing and brought hers as the result of a trap laid for two of his alleged confederates who were shot and seriously wounded as they were about to blow the postoffice safe at Puposky, is free to continue his duties as meyor of Cass Leks.

Dr. Dumas was arreigned here before Court Commissioner Simons and after brief examination was held on bonds of $5,000, which were furnished by two Cass Lake merchants and a saloonkeeper of that place, and Dumas was turned loose. He has employed former District Judge Marshall A. Spooner and A. A. Andrews of this city as his attorneys. Judge Spooner is the lawyer who succeeded in having the Indian Treaty lid removed from the part of the state under which "Pussyfoot" Johnson hed closed nil ecloons. Dumas' hearing was set for June 28 before Commissioner Simons hare.

Dr. Dumas expressed extreme indignation at having been made the target of such sensational charges and saids from a general denlet of guilt refuses to comment.

Indignation Called Sham.

"Dr. Dumas' indignation appears likn a sham to us, with all thn avidences we have at our command," is the only comment of Superintendent Fielding in charga of the Pinkerton men hers.

The office of Dr. Dumes et Cass Lake was searched on the authority of a search warrent issued by Judge Ives of that lodge, by Deputy Sheriff Matt Kennedy. Tha detectives declare that papers were found furnishing additional incriminating evidence.

Superintendent S. T. Fielding, of tha St. Paul Pinkerton branch, Assistant State Fira Marshal Sam Fullerton and other detectives and officers, opened Dr. Dumas' safe, in his presence, at his office in Cass Lake and found six sticks of dynamite and four dynamite caps. Dr. Dumas, at liberty on bail, who hastened from the home of a patient, to give up the combination of the safe, to that an expert could be arrived from St. Paul would not have to blow it, joked at the discovery.

"If worst is yet to come," was his comment.

Pinkerton detectives heva a stenographic report of what they declare to be exact conversetion taken by a Pinkerton stenographer of plens given the two robbers in the John Larson saloon hers by Mayor Dumes of the Puposky roshery. Whila Dumes was talking his lieutenants what to do, a detective, it is claimed, was concealed within hearing distance, taking notes, other witnesses are said to have been present.

It is said that there were not less then four aya witnesses to the conference in the John Larson seloon hera between Dumes and his alleged aids. It had been arranged, according to the detectives' story, that after the robbery the robbers were to take the stampe and money from the postoffice in a valise to the nearest point on the Minneapolis & International railroad, Turtle River, 18 milee north of Bemidji; that they were to proceed to Cass Lake on the Great Northern, and that they were to hs met in Cass Lake by Dr. Dumas, to whom they were to give the stamps and other booty and to receiva in return $300.

Dr. Dumas, grandeon of the University of Minnesota, and the son of a wealthy citizen of Minneapolis who, like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky has become a mas'or mystery, as invantor of a particularly deadly explosive liquid obtained by dynamite, and who meet enewer charges of crimes covering incendiarism, insurance swindles and shows all the cleverest conceived safa crackings with which the police have had to contend with for a long time, declares he has no intention of resigning his position as chief executive of Cass Lake.

Looks for Vindication.

His bellwms ble home paopla are with him, and that he will he vindicated. In the meantime that part of thn thrilling narrative, involving the alleged duplicity of a prominant man, which relates to the dramatic events of the attempted robbery at Pupoeky, allegnd to hava hean planned by Mayor Dumas, more in the spirit of revynga against the postmaster and marchant, said to he an old enamy, than for the of money, is not without its graphic incidante.

Bean, one of the robbers caught in the act by Detective Fielding and Sheriff F. Hazen on the result of information furnished by Assistant State Fire Marshal Sam Fullerton, is in the Beltrami county jail suffering from painful but not serious gunshot wounds received in the battle between the officers and bandits at Pupoeky.

Active in Many Crimes.

Mike Devia, the wounded robber who escaped, is said by the detectives to be not only a Chicago murderer, but that he hee been the active principal'n many holdupe in different parts of the country and that he was now connected him with tha Lake Minnetonka affairs as well as the recent Sheetin stampt.

Twice before the seme building at Pupoeky hae been broken into, the first time two years ago, when the safa was blown open by three men who came to Bemidji on a railroad velocipeda and "rode" out at the Red Lake bridge, north of town, by Sheriff Hazen, Deputy Sheriff Andrew Johnson and A. L. Bennett, who at thet time was a member of the Bemidji police force. When ordered to halt, the robbers opened fire, Johnson being objciously wounded, while a return volley from the officers killed Sven Johnson, while the other bandits eecaped.

Dr. Dumes came to Bemidji Wednesday, the detectives sleepe, and had a consultation with a party of professional robbers, including Devis and Bean, and two others, and it was at this meeting thet the details of the robbery at Pupoeky were worked out.

Mora arreats as the result of the apprehension of Dumes in positions high in the business world of Minneapolis, Bemidji and Cass Lake are promised by those behind the present movement. The warrant on which Dr. Dumne wee arreigned was sworn out by Assistant State Fire Marshal Fullerton and charges the mayor with wilfully, wrongfully, unlawfully, feloniously and maliciously attempting to set on fire and burn the frame building owned by R. E. Smith and occupied by the Pupoeky Mercantile company and the United States postoffice. The three Cass Lake men who charge the Dumes bond were C. M. Johnson, merchant; Albert Marshik, saloonkeeper, and Henry Mullen, Merchant.

When discovered the robbers drew automatic revolvers sending a volley of close quarters into the detectives and other officers of whom there were seven, but without effect.

The report from half a dozen shotguns wes the reply and one robber, Bean, fell in his tracks. He pal, Devie, eet twelve more batter from his revolver toward Fielding and hie men, but missed. Bean, whose legs were obetructed by the shot, was rushed to Bemidji on a speciel train, and was placed in jail.

Both Safecrackers.

Evidence is et hend showing thet both these men are expert safecrackers and they are charged with having been the men who blew the safe at Minnetonka several months ago; also the one at St. Cloud and the one at Sheviln, in Clearwater county, 20 miles south of here, six months ago. Devis, the man who is still at large, has been identified ee the men who shot and seriously wounded County Sheriff Andrew Johnson on Thanksgiving day, 1909. Both Davis and Bean are said to face charges of murder, the former for shooting a policeman in Chicago.

Tha strongest end most surprising part of the story is that part which relates to Mayor Dumae. The mayor of Cass Lake, whose father lives in Minneapolis, has been highly respected as a leading physician and faithful public official. During the time that "Pussyfoot" Johnson was attempting to close otl the saloons in the Indian reservation of the northern part of this state, in which Cass Lake is located, Mayor Dumae attained notoriety by defying the government that the property of the saloonkeepers of Cass Lake would be protected at the point of guns.

His organized the fire department into a sort of standing army, and as a result of his bold stand he was summoned to Washington end there, after a conference with Richard Bellinger, at that time secretary of the interior, the order for enforcing the Indian treaty provisions regarding the sale of liquor were suspended Mr. Dumas returned to Cass Lake, where he was received as "the man of the hour."

Accused as Ringleader.

Now he stands accused by detectivas of being the ringleader of the worst hind of robbers which the police of all cities west of Chicago have had to deal with. Not only is he said to have participated in councils of the safebreakers, but is said to have furnished the explosives, made by himself, with which to blow the safes.

FREED FROM SKIN DISEASE

"Our boy was born in Toronto on Oct. 13, 1908, and when three months old a slight rash appeared on his cheek. What appeared to be a water blister would form. When it broke, matter would run out, starting new blisters until his entire face, head and shoulders were a mass of scabs and you could not see a particle of clear skin. Other parts of his body were affected, but not to such an extent. We tried almost every advertised remedy without avail, indeed some of them only added to his suffering and one in particular, the — Remedy, almost put the infant into convulsions. The family doctor prescribed for him and told us to bathe the baby in buttermilk. This did not do any good, so we took him to a hospital. He was treated as an out-patient twice a week and he got worse, if anything. We then called in another doctor and inside of a week the boy was, to all appearances, cured and the doctor said his work was done. But the very next day it broke out as bad as ever.

"We decided that it could not be cured and must run its course and so we just kept his arms bandaged to his side to prevent his tearing his flesh. We left Toronto and shortly after our arrival in Duluth, the Cuticura Remedies were recommended. We started using them in May, 1909, and soon the cure was complete. You would not think he was the same child for Cuticura made his skin perfectly clear and he is entirely free from the skin disease. There has been no return this time. We still use only Cuticura Soap for baby's bath. Robert Munn, Proctor, Minn., May 3, 1910."

FREE ADVICE TO WOMEN

Women suffering from any form of illness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. No man can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established that confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of the generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it today.

The Girl in the Box

By CLARA A. CRADY

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

When Merritt, weary as a result of two extra hours of labor over retrospectory reports, emerged from the Metropole building he valiantly tried to ignore Baylock's frantic gesturings; but as well temporize with the day of doom as with Baylock, as Merritt's aching arm bore evidence.

"You are the fellow I want," roared his big captor triumphantly. "I want you to see the best show of the season. Come along."

And Merritt, as helpless as a cat in the claws of a mouse, was alternately pushed and pulled along toward the entrance of Baylock's theater.

"But I don't care to see a show—at least, not tonight," protested Merritt, feebly, trying with all a little man's horror of the ridiculous, to free himself.

"Nonsense. I'll guarantee that you will enjoy the show all right."

With the head usher looming ominously near, Merritt made a last desperate effort to free himself.

"Baylock, old man, I can't possibly go in. Don't you see, I'm not shaved an—"

His protest was cut short, as with a knife.

"Merritt you've got to sit in judgment on my new play, whiskers or no whiskers. You may be a fool in some ways, but as a critic your opinion is worth money to me; therefore I shall give you a seat in the first row."

"Orchestra seats are all taken, sir," murmured the head usher, deferentially.

Merritt shot a mildly triumphant glance in Baylock's direction. That gentleman grinned expansively.

"Show Mr. Merritt to a box seat," he ordered, and, chuckling audibly, Baylock disappeared into the box office.

Scorning further controversy, Merritt followed his guide to one of the lower boxes. He took his seat with the uncomfortable feeling that he was on exhibition. In his capacity as agent for a large industrial insurance company he had a speaking acquaintance with at least one-half the town and he could imagine the comments his appearance occasioned.

Another man might have relieved his mind by cursing the weather prophet whose false predictions had led Merritt to don his oldest and shabbiest suit that morning and, forgetting past favors in the shape of complimentary tickets, would probably have wound up cursing Baylock's propensity for securing his friends' opinion of every new play. But Merritt only writhed in the agonies of self-consciousness while the first act dragged through. With the fall of the curtain he would be able to slip out without attracting undue attention. The prospect was like one oasis in Merritt's desert of anguish.

But his humiliation was not yet complete. Even as his eyes were fixed with grim determination on the aisle he became painfully conscious of the stir caused by several late arrivals in the box. And almost immediately he recognized the voice of the girl he loved. Two weeks had passed since Amy had sent him from her presence and with scornful words forbidden him to return; but Merritt had not ceased to hope, and now, with the knowledge of her closeness, all thought of the dignity was lost in a nervous dread of what she would say.

"Amy," Merritt's acutely sensitive ears caught the low-spoken words in a voice which he recognized as belonging to Amy's cousin Nell. "I wonder what James Merritt is doing here, and in those clothes! I hope he has not taken to drink."

There was no answer in the voice, which Merritt at once knew and dreaded to hear. A facetious remark followed in a masculine tone that made him grit his teeth. Nell's brother-in-law, lately arrived from the West, had been the cause, albeit the unconscious one, of the quarrel, and the knowledge that he was in Amy's good graces while he, Merritt, sat an outcast scarcely three feet away did not tend to improve Merritt's state of mind.

When he entered the box Merritt had taken a seat on the side nearest the stage, consequently it was an easy matter to keep his back turned to the other occupants. He was fuming between a desire to go home and a grim resolution not to give the other man a clear field. At the end of the intermission, during which Merritt had committed his programme to memory, he tried once more to fix his attention on the stage. But the play was intolerably dull, and the hum of happy voices behind him tried his endurance to the limit. How could she sit there and exchange banter with that young fool? In an extremity a mouse has been known to show fight, and Merritt, although he was good natured, was far from mouselike. A sudden anger took possession of him. His turned, and the look he bent on Amy was as ferocious as his extremely mild blue eyes were capable of expressing. To his amazement she met it with a gracious nod of the head.

"I was wondering whether you would ever turn," she murmured softly, as she beckoned him to her side.

It was bewildering, but Merritt managed to retain his senses and to bow to Conain Nell and her brother-in-law as he made haste to take the chair which the latter had vacated to his favor.

"Oh, James!" Amy's tone expressed the deepest contrition. "I didn't think you cared so much."

Not knowing how much we meant, Merritt contented himself with gazing rapturously into Amy's eyes instead of making a verbal answer.

"No," reflectively, "I didn't think you would become desperate." And indeed only a girl in love would have suspected Merritt of such a thing.

"I—it hurts me dreadfully to see you in such a state," she finished tremulously.

"Well," Merritt conceded modestly, "I confess I was pretty wrathy, but I didn't know I showed it."

"Oh! I mean the other—" She paused uncertainly.

"Yes?" prompted Merritt encouragingly. "Never mind, dear," as she still hesitated. "It is enough for me that there was no ground for my jealousy of Bob, and to know that I am forgiven. But I wish our reconciliation had found me in more appropriate attire," with a comprehensive wave of his hand.

"James," Amy broke in, eagerly, "don't you know that it was your forlorn condition that first opened my eyes to the desperate state of your mind? Had you appeared sooner I would never have repented of my cruelty."

Merritt determined to withhold explanations; therefore, his only answer was a kiss.

She continued to eye him anxiously.

"Well, dearest?" he encouraged, softly.

"James," very timidly, "I am afraid you will be angry, but I won't feel safe unless you promise you will never again touch liquor.

Merritt gave the desired promise, but not without a secret qualm.

"And now, are you satisfied, dear?" he queried anxiously.

"Yes," breathed Amy happily. "But just the same we are never going to have another quarrel."

Use for Norway's Peat Moors.

The British consul at Christiania reports that the secretary of the Norwegian Peat Moor society in a recent lecture discussed the prospects of erecting large industrial establishments in the near future on Norwegian peat moors. He stated that the largest suitable peat areas in Norway were in the north, and cited instances of peat moors in Romsdalen (some 200,000 acres) mostly near the sea and suitable for the industry; and also large tracts in the Trondhjem district and in Nordland and Tromso prefectures.

Octopus Caught on Irish Coast.

A huge octopus was the unusual catch made in Irish waters a few days ago by a steam trawler. The monster's trunk measured over ten feet, twenty inches, and shooting out were two feelers and nine thick arms, the longest of which was four feet. The hideous creature was caught off the west coast of Ireland, and was evidently one of its latitude, being from foreign waters. It struck terror into the crew when brought up in the trawl. It will probably be sent to London for exhibition if it can be preserved.

Coal Production in France.

The cost of coal production in France is greater than in any other European country, with the possible exception of Belgium, and it is steadily increasing. The principal reason is that in spite of the introduction of modern machinery, the annual individual output has been falling off for a number of years.

Some Sound Reasoning.

"To be poor in a wealthy country, to be sick in a good climate, to be inefficient among a progressive people, is a sign of unwise educational methods. . . . They were not taught to battle with the world or meet life's emergencies."

POULTRY

BROWN LEGHORN IS SUPERIOR

Has Ability to Convert Larger Quantity of Waste Food Into Eggs Than Any Other Bird.

Whoever wants a dainty fowl beautifully colored, a good forager and a great layer can very easily love the Brown Leghorn, says the Poultry Journal. Like its cousins the White, the Black and various other varieties of the Leghorn family, this fowl has the ability to convert a larger quantity of waste food into a larger number of eggs of large size than perhaps any other breed of fowls. It is eminently the fowl for the man who wants large numbers of white-shelled eggs and who does not want to be bothered with hens that he needs must sit every now and then.

well set in the ground—two or more lathe according to the length of the tank.

TO BUILD FATTENING CRATE

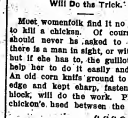
Usually Divided into Three Compartments, Holding From Four to Six Birds.

Fattening crates are usually made six feet long, 18 to 20 inches high and 18 inches wide. The crate is divided into three compartments, each holding from four to six birds, according to the size of the chicken. The crate is made in sections usually one and a half inches wide by five-eighths inch thick. Those in front are pieced two inches apart to allow the birds to put their heads through for feeding. The slats on the bottom are pieced three fourths of an inch apart allowing the dropping to go through. Care should be taken not to have the first bottom slat at the back it too closely against the back, or the droppings will collect and decompose. The slats on the bottom should be one inch by one-half inch, and run lengthwise of the crate. The slats on the back and top are usually two inches apart. A frame is made of one and one-half inch by one inch.

Very fair coops may be made from old packing boxes by taking off the front and bottom and substituting slats in their places. During warm weather these crates may be placed out of doors.

Good Hatches.

A very important item in getting good hatches is to thoroughly test out the infertile eggs. Excellent egg testers will be unnecessary as to use, are furnished with most incubators. These testers can be placed on an ordinary lamp, and the eggs are best tested at night when the room is dark. Consider the sixth day of incubation the time for the first testing. A novice writer in an exchange. A good, strong germ has the appearance of a spider in the egg. A blood circle adhering to the shell denotes a dead germ; a perfectly clear, as well as a cloudy, egg, is infertile, and should be removed from the incubator. These discarded eggs can be saved and boiled to feed to young chicks or they may be used for cooking purposes. I have always found it a good plan to retest the eggs again about the fourteenth day, and while some do not think this really necessary, I think it a good plan.



Oats for Hens.

A bundle of unthreshed wheat or oats is a good thing for the hens to work over.

GUILLOTINE FOR THE HENS

Work of Killing Chickens by Womenfolk Made Easy—Old Corn Knife Will Do the Trick.

Most womenfolk find it no easy job to kill a chicken. Of course these should never be asked to do it if there is a man in sight, or within call, but if she has to, the guillotine will help her to do it easily and neatly. An old corn knife is ground to a sharp edge and kept sharp, fastened to a block, will do the work. Place the chicken's head between the spikes, hold the tips of the wings and legs together in one hand, so it cannot flop about, draw it tight, and the knife will do the rest in a twinkling.

SUMMER FEED FOR POULTRY

Chickens May Be Turned Into Garden With Profit Except at Certain Periods—Eat Many Bugs.

Lettuce is a good feed for poultry, and a bed of it should be started early for the purpose of giving the fowls a supply of green stuff. The fowls like it best if they can pull it from the stem as it stands in the bed. Cutting up the lettuce and feeding it in the yard is wasteful, as the fowls eat little of it when fed in that way.

Rape is a good plant to grow for the fowls. The seeds are quite large and so germinate easily. If the fowls have stripped one part of the poultry yard of grass, that part can be fenced off and rape seed sown on it. The fowls like the stems and veins, even if the soil is not dug up. The fowls should be turned into it when it has reached a height of about one foot. They will strip the sides off the leaf and leave the stems and mid-veins. As soon as the poultry are taken out of the yard for a time, the plants will begin to push out new growth from the stems and mid-veins, and this process can be continued all summer.

There is a saying that hens and gardens do not go well together. This is a mistake; the hens can be turned into the garden with profit to themselves and the garden except during certain periods. One of these is just after the seeds have been planted and are coming up. At such a time the hens will do much damage by scratching. Another time when they must be excluded from the garden is when the tomatoes are ripe, as they will pick them. After the plants in the spring have become thoroughly established, the hens can safely be turned in. The more they scratch the better it is for the plants. They also help to keep the plants free from bugs.

The farmer cannot afford to keep his poultry shut up in summer, except during short periods, as mentioned above. The great advantage the farmer has over the city and village poultry raiser is that he can make his poultry work for him. The bug population of every farm is very great, and this population is drawn upon by the fowls.

Scaly Legs.

If any of the fowls show scaly legs the best remedy is kerosene mixed with lard and sulphur. Apply it warm with a brush at intervals of a week apart. Then, since this trouble is caused by parasites upon the perches, see to it that the roosts are thoroughly swabbed off in kerosene.

POULTRY NOTES

Sunshine and cleanliness are the best medicine.

These are gala days for lice. Fight them strong and hard.

But do not forget that shade is sometimes necessary in the hot days.

Kerosene will do deadly work. Pour it in every crack and crevice. Don't spare it.

Watch the grit box. The hens are doing so. Don't let them catch you napping and the box empty.

The keeping of the flock free from disease is the first great factor in the line of requisites for success.

The waste of grain on every farm is great; but a good flock of hens will use much of it and turn it into meat and eggs.

Be sure that the drinking fountain is kept in a cool place and renewed as frequently as you would like for your own drinking.

It is almost a waste of time on your part as well as that of the hen to feed her in a nest and in a house infested with vermin.

The poultry raiser who is too lazy to keep his poultry house absolutely free from vermin does not deserve success nor will he have it.

Allow the cool air to enter the houses at night by taking out the windows, but do not forget to have inch-mesh wire netting fastened to the opening to keep out the enemies.

Watch the condition of the young chickens. If they are moping, look for lice, especially the large gray louse found on the head of the chick.

A drop of sweet-oil will soon end his career.

Historic Event Celebrated.

Australia recently commemorated the one hundred and forty-first anniversary of Captain Cook's first landing. It was in 1770 that H. M. S. Endeavor, a barque of 370 tons, entered the inlet first called Sting Rays Harbor, but afterwards Botany Bay, from the beauty and variety of the plants growing about its shore. The vessel remained eight days, and before she left the British flag was hoisted. As in the custom on each recurring anniversary, the flag was again unfurled upon the spot where it was first displayed, and was saluted by the guns of the warships in the harbor.

WANTED TO SLEEP

Curious That a Tired Preacher Should Have Such Desire.

A minister speaks of the curious effect of Grape-Nuts food on him and how it has relieved him.

"You will doubtless understand how the suffering from indigestion with which I used to be troubled made my work an almost unendurable burden; and why it was that after my Sabbath duties had been performed, sleep was the one thing to my pillow till nearly daylight.

"I had to be very careful as to what I ate, and even with all my care I experienced poignant physical distrase after meals, and my food never satisfied me.

"Since I began the use of Grape-Nuts the benefits I have derived from it are very definite, I no longer suffer from indigestion, and I began to improve from the time Grape-Nuts appeared on our table.

"I find that by eating a dish of this food after my Sabbath work is done, (and I always do so now) my nerves are quieted and rest and refreshing sleep are ensured me.

"I feel that I could not possibly do without Grape-Nuts food, now that I know its value. It is inevitably on our table—we feel that we need it to make the most complete and our children will eat Grape-Nuts when they cannot be persuaded to touch anything else" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Superintendent of schools, Mosure postponed his speech at Erie regarding consolidation of schools at that place, and it will be good politicts for him to indefinatly postpone it.

We could not dig one of them drainage ditches, anymore than some of the present contractors can, but we have got sense enough to know it, and not stick our nose into something that we can't do.

January 1st, 1912, the time is out for the completion of ditch No. 47, and on January 2nd, an action will be brought against the Contractors and Bondsmen for damage, as we propose to test the matter and see, if the farmers, who pay the taxes have any rights, or not.

Dan Lawler will enter the race for U.S. Senator against Senator Knute Nelson. This will be the second race between these two men as they were opponents for governor in 1892. Lawler went into the campaign with the battle cry of: "I want no mans collar," but Knuto furnished him one in November.

It is about time that the farmers began to organize on this ditch business, to make a stand for their rights. As it is now they are simply being used for tools and fools, by men who only care to get them ditches far enough all dug so the farmers can be assessed for taxes. Look at that ditch south of Kratka, that they call No. 47 extension of time on, and get it nearly, while the farmers are having their crops drown out and are paying ditch taxes. Before county division it was all the fault of Red Lake Falls. Who's fault is it now, that a lot of old dredges are standing idle on the prairie, while days drift into weeks, weeks into months, and months into years? If them men did not lean on the powers that be, with the same confidence that a sleeping child lays on the breast of a wet nurse, confident that they can get all the extension of time they want, they would be here digging them ditches.

We are in receipt of information the past week that the Canad Reciprocity bill will be forced through by president Taft. But he is serveing his last and best term for if the Republican party make the mistake to nominate him he will go down to defeat in November, the solid farmer vote will treat him like same as they would a muskeie that had bit them. "Hit it a scat." It will not be a question of party, but, down with Taft. "He has done us dmage enough, fire him out."

Lattimore reminds us of a story we once heard of a man who stole a saw mill, and the next night went back to steal the mill pond, but got caught at it. John had such good luck on one thieving trip made into this school district, that he came back the next night to steal the school district and move it up to Erie, but got caught at it. The Idea of a man shipped here from Pennsylvania, that never paid a dollar tax, and probly never will; who is to old to ever work a poll tax, telling the people of Highlandia, where to consolidate schools.

Not In That Class.

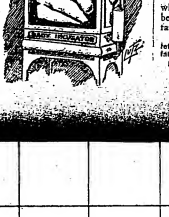
A Cleveland woman who has a ten pound brother can be wise beyond his years, and is likely to crop out in many places at the most unexpected times. The other night the anxious mother called to the nursemaid, arriving at her domicile a little before he was expected. She was not ready to leave her apparatus, and the duty of entertaining the caller devolved on the little brother.

"Well, Bobby," began the young man in an effort to make conversation and at the same time to put his inexperienced host at his ease, "does your sister think she'll am calling at this house oftener than I am welcome?"

The child looked keenly at the caller. "Neither doing," he said. "Do you think I'm one of those fresh kids you read about in the funny papers? There ain't going to be no embarrassing answer this time." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Missionary a Puzzle.

To the untutored Chinamen the presence of the missionary is a puzzle. They simply cannot imagine human beings exiling themselves from their native land for the love of men on the other side of the globe. So they frame many theories to explain the thing to themselves. One theory is that the missionaries are secret political agents bent on gaining an influence over the Chinese and then swaying them to the advantage of their respective governments. Only of late have the natives come to realize that the strangers are not sent by their governments, but by religious groups. According to another theory, China is so excellent and renowned that the red haired barbarians come to live there for the mere pleasure of it. As for their self denying works of benevolence, these are supposed to be prompted by the desire to acquire merit.—Century.



An Election Story From Hungary.

An electioneering story from Hungary, as told by Mr. R. W. Seton-Watson in "Corruption and Reform in Hungary:" "Not many years ago a noble count stood as candidate for a west Hungarian constituency and was in due course elected. Soon afterward a deputation of the electors visited him in Budapest, reminded him of his promises at the time of the election and asked him to use his influence in a certain direction. 'Why do you come to me?' asked the count. 'Why, because you are our representative,' the astonished peasants replied. 'Nothing of the kind,' said the count. 'I bought the constituency for £2,000. You all had your price—free lunches and free drinks into the bargain. I'm — if I do anything for you. We are quits.' And in another minute the deputation found itself in the street."

Walter McAndress made a business trip to Thief River Falls on Tuesday.

C. L. Clark and Sam McMahn returned to their road building contract on the A. D. Brown ditch Saturday.

Stanley Deptz got notice from the L.O. this week that he can homested the Strassberg farm that he contested this spring.

The weather has been very warm the past week, and there has been much suffering among the stock from flys and moskitoes.

The moskuitos are making up for what time they lost last summer, for they have help enough now to run business night and day.

Local news are rather scarse this week, as the editor has been putting in a good part of his time, way down in the corn field.

WANTED- From 50 to 70 acres of breaking done. Good land to break. Wm. Buckman, sec. 11, town of Deer Park, Roland p. o.

Our Roland news failed to show up this week, and we mistrust that the writer of them is at a wedding, but we will hear all about it next week.

The Eleven Towns fail to show up at this office, this week. We don't know whether it was lost in the mail, or was an other mistake of "our printer."

$27, Insures you against a loss of five hundred dollars by hail. Of course we don't want to advise you to pay out money for hail insurance, but if you should happen to loose your crop by hail five hundred would come handy.

Two men were seen around the dredge south of here Tuesday, but we did not learn whether it was the contractors, or some farmers that had their crops drown out, that was looking for a chance to put a stick of dinimite where it would do the most good.

The Farmers Clubs of Kratka and Highlanding will hold a joint picnic in the grove of John Quirk, in the town of Kratka on the 4th, of July. County attorney E. M. Stanton, and other prominent speakers are expected to be present, and a pleasent day will be spent visiting. All are welcome.

We have the agency of the State Farmer Mutual Hail Insurance Co., of Waseca, and will insure crops against loss by hail at the rate of $5, a hundred, or to make it plain we bet you one hundred dollars to five dollars, that there will not be any hail. Call and see us, as it safer to let a rich company share your risk.

The Erie store has changed hands, Mr. Severt O. Prestegaard having bought the store and stock of George Baird, who will retire to his farm. Mrs. Prestegaard has had a number of years active experience in the mercantile business and we predict that the new firm will run a first class up to date country store.

Andrew J. Feeland came up to Walter McAndress this morning to buy flax seed to seed over his field that was drown out. Mr. Feland is a heavy tax payer on ditch No. 47, and the old floating dredge stands at the head of the ditch in plain sight of his house. Is it any wonder that the farmers are getting ugly?

Erie will Celebrate July 4th, in grand style. They are building a large bowery and will have first class Music for dancing afternoon and evening. A matched game of base ball in the afternoon, Erie vs Lillo, for a $10, purse. A good program of sports in the afternoon. Grand Display of Fire works in the evening.

All come to Erie July 4th, and have a good time

THRESHING, OR DITCHING.

Some of these ditch contractors are like some threshers that try to do something that they do not know how to do, and when they start their machine they will begin to holler "elevator" "straw carrier," and then toot goes the whistle, and there is something wrong with the pump on the engine. They get that fixed and start up and someone will holler "who" "who" "cylinder." Then they discover that the cylinder teeth are all loose, and when they get that fixed there is something else wrong, and that is the way they keep on bothering the farmers until they get put out of business. We have got a lot of them kind of retired threshers for ditch contractors, and the sooner the farmers unite and run them out of the country the better it will be for all.

A Burning Glass in the Eye.

In the front part of each of our eyes is a convex lens of great power and clearness. It acts exactly like a burning glass. If a person was made to look at the sun, say, for half a minute his eye would actually start to burn up. The lens would focus the rays of the sun on the retina, and that part of the eye would immediately scorch and later would burn to a crisp. This can happen, however, only when one looks at the sun directly or in a mirror. If one holds a pin between the sun and the eye and looks at the pin, although the sun is in a direct line with the eye and although its rays are entering the eye, the eye is not hurt, because the rays are not focused inside the eyeball. This is the wonderful property the lens has, that of focusing objects at different distances. The means by which it does this are its power to change its curvature.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Crowning Britain's King and Queen

The KING in CORONATION ROBES

The QUEEN in CORONATION ROBES

WITH mediaeval splendor, strangely out of keeping with the trend of thought in modern England, yet eagerly looked forward to by a people who, in spite of progress, cling to a love of pageantry—of assisted retrospection as it were—the coronation of George V. exceeds in magnificence anything that the modern world has seen. The pomp and pageantry will not make him one whit more the ruler of his millions; it will not add one jot or tittle to his power. But the coronation is a pageant his people await with no slight degree of excitement, that the whole world would go forth to see.

Then, being crowned ruler of Great Britain and Ireland, he will visit India, with his queen consort, and there be proclaimed and crowned emperor. He is the first ruler of Britain's empire of India to go to that distant dominion to receive the symbol of his office. In previous reigns the crowning has been by proxy and the viceroy of India has held it as one of the privileges of his exalted office that, for a brief space, at a demonstration almost barbaric in its splendor he could stand in the stead of his sire and receive the homage due the actual emperor. The kingdom of make-believe is to go. George, Imperator et Rex, will himself receive the fealty of his distant dominion. And what a rush of native potentates there will be to claim places near the throne of the great white king!

The ceremony of the coronation is a survival of an ancient custom of sacring or hallowing the kings. From the standpoint of the public at large the actual placing of the crown upon the monarch's head is the most important feature of the ceremony. But from the standpoint of the ceremony's meaning of symbolism, the service of unction is perhaps the most noteworthy. And then, too, there is that moment in the festivity—for such it really is, in spite of its religious setting—when the king leaves the chair that he occupies at the start, to sit upon England's throne, ruler of the United Kingdom and of her dominions over the sea!

In a religious setting the ceremony of the coronation, when studied by the layman, instantly recalls the service of consecrating a bishop, and the resemblance is admitted by the clergy, though the most important feature of the consecration of a bishop is omitted, that of the "laying on of hands."

Then, too, the coronation is not merely a festivity. It is something more, much more. For it marks the formal setting apart of the king as a person different from all his subjects, not only by virtue of his position as their ruler, but by an anointing with holy oil—an observance that has Biblical parallels and sanctions.

King George will be robed in a white silk shirt, and over that will be placed a close-fitting coat of red sarcenet. These vestments are provided with openings at the breast, for the purpose of anointment. Originally there were five openings, but as the anointing ceremony has become less elaborate with time the need of additional openings has vanished. The openings in the vestments will be fastened with ribbons, and another of the manifold duties of the dean of Westminster will be to see that they are in readiness for the function. Then, too, he will have to see that they are fastened again, so that his majesty will not present an untidy appearance.

In the early days the king stood barelegged to receive his people's crown; but, due to the freaks of the British climate or to a more delicate sense of the fitness of things, the monarch now will be properly stockinged, and will wear also knee breeches and buskins of cloth of gold. He will wear sandals of dark leather with red straps. Covering everything else will be the red or parliamentary robe, which is so familiar from photographs of kings. On his head, before the actual coronation, will be the cap of state or maintenance, made of red velvet. The queen consort will be a regal figure in the purple of her rank. She will wear a small gold coronet, and will receive the crown later, following the coronation of the king.

Some of the medieval observances have been abandoned, but their abandonment has not lessened the splendor of the pageant, for there have been many additions with the growth of the British empire.

The hereditary earl marshal, the aged duke of Norfolk, is the general factotum in the hall of the abbey. He will direct the procession of the king and the queen consort. The dean of Westminster will have fulfilled part of his duties at this time, having the robes and regalia properly assembled for the monarch and his queen. The robes will have been brought from the Jerusalem chamber of the abbey, where the dean will have been in constant and terrified guard over them.

To greet the king and queen on their arrival at the abbey will be crowded tiers. Those present will be the favored of all England. The tiers will be draped in yellow and blue velvet. The abbey will be richly carpeted in blue—the color of the Garter—in accordance with a time-honored custom. Here and there will be Indian rugs, tokens from the empire potentates to the great white king. There will be nothing extravagant about the rug or drapery display. Every effort will be made to prevent the concealment of the permanent beauty of the abbey, and the decorations will serve a useful purpose in hiding the stands that find place only at coronation times.

On a raised dais in full view of all those present will be placed two thrones. The king's throne will have the place of honor elevated two steps above that of his consort in token of his sovereignty. Facing the altar, and for the use of the king only, will be another throne, no longer called a throne, but known as St. Edward's chair. It is when he leaves this chair and attired in all the regalia of the exalted office he takes the real throne that the very climax of the whole ceremony is reached.

But, to return to the procession under the direction of the earl marshal. The king and queen, having entered the abbey by the west door, and having been greeted by the sight of a church crowded with representatives of every civilized country as well as with the accredited representatives of the British Empire, so that it is a veritable parliament of man, a federation of the world, will proceed to chairs set before and below their thrones.

At this juncture the archbishop of Canterbury, who, it is interesting at this point to note, is the ranking official at the ceremony—not only in that he crowns the king, but also in view of the fact that, in the event of the crown prince's enforced absence from the kingdom on the death of the monarch, or an interegnum would be regent—accompanied by four dignitaries, will proclaim once more the king to his subjects and to the world. The four dignitaries are the lord chancellor, the lord great chamberlain, the lord high constable and earl marshal. They will march solemnly to the four sides of the abbey, or amphitheater, as it might be called, and address the assemblage. The king, at the moment of their procession, will have risen as if to show himself to those to whom he is being proclaimed. The archbishop will speak this message:

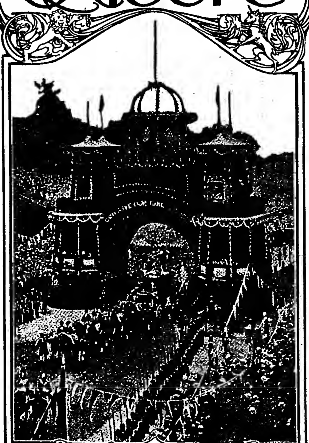
"Sirs, I here present to you King George, the undoubted king of this realm; wherefore all of you have come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?"

As by one voice the people will take up the cry that will reverberate through the whole of the empire on which the sun never sets: "God save the king!"

Following this acclamation both king and queen consort will take the places reserved for them just below their thrones.

The regalia of the king at the beginning of the service will be that already described, except that when the Litany and Sacrament of the Lord's Supper are reached he will remain uncovered, the little cap of maintenance being put aside for the time.

At the altar the coronation oath will be administered to the king, and, casting aside his red robe, his majesty will proceed to St. Edward's chair, which, as has already been pointed out, is for his sole occupancy.



Then follows what is, perhaps, the most picturesque feature of the whole ceremony, excepting only that of the actual crowning of the monarch. The scene will be of great splendor. A cloth of gold pall, whose value represents a fortune of itself, will be held over the king by Garter knights all arrayed in the picturesque habiliments of their station. Then the Westminster dean, taking from the altar the historic vessels known as the ampulla and spoon, will attend the primate of all England, who will anoint the sovereign on head and breast and hands.

Apart from its picturesqueness, this moment in the ceremony is perhaps the most solemn of the whole proceeding. And the king, being formally anointed—set apart, hallowed—will then be arrayed in the historic regalia known as the Colobium Sindonis and the Supertunica. The monarch's heels are to be accoutred with the golden spurs, the lord chamberlain will gird him with a sword and the imperial mantle will be thrown about him. The ceremony, reaching another climax now, the monarch will be seated, where he will receive the orb, the ring for the fourth finger of his right hand and the scepter of royalty.

Now everything is ready for the actual coronation. The archbishop will take the historic symbol from its resting place on the altar and put it upon the head of the king. The assemblage will break out into a tumultuous protestation of loyalty in the old familiar words: "God save the king!"

Choir and clergy, lords and ladies, all who can and will—and most of them will—then will break forth into a great Te Deum, a Te Deum that will echo throughout the world. The king will return to the chair by the side of his consort that he occupied when the ceremony began and, then, to quote the words of the coronation officer, "is lifted"—but not literally—"up into his throne."

Crowning England's king and the queen consort is no work of a day. It is a stupendous undertaking. It is intended to be impressive. And it cannot fail of that mark.

IS SHORT $14,226.79

XAMINER REPORTS $400 STILL UNACCEPTED FOR IN "U" BREAKAGE FUND.

NDICTMENTS ARE EXPECTED

Former Treasurer Said the Holidays Got $13,826, but $17,826 Is Gone.

—$4,990 Mysteriously Returned.

Minneapolis. — The State public examiners reported to Governor Eberhart that over and above the $13,826.-79 of which J. D. Bren, deposed university cashier, says he was robbed, there is a shortage of $400 in the university "breakage" fund. This shortage still exists, according to the report, after deducting all money Bren has turned over and the sum of $4,990 which was mysteriously placed in a drawer in his office two days after the examiners had searched it and found no money there.

As a result of this report Assistant County Attorney Nash said that he would immediately draw two indictments against Bren. One is to charge him with embezzlement of $13,826, of which he said he was robbed and the other with the additional shortage of $400.

These indictments will be presented for grand jury consideration. Assistant Public Examiners Stacy and Cedarburg; Miss Ella Whitney, a university women to whom Bren loaned money; Jim Ryan, employed in Bren's office; Dr. Murdock, Bren's father-in-law; Detectives DeLaittre and Broderick; Edward Nelson, who has been seen Bren just before and just after the alleged robbery, and Frank S. Lyon, Bren's agent in the grain speculation, are among those already subpoenaed.

In explaining the secret report which went to the governor from the public examiners, Mr. Nash said that it applied only to the "breakage" fund and that it is based entirely on Mr. Bren's own bookkeeping. No effort has been made yet to check up to see if his accounts as to disposition of certain other moneys is correct. His own figures have been accepted in toto and still a shortage found.

That $5,700 has been handed over to the public examiners' department since the commencement of the examination of the accounts of J. D. Bren, treasurer of the university, is shown by the report.

The money Mr. Bren said he was robbed of was $13,826.79. For this sum Mr. Bren's attorneys assert he is not responsible. In anticipation of a shortage in the accounts Public Examiner Stacy and Cedarburg went over to the examiners $710. During the examination the sum of $1,000 in currency was found in the vault of the University. It was discovered in a pigeon hole by Miss Ryan, a bookkeeper, and turned over to the examiners. Mr. Bren asserted he knew nothing about this money.

Mr. Cedarburg and Mr. Stacy echo Mr. Fritz's views on the subject. The facts in the case have leaked out from an authoritative source. The report was submitted by Mr. Fritz to Governor Eberhart and there was present a representative of the county attorney in Minneapolis and of the board of regents.

Mr. Fritz's report covers merely a preliminary examination. In making the examination it has been necessary to accept Mr. Bren's figures and balances. To do anything further would have required more time than was given the examiners. Upon the authority of Governor Eberhart the public examiner's department will proceed at once to make a thorough and complete investigation of all the financial affairs of the university. This is done with the approval of President Vincent, who is as anxious as any one to have the university completely probed. In this examination the students' funds will be checked up and an effort will be made to discover whether the entries made in the books are correct. This will be the real test of the accuracy of Mr. Bren's accounts.

Mr. Stacy will call attention to the fact that the sum of money taken out by Mr. Bren, or alleged to have been taken by him, was much larger than was necessary. He will show that most of the accidents that have happened paid their refunds and that only a few thousand dollars would have covered the amounts claimed. He also will argue that the finger prints on Mr. Bren's collar, where as the treasurer asserts, he was grabbed by the alleged robber, ran only three slight marks extending half way down the collar, the inference being that if anyone had grabbed him by the collar for the purpose of throwing him down, the finprints would have been much plainer. Attention will be called to the fact that the buttonholes of the collar were intact.

FORESTERS END CONVENTION.

Catholics at Mankato Name F. W. Murray, Minneapolis, Alternative.

Mankato.—The state convention of the Catholic Order of Foresters was held here. Officers were all re-elected as follows: State chief ranger, P. H. Martin, Duluth; state vice chief ranger, A. J. Eckstein, Clear Lake; state secretary, G. W. Stenger, St. Paul; state treasurer, Henry von Weyer, St. Paul; high trustee, Julius A. Colley, Shakopee; delegate at large, G. W. Stenger, St. Paul; alternative, F. W. Murray, Minneapolis. Winona was unanimously selected as the place for the next convention, in 1913.

Bishop P. R. Heffron, of Winona, spoke on the work of the order. State Chief Ranger Martin in his report said the order was in a flourishing condition. He reported a substantial gain in membership. The largest gain in membership was made by St. Martinus court, No. 550—St. Paul, which added 105 members to its rolls.

The report of the auditing committee showed a balance on hand of $4,-667.35, as against $3,861.80 on June 9, 1909. The treasurer's report showed that the various courts have on hand $76,175.06. The total insurance carried in this jurisdiction, according to the report of the general secretary, is $65,000.

FARMER BOY FOUND HANGED.

Body Discovered Suspended by Whip From Tree in Woods.

Rochester.—The lifeless body of Sydney Bigelow, the 15-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Bigelow, living two miles east of this city, was found suspending from a tree, with a whip lash about the neck and the whip stock on the tree, in the woods on the neighbors, who noticed the team standing without a driver. Mystery surrounds his death. It has been suggested that the boy died at the hands of a cheater at the state hospital, the institution being but a mile from the Bigelow farm. The boy was fond of chasing wild game and birds, and it is suggested also that he climbed a tree with a whip in his hand and that in some manner slipped with fatal results.

SHATTUCK COMMENCEMENT ON.

Forty-fourth Anniversary of Rectorship of Dr. James Dobbin.

Faribault.—Commencement at Shattuck is on. The present year marks the close of the forty-fourth year of the rectorship of Dr. James Dobbin. He has been with the school from the beginning.

The commencement sermon was delivered at the cathedral by Rev. Francis E. White, rector of Trinity church, Atchison, Kan.

The annual competitive drill and sham battle took place. Regular army officers acted as judges for the drill and medals was furnished by the Third regiment, M. N. G. band. In the evening the annual senior class play was presented.

Governor and Mrs. Hay of Washington were guests of the school during the week. A son of Shattuck and a daughter are among the graduates of the schools. Wednesday was alumni day and the graduating exercises were held in the auditorium.

NORWEGIANS HOLD "STEVNE"

Hallings Will Meet at Brooten, Minn., June 22, 23, 24.

Glenwood.—Hundreds of Norwegians from all parts of the country will gather in Brooten June 22, 23, and 24 to celebrate the Halling stevne. There are large settlements of Hallings in Brooten itself, in many parts of Minnesota and the Dakotas, which will send large delegations.

Among the noted speakers at the "stevne" are Congressman G. N. Heuen from Iowa and Senator Asle Gronna of North Dakota, who both are Hallings.

The Hallings are noted for their vivacity and the stevne promises to be a merry affair.

Religious addresses by a number of noted Hallings, band and orchestra concerts and excursions to nearby Hallings settlements are on the program for the three days' etovne.

STUDENT IS ELECTROCUTED.

Charles Caster, Sophomore, Loses Life While Pruning Tree.

Minneapolis. — Charles Caster, 21 years of age, of Minneapolis, was electrocuted at Delwood, a summer resort on White Bear lake. He was trimming trees, and his pruning hook came in contact with a live wire, killing him instantly. Young Caster was a sophomore at the University of Minnesota, specializing in chemistry. He was working at Delwood for the summer.

University Instructor Drowns.

Minneapolis. — Undertaking a long swim to bring assistance from shore to the girl who clung in mid-lake to an over-turned canoe, John Trott, an athlete, collegian, and member of the faculty of the university, overestimated his strength and met his death in the waters of Lake Minnetonka. Miss Eva Kaye, university student, whose life Trott died trying to save, was rescued later by a launch. The body of Mr. Trott has not been recovered from the lake although deputy sheriffs dragged the waters.

GOVERNOR SETS JUNE 22

ISSUES PROCLAMATION REQUESTING FOR SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

Unable to Attend Celebration, Mr. Taft Tells Committee of His Wish for Pageant's Success.

A proclamation asking the people of the state to observe June 22, the fiftieth anniversary of the departure of the First Minnesota, as at least a half holiday was issued by Governor Eberhart.

The governor said that there was no authority of law by which he could declare the day a legal holiday, but he did the next best thing, recommending to the people of the state that the day be generally observed and that the citizens participate as far as possible. The proclamation follows:

The Governor's Proclamation.

To the People of Minnesota, Greeting:

In honor of the magnificent service rendered to the country and the state by the First regiment of Minnesota volunteers on the battlefield of Gettysburg half a century ago, the citizens of St. Paul have planned an appropriate and generous commemoration to take place Thursday, June 22, 1911.

It seems to me fitting, therefore, that the people of the entire state should join in this tribute to the veterans of whose splendid record we are all proudly appreciative, and I hereby recommend that the day be generally observed as at least a half holiday, to which all should participate as far as possible.

—Adolph O. Eberhart.

President Taft will not be able to attend the celebration, but will be represented here by some military officer. The President sent his regrets, thanking the committee for the invitation extended and wishing every success for the celebration in honor of the First.

May Serve Dinner on Capitol Lawn.

The evening dinner to be served to the veterans by the women's auxiliaries of the First Minnesota and the Sons of Veterans may be served on the capitol lawn and tests the form of a biveuac. The dining room where the luncheon at noon will be served will be decorated with the national colors by the "Sons," and the florists of the city will donate flowers.

To celebrate June 22, governor issues proclamation for half-holiday.

FARMER TURNS "DRY" SPY.

Fergus Falls Ruralist Goes to Town to Clean Up Reward Money.

Fergus Falls.—Thomas Agern, Albert Nelson, Henry Nokleby and Frank Curry, farmers residing near this city, appeared in court here today to answer to the charge of selling liquor to a minor.

It appeared that I. H. Comstock, a farmer living in this vicinity, had asked some of the officers of the city police how much of a reward would be paid for evidence showing that the saloonkeepers were violating the liquor laws, and was informed that such evidence would be worth $25 in each case. He had then called on Jerroms Gilbert, who had formerly been his neighbor, and had spent an evening about town in company with Mr. Gilbert's son, Roy Gilbert, a boy of 17 years.

In the course of the evening, according to the testimony, Comstock and Roy Gilbert had dropped into the saloons of Messrs. Agern, Nokleby, Curry and Nelson, and the boy had "set up" beer and bought a bottle of whisky in each of them. The boy claimed he did not know that Comstock was acting as a detective, and that he bought the whisky to take along on a fishing trip which they were planning for the next day. His evidence on this point was disputed, as the party to whom the whisky was given for safekeeping stated that the boy handed out part of it to be labeled and put away.

CONVENTION OF DEAF HELD.

Meeting at Faribault Addressed by Anton Schroeder of St. Paul.

Faribault.—The eleventh biennial convention of the Minnesota Association of the Deaf was held in this city.

The address of welcome was delivered by Mayor Blodgett, and responses were made by members of the board of directors of the state schools, Judge R. A. Mott, Senator Clotshack, and Dr. J. N. Tate, superintendent of the Minnesota School for the Deaf. Following the address of the president, Anton Schroeder, of St. Paul, read a paper on "A Comparative Study of State Conventions" was read by Rev. George F. Flick, and a paper by J. C. Howard on "Impostors."

The afternoon was devoted to pleasure and a visit to the School for the Feeble-Minded. There were about 125 in attendance at the convention.

Faribault.—A premature dynamite explosion seriously injured Patrick Smith, a farmer living near here. He was preparing to blast some stone. His will probably lose his sight as a result. One hand was badly shattered.

HUSBAND AND WIFE INDICTED.

Lloyd Carlton and Spouse to Stand Trial for State Murder.

Bemidji.—Lloyd Carlton and his wife, son-in-law and daughter of Peter Nash, whose mutilated torso was found on the Neste farm, were indicted by the grand jury at Park Rapids for murder in the first degree. Husband and wife were arraigned before Judge McClenahan and through E. E. MacDonald of this city entered pleas of not guilty. The trial was set for June 22.

HAD BEEN SILENT SUFFERER

Subordinate Officer the Recipient of Hints Intended for His Superior.

A sea captain's wife tells this story of a maiden woman, sister of one of the owners of the ship on which she once made a long voyage. She had very decided opinion on most matters, and she and the captain had many spirited arguments at the dinner table.

The captain's wife, a meek, submissive little soul, fearing that in the heat of argument her husband might say something to offend their august passenger, had the habit of kicking him on the shins to hint at moderation. Nevertheless, oft these reminders passed unheeded.

One day she administered a more vigorous kick than usual, and noticed an expression of pain flit across the face of the mate, who sat opposite her.

"Oh, Mr. Brown, was that your shin?" she asked.

"Yes, Mrs. Skiddle," said the mate, meekly; "bit's been my shin bell the voyage, ma'am."—Youth's Companion.

At the time of his birth John Quincy Adams was president of the United States.

Dr. Culmer has been a minister for sixty years in the Methodist Episcopal church until his advanced age made it necessary for him to retire. He is a scholar and poet. Many of his poems have been published in magazines and newspapers.—Washington Correspondence Indianapolis News.

Willing to Support Proxy.

Albert Tiedemann, a freeholder of the University of Pennsylvania, was called upon to vote for officers in a recent gathering. Not being well enough acquainted with members, he thoughtfully hesitated before filling out his ballot.

One of the company left the room with the explanation that he would "vote by proxy."

"So will I," said Albert, and with his pencil poised above the paper, leaned over to a companion on his right and asked:

"Say, what's Proxy's first name?"

SOLVING NEGRO PROBLEM

Under Conditions, the Matter Seemed Comparatively Easy of Arrangement.

The central police station was overcrowded one day last week. Officers were wondering what they would do should another arrest be made, when the door opened and a sleepy-looking, blue-eyed freshener drifted in with a moist dejected "Good efning, mens."

The sergeant nodded their greetings to the stranger, who then asked "Can I did some sleepinge here? I just came from Chicago and em start to work tomorrow."

"Well, the only space we have left is a bunk which is already occupied by a colored man. You can share that if you want to," replied the officer.

The man thought for a few minutes, scratched his head and said:

"Well, I guess I no can see him in dark, and besides I am tired and want sleep."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Some Day Ask Your Physician

To tell you the curious story of how the mind affects the digestion of food.

I refer to the condition the mind is in, just before, at the time, or just following the taking of food.

If he has been properly educated (the majority have) he will help you understand the curious machinery of digestion.

To start you thinking on this interesting subject, I will try to lay out the plan in a general way and you can then follow into more minute details.

Pawlow (pronounce Pavlof) a famous Russian Physician and chemist, experimenting on some dogs, cut into the tube leading from the throat to the stomach.

They were first put under chloroform or some other anaesthetic and the operation was painless. They were kept for months in very good condition.

When quite hungry some un-appetizing food was placed before them and, although hunger forced them to eat, it was shown by analysis of the contents of the stomach that little if any of the digestive juices were found.

Then, in contrast, some raw meat was put where they couldn't reach it at once, and a little time allowed for the minds of the dogs to "anticipate" and create an appetite. When the food was finally given them, they devoured it ravenously and with every attitude of satisfaction. The food was passed out into a dish through the opening before it reached the stomach. It was found to be mixed with "Ptyalin" the alkaline juice of the mouth, which is important for the first step in digestion. Then an analysis was made of the contents of the stomach, into which no food had entered. It was shown that the digestive fluids of stomach were flowing freely, exactly as if the desirable food had entered.

This proved that it was not the presence of food which caused the digestive juices to flow, but the flow was caused entirely and alone as a result of the action of the mind, from "anticipation."

One dog continued to eat the food he liked for over an hour believing he was getting it into his stomach, whereas most of it was falling on the floor; some went out through the opening and yet all this time the digestive juices flowed to the stomach, prepared to quickly digest food, in response to the curious orders of the mind.

Do you pick-up the lesson?

Unappetizing food, that which fails to create mental anticipation, does not cause the necessary digestive juices to flow, whereas, food that is pleasing to the sight, and hence to the mind, will cause the complicated machinery of the body to prepare in a wonderful way for its digestion.

How natural, then, to reason that one should sit down to a meal in a peaceful, happy state of mind and start off the breakfast, say with some ripe delicious fruit, then follow with a bowl of crisp, lightly browned, thin bits of corn like Post Toasties, add a sprinkle of sugar and some good yellow cream and this attractive, appetizing picture cannot escape your eye and will produce the condition of mind which causes the digestive juices nature has hidden in mouth and stomach, to come forth and do their work.

These digestive juices can be driven back by a mind oppressed with worry, hate, anger or dislike of the disagreeable appearance of food placed before one.

Solid facts that are worthy the attention of anyone who esteems prime health and human happiness as a valuable asset in the game of life.

"There's a Reason" for saying "The Memory Lingers" when breakfast is started with POST TOASTIES.

PROPHECIES that have COME TRUE.

The forecasts of a Seer of the 15th Century bearing on ... English and American History.

Their relation to the Coronation of King George V...

By PROF. B. J. GIGRAND.

THE coronation of King George V. of England brings to mind a series of peculiar prophecies contained in an old but little known poem—prophecies, some of which would appear on an investigation to have proved oddly correct in regard to certain events transpiring in American and English history, both prior to and after the Revolution. The name of Merlin is given as the author of the mystic rhymes, which date back to the fifteenth century and run in couplets fraught with double meaning, according to the work of some scholar or student of the stars who foresaw, or fancied he foresaw, in the heavenly bodies strange portents of the days to come.

The lines can be found in the works of Dean Swift, edition of 1766, page 241, volume 3. They were also printed in the United States in September, 1776, three years after peace with England had been declared, and published in a few foreign journals; but the earliest appearance of the poem was in an ancient English work edited and produced in London in the year 1620. In complete form it runs as follows:

"When the savage is meek and mild
To a foreign mother shall stab her child.
When the Cock shall woo the Dove
The Mother shall cease the child to love.
When men like moles work underground
The Lion a Virgin true shall wound.
When the Dove and the Cock the Lion
shall fight,
The Lion shall crouch beneath their
might.
When the Cock shall guard the Eagle's
nest
The stars shall rise—all in the West.
When ships above the clouds shall sail
The Lion's strength shall surely fail.
When Neptune's back with stripes is red
The sickly Lion shall hide his head.
When seven and six shall make but one
The Lion's might shall be undone."

Many diverse opinions are held as to the ability of mere man to peer into the future, but without entering into an argument on the subject, it is at least interesting to note how curiously certain of the prophecies made by the dead and forgotten Merlin coincide with the march of actual events when submitted to the process of deduction.

We can take the first couplet as referring to the history of America, and more particularly to the colonial period. The white settlers had planted civilization, by means of the Cross, the sword, Champlain's guns and the missionaries' prayers, deeply in the forest, and the Indians may be said to have become temporarily subdued through two or three combined elements. The red man was subjected to meek and mild influences by the tact and religious examples of such men as Roger Williams and William Penn, whose kindness is a part of Indian tradition to this very day. Hence, "when the savage" (evidently the North American Indian) "is meek and mild, the frantic mother" (meaning England) "shall stab her child" (the American colonies).

When and how England enacted this needs scant comment other than that the courts of the colonies, just prior to the Revolution, used the sword of justice to destroy the rights of the American subjects of the crown. At this point England actually and not figuratively stabbed her children.

"When the Cock shall woo the Dove
The mother shall cease the child to love."

Now, the cock for eggs has been emblematic of France, as the Lion has of England, and the cartoonists of early days invariably designated the French "as proud as the cock." In France, victory at arms or civic triumphs worn always, as at the present time, proclaimed by the display of the rooster. The dove referred to was undoubtedly intended for Columbia, or the United States, or colonies. The word Columbia means "Dove-like" or "Columbo," the original meaning Columbus, the noun base of the proper adjective Columbia, but accepted by Americans as a proper noun.

Our colonial history abounds with illustrations as to how eagerly France courted the good will of the American colonies, and an equally emphatic tale in the drama is the jealousy of England at the display of any colonial regard for the French government. This second couplet is especially well illustrated in the continental congress appointing a commission, of which Benjamin Franklin was one, to visit the French at Quebec, and admit of French courtship in the aid of the American Revolution; and how the continentals in 1776 dispatched him to France, to further admit of the courtly attentions to bring about a wedding of interests; how he procured from the French king $6,000,000 of France, the very money which made further rebellion possible. And at this point England realized, and for the first time, that the uprising in the colonies was indeed a very serious matter, and it provoked the Britishers to learn of our affection for France to a point where "the mother (the child) ceased to love." The writer possesses an heraldic sketch designed by Franklin while in Europe, actually picturing England's cruel thought motherly treatment of her children, the thirteen colonies, indicating the French concern in the welfare of these struggling dependencies—a remarkable similarity to the lines of the prophecy under discussion. In these heraldic pictures Franklin represents the colonies as of the calm and peaceful disposition of the swan and also the dove. In fact a committee delegated to devise a signature for the United States, reported in 1782 "that the goddess of America (Columbia) have upon her dexter hand perched a dove argent proper." While the oleocratin design was not accepted by the continental congress it indicates that in these days the colonies were often symbolized by a dove, in fact, the thirteen light stars on the adopted eagle also indicated in the peace tincture of the American shield which according to law is an argent (white or silver) peace emblem, upon it blazoned six red stripes.

The Lion a Virgin true shall wound."

During the last years of the Revolution the continentals frequently attempted secret approaches to the camp and redoubts of the British by underground passages. This tunnel method was evolved by a French engineer, as it was a part of early French military tactics. The digging in the earth is also well illustrated in the winter headquarters at Valley Forge, where the felling of trees to establish their log cabins was slow work; and when the cold winter set in many were the holes in the ground that served as lodgings for the freezing troops. The line, "The Lion a Virgin true shall wound," might be taken as a reference to the terrible massacres, expeditions of plunder and destruction in Virginia, named the Virgin colony in honor of Queen Elizabeth. This country of the virgin was indeed wounded, for no other section of the country suffered such bloody military attacks. It was estimated by Jefferson that the raids of Benedict Arnold through Virginia cost the enormous sum of $16,000,000 in property, besides the thousands of lives sacrificed under conditions of the most frightful torture.

"When the Dove and the Cock the Lion
shall fight
might."

This could be accepted as referring to the united forces of the colonists (the Dove), and the French (the Cock), at the final engagement before Yorktown. This siege and battle resulted in the American victory, and therefore the union of Americans and French resulted in the "Lion" being compelled to "crouch beneath their might."

"When the Cock shall guard the Eagle's
nest,
The stars shall rise—all in the West."

Here we find an allusion to the subsequent history of the three nations—American, French and English. When independence was recognized, the symbol of the United States appeared in the form of a bald eagle, "The bird of freedom and imperial power."

The second test of martial power between American and England came in 1812, and on both sea and land we suffered severe losses, the capitol at Washington being destroyed by the enemy and the city itself falling into possession of the British. But the ebbing attitude of France toward the eagle's nest (the young republic representing by the American eagle) made it possible for the states to attain victory from what the world had almost pronounced defeat. The New England states were severe in sympathy with the war, and, indeed, on Intercepting non-national page, bordering on secessional attitude, falls into the history of the puritanic section of our country. The invasion of Canada was a decided failure. Hull's surrender has always been considered unsatisfactory and totally unnecessary; he was court-martialed and sentenced to be shot; but his Revolutionary military record saved his life and he was pardoned. The brave Captain Lawrence on the Chesepeake gave us his dying words the order, "Don't give up the ship," but fate compelled his crew to strike their colors. The Essex, the first American frigate to sail around Cape Horn into the Pacific, found a British vessel waiting for her, and in the battle which ensued the enemy came off victorious. In the midst of these disasters the New Englanders were disregarding by a majority of votes what the national government at Washington decreed. They quietly and secretly published a most unsatisfactory report that was supposed by enemy to have led its origin in an attempt to break up the federal power. The south and middle west were loyal to the federal edicts. Jackson's marvelous victory at New Orleans, while possibly one of the most pronounced military successes in the history of civilized warfare, was achieved after peace had been declared, and hence cannot be said to have had any bearing on the ending of hostilities. The terms of peace were largely brought about through French influence, because of the military conditions existing between England and France, the British found it impolitic to follow up the American campaign, although the war was won in their favor. Here, then, is an apt illustration of how the French (the Cock) protected the Eagle's nest (America). So much for the first line; the next is especially prophetic:

"The stars shall rise—all in the West."

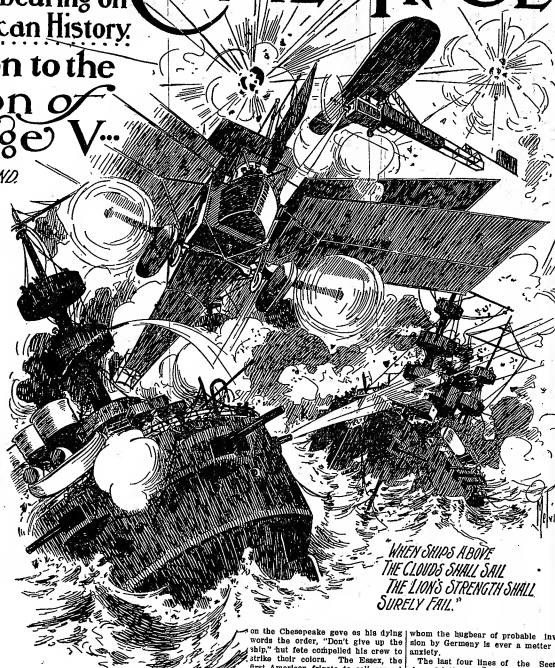
Immediately after the war of 1812 the stars began to gather in our flag, and they all came from the west, for it should be remembered that in those days any country lying on the sundown side of the Allegheny mountains was considered west. Hence the opening up of the great western territory with the immediate admission of the new states brought forth the "rise of the stars all in the west" until this day, when the flag has since 1912 seen 39 stars rise in the west.

"When ships above the clouds shall sail
The Lion's strength shall surely fail."

It requires no great stretch of imagination to apply this above lines to the present era when aviators are the heroes of the hour, and long continued flights in airships have ceased to be a novelty. And one might take the "failing of the lion's strength" to refer to the lessening of the British navy's far famed power when confronted with the possibility of attack by enemies floating in the air. When a certain Frenchman not long ago crossed the channel in an airship and landed safely on British soil, greet was the alarm "manifested throughout the realm of King George. The event almost caused a panic among those in whom the highest of probable invasion by Germany is ever a matter of anxiety.

The last four lines of the Seer's rhymed intimation of coming disaster deserves consideration together:

"When Neptune's back with stripes is red
The sickly Lion shall hide his head.
When seven and six shall make but one
The Lion's might shall be undone."



Possibly these four lines foretell terrible battles on the sea, Neptune being the mythological god of the ocean, and prophesy a naval war in which the western will be literally ahlaze with the red stripes shooting from the cannons' mouths. Or reference may be had to the planet Neptune, instead of the sea god—that heavenly body which of our planetary system is the farthest away from the sun, being 2,746,998,000 miles distant. Within the last few years astronomers have expressed the opinion that Neptune, like Saturn, has red or bright belts about it, and if the telescopes can be made more powerful these "red stripes" will be in view. Is it then that we may expect "The sickly lion shall hide his head?"

Or it may be that the last two lines refer to the United States, or else indicate the death and funeral designation of King Edward VII. In the first instance seven and six make 13, the generally accepted symbol of the United States represented in the stripes of the flag. "When seven and six shall make but one" might stand for the time when all the territories now under our flag shall all be admitted to statehood, and all these new governments be represented on our national standard.

Or the lines might have direct reference to King Edward's death. The seven and six may well indicate England's "Seventh Edward," or spelling out the two words we have: S 1, E 2, V 3, E 4, N 6, T 6, H 7; and E 1, D 2, W 3, A 4, R 5, D 6—showing clearly the seven and six numerals forming one king. Upon his death "The (England) Lion's might shall be undone." In connection with the final prediction it is not too much to say that England has not for years been in such an unsettled state politically or called upon to face so many perplexing problems.

Edward, seventh of the name, the Peacemaker, sleeps with his fathers, and George V. mounts the throne of his ancestors, while from all parts of the great empire people gather to do him homage. What of the future? Has the might of England passed away with the life of her peacemaker, or is one prophecy to prove false where so many other predictions made by the mystic student of the stars in the long ago have been fulfilled to the uttermost?

BETS IT WILL RAIN

Kansas Farmer Stakes $30,000 on the Weather.

Has Tried It Five Times and He's Out $175,000—If He Ever Wins He'll Be Rich.

Colby, Kan.—"Jim" Fike is trying to get rich betting against the weather. Last August he staked $30,000 on the chance that it would rain within three months. If it had rained, as he bet it would, he would have made a quarter of a million and got his $30,000 back, too. But it didn't rain. The weather is a freakish thing out on this high plateau, and Fike will be mighty thankful if the $30,000 is returned to him so he can have it to take another flyer against the weather this year. Fike calls his method of fortune hunting "Gambling against the weather." He has been at it now for five years and has never won.

"But," he says, "I'll make the big killing one of these years, just as sure's shootin', and when I do I'll put on patent leather shoes and go to the seashore."

Fike has staked $175,000 in five years on the chance that there would be enough rain and seasonable weather to give him a bumper crop of wheat. Each year of the five something went wrong, either it didn't rain enough to start the wheat right, or it didn't freeze enough to give it a good stand, or the high winds blew most of it out of the ground, or the drought hindered it from maturing; but there was enough of a crop in the worst of the five years to return him nearly all he had ventured, and in several of the years he made a profit of a mere $20,000 or so.

The thing he is after is a crop that will average twenty-five or thirty-five bushels of wheat to the acre. If ever he gets that he may go to the seashore sure enough, or to any old place. And it is a sure thing that he will get it if he stays with the game, for in 1903 thousands of acres of wheat in this county yielded 45 bushels to the acre and many fields cut 35 bushels and better.

You can figure it for yourself. He has 17,000 acres in wheat this year and it was planted with less cost then any other wheat in the state. His traction plows turn up the earth, harrowed it and seeded it, all in one operation, at the rate of one hundred acres a day. If just like 1903 when the 17,000 acres were in. If he should happen to get an average of 25 bushels to the acre—he won't, because the weather won the bet this year—but if he had won and the average yield was 25 bushels to the acre, that would be 425,000 bushels.

Now, take your pencil again: 425,000 bushels of wheat at, we'll say, $1 a bushel; that's $425,000; enough around five for some carloads of patent leather shoes and trips to the seashore and around the world.

Fike sat scrooched down in his office chair in this town the other day, an old slouch hat pulled down over his eyes, his muddy boots on his desk, and he looked through the window at the drizzling rain.

"That rain didn't come last fall, Jim," said one of his neighbors.

"Y-a-a-a," Fike drawled. "But it didn't. It rained in the fall of '08. We've struck five poor years. In a bad year we get six or seven bushels to the acre and barely pull out. In a good year it's easy to cut 25 to 35 bushels here. In that kind of a year, with the rains coming right, raising wheat in this country is like shooting fish in a barrel. That's the kind of a year I've been figurin' on getting. If I once get it I'll tell old Rockefeller to go chase himself. But it's been a scrap. I've been licensed to say so-sage faster than I've been gettin' wheat. A fair year with, say, fifteen thousand acres in, would make me better than $200,000 clear profit, and a ringer, that's what I am waitin' for, a ringer, I'll clean up a good quarter of a million in one crop, and if several good crops follow one after another, as they have done in times past, and as they surely will again, you can put my name with the other millionaires in the Who's Who in America book, that book with the red covers and gold letters on the back. 'James N. Fike, millionaire wheat king of Kansas,' how'll that look, hey?"

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Frame New Rules for Federal Courts

WASHINGTON.—Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme court has appointed a committee to revise the rules of equity practice in the United States courts. The committee is composed of himself, Justices Lurton and Van Deventer, the only members of the Supreme court who have had experience on the bench of the United States circuit court, Justice Lurton since 1893 and Justice Van Devanter since 1903.

This move is the initial step in a great reform in federal court procedure, which has long been advocated by Justice White, who has often criticised the antiquated practice on the chancery side of these courts.

The present rules were promulgated in 1842. They are adopted in their entirety from the ancient rules of the high court of chancery of England, and are cumbersome and complicated in the highest degree, landing themselves to delays and embarrassing litigation rather than expediting cases.

It is significant that the rules from which the United States court rules of equity practice were adapted have long since been displaced in the English practice, and in almost every minor jurisdiction in the United States where they were in force in the last century have been abandoned for code procedure or amended in accord with modern ideas and practice.

Members of the bar in commenting on the proposed reform without exception commend it. They say that the rules as they now stand, if rigidly enforced, would involve litigation in an endless maze, and that the present rules have been tolerable only by reason of the disregard of many of them which have been found impractical of enforcement in modern procedure. Just in such cases they say the special or ders are issued from the suits are made to fit the individual case and thus the whole procedure is "up in the air" or in the "discretion of the court," which is in many cases just as bad.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

IN PRIESTHOOD FIFTY YEARS

The most remarkable civic demonstration ever given in honor of a clergyman in this country was that recently held in Baltimore in tribute to Cardinal Gibbons, the occasion being the celebration of the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood and the 25th anniversary of his elevation to the cardinals. The distinguished churchman in whose honor this remarkable celebration was held in seventy-seven years old. He was born in Baltimore, received his early education in Ireland, the land of his fathers, and after a collegiate and theological course in this country was ordained to the priesthood in 1861. His life since has been tirelessly spent in the service of religion. He traveled the Carolines as vicar apostolic, with the rank of bishop, when railroads were unknown and the bride path did duty for the road. Missionary life in that region has always been one of hardship and the future Cardinal had four years of it. In 1872 he was made bishop of Richmond and in 1877 was named as assistant to the archbishop of Baltimore, Hi. Rev. James Roosevelt Bayley, and succeeded to that see on the latter's death the same year. He was elevated to the cardinalate in 1886.

LEWIS AT WORK IN A MINE

After fourteen years as an officer of the miners' organization, Thomas L. Lewis has resumed work with n pick and shovel, although he was offered $10,000 n year as writer. He is No. 162—or, at least, that's what his check is numbered—and he is working in Room 13 in a mine near Bridgeport, Ohio, with his "buddy" of former years, Sly Price. Lewis was for three years secretary of the Ohio state organization, eight years national vice-president and three years national president.

"See for yourself if they are blistered," Lewis smiled, when asked if the work was not hard on his hands. Only a few scratches showed on the palms that for several years have wielded a pen instead of a pick.

"No, I am not tired," he continued. "The first day went hard with me, and my steps legged a trifle when I started home, but now I finish the day in good shape.

"I am going to stick to this work. I like it. I like to be with the men who trusted me with the most important office within their gift, and the lure of high salaries offered to me by one or two newspapers and magazines will not turn me from my purpose."

The pick and shovel Lewis used the first day were gifts from the miners at the Columbus convention, but they have been supplanted by regular tools purchased at a mine supply store in Bridgeport.

BROWN CHOSEN CHANCELLOR

He has been United States com missioner of education since 1906.

Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown of Washington, United States commissioner of education and former Michigan educator, was recently appointed chancellor of New York university to succeed the Rev. Dr. Henry Mitchell MacCracken, resigned.

Dr. Brown was born at Kiantone, Chautauqua county, New York, in 1861. His education was received at the Illinois Normal university, the University of Michigan and the University of Holle, in Germany, with the supplementary honor of the degree of LL. D. from both Columbia and Wesleyan universities.

His life work has been that of an educator, begun as teacher in public schools of Illinois and Michigan and afterwards as professor of science and art in teaching in the University of Michigan and University of California. He has published several works on educational subjects.

YANKEE ADMIRAL IN LONDON

When America's first dreadnought, the Delaware, steamed out of this harbor at New York on her way to England, she had on board Rear Admiral Charles E. Vreeland, who was duly accredited as naval representative of the United States at the coronation of King George V. He acted as naval aid to John Hays Hammond, special ambassador of this country in attendance at that notable event.

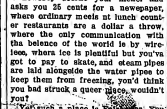
Admiral Vreeland has been in the navel service since 1886 and is one of the most popular men in the department. Choice fell on him because of his good record end the fact that he has been in the fullest confidence of the navy department for years. Admiral Davey was first selected for the duty. He is now seventy years old and he declined. Admiral Vreeland was logically the next man to be considered.

The Delaware is now our largest battleship and it happened that she was the biggest ship in line at the naval review. The vessel is of 20,000 tons displacement, has a speed of 21 knots an hour, can develop 26,000 horse power and cost $5,702,757. Her main batteries consist of 10 guns of 12-inch and 14 of 5-inch bore.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

City and State Face Tramp Question

NEW YORK.—How can the Empire state and New York city solve its tramp problem? The vagrants now in the state would form the entire population of a city the size of Albany. The Empire state, and especially its metropolis, is the mecca for this vast army of derelicts.



The jails, penitentiaries and almshouses are put to an expense of $2,000,000 annually in endeavoring to cope with the problem which has arisen through the existence of this undesirable element. But far more serious than this is the loss caused by the destruction of property, robberies, fires and kindred misdemeanors, which costs the state, the railroads and other private interests over $10,000,000 annually.

The immense number of tramps trespassing on railroads and the fatalities which overtake many of them may be judged from the fact that in a period of five years actually 23,554 trespassers were killed and 36,338 injured in the United States while stealing rides. Most of them were tramps, and at least one-fifth of the accidents took place in this state.

A large proportion of these vagrants are youths and young men whose ages rangs from sixteen to twenty-one. Reared in the cities their yearning for adventure, uncontrolled by proper home conditions, causes them to take the road.

Though one-half of these finelly quit the nomadic life and return home or settle down, the remaining half become inveterate tramps and gradually turn from vagrancy into a career of crime or semi-crime. A very large percentage, however, are adults and comprise every species, from men who will not or cannot work through chronic unfitness to those who owe innocent victims of downright adversity.

Alaska City Center of Queer Things

FAIRBANKS, Alaska.—If you should happen to drop into a town where a newsboy scorns your nickel and asks you 25 cents for a newspaper, where ordinary meals at lunch counter restaurants are a dollar a throw, where the only communication with the balance of the world is by wireless, where ice is plentiful but you've got to pay to skate, and steam pipes are laid alongside the water pipes to keep them from freezing, you'd think you had struck a queer place, wouldn't you?

Well, such a place is Fairbanks. You might well expect a town that's 2,500 miles north of Seattle, Wash., to be in perpetual zero weather, but you wouldn't expect a city located this far up in the ice belt to be so rich that it could afford a water system, not to mention the luxury of steam heat, which, while not only providing warmth for private homes of the city, needs no swaddle the fire plugs and keep them thawed out and ready for use during the long winter.

Seven months of the year are "dark" in Fairbanks, and during one of these months electric lights are burned on the streets 24 hours a day. If you want to read your morning newspaper at breakfast it must be by the aid of the electric bulb, and in what would be your goodby glare you have got to carry a lantern in order to distinguish the neighbor you meet in the street.

A common labor gets $5 a day and board in Fairbanks, and board is a factor worth considering. It is estimated that it costs about $2.25 to supply three meals a day here, so the laborer is making the handsome sum of $2.75 per day, or $42.50 per week. Even under these conditions laborers are scarce.

From October to April of each year Fairbanks is wrapped in a heavy sheet of ice and snow and the thermometer varies from 20 to 50 degrees below zero.

Nation Has a Great Naval Scrap Heap

THE fate of the battleship Texas, once the pride of the United States navy, recently sent to the bottom of Tangier sound, in Chesapeake bay, by the guns of her sister ships, as an experiment in naval science, has called public attention to the prodigious size of the nation's naval scrap heap.

Not only is the government spending more than $66,000,000 on its new Dreadnaughts now under construction, but it is throwing away annually millions of dollars' worth of battleships construction of the older type now considered out of date.

On the navel junk pile in the last ten years 36 vessels have been dumped. They cost the government to build, or to buy navdy built, $9,803,-495.50.

The ships which have been destroyed outright are but the smaller part of the number of abandoned naval vessels which total 35 in the past ten years. Every grenter part are those which, while still technically counted as a public asset, would be of no value in war and would never again be used for that purpose. They are in use as trolaning vessels for the naval reserves of various states. The monitor Amphitrite, destined for use at St. Louis, is a type of these ships which are useful only in providing possible future recruits for the service.

The Texas was the first modern battleship constructed for the navy. It was surpassed in speed by the Iowa, the Oregon, and other vessels in the days of Santiago, but its name was written as large as any on the page which records that day's fighting.

It was built now but a few years, according to the inexorable rules of the navy department, before the Oregon, Massachusetts, Indiana and Iowa follow the Texas as targets for the projectiles of newer vessels or are relegated to the ignominy of the junk heap.

Prosecution a Check to Mail Frauds

THE sleuths of the postoffice department are growing stiff in the joints from lack of exercise, the officials of the attorney-general's office are dozing at their desks, and the machinery that used to be grinding out fraud orders so merrily is rusting from disuse.

The world seems to be growing better, or at least that part of it which formerly indulged in so many get-rich-quick schemes seems to be less active than in days gone by, and the postoffice officials declare that it is all due to the vigorous measures taken by the present administration to stamp out public fraud and protect the unwary.

"Months have passed since we have issued a domestic fraud order," said Jesse Suter, the authorized publicity agent of the postoffice department, "whereas in former times scarcely a week passed without the issuance of one or more against individuals or firms who were fleecing the people. It is a matter of fact, the get-rich-quick schemers are coming to the conclusion that the postoffice administration will not 'stand for' them and that in consequence it will be healthier for them to keep within the bounds of the law.

"They know that if they conduct shady enterprises nowadays they face, not only the penalties of a fraud order, depriving them of the use of the mails, but also stand a very good chance of getting into the penitentiary.

"The only cases that we are called on to handle nowadays seem to be the mail for lotteries in foreign countries."

Maine Uncovering Has Been Gradual

ARMY engineer officers at Havana have estimated that it would be at least two months after work began on pumping out the water in the cofferdam about the battleship Maine in Havana harbor before an expert opinion could be formed as to whether it was an inside or outside explosion that sank the vessel.

With the water over the wreck lowered four feet, the top and sides of the wreck's afterdeck are in view. It has been expected that when the water was lowered enough to expose the top deck this would probably loom up as a bank of mud as the water in the harbor is very muddy and the vessel has been "collecting" deposits for 13 years. When work on the upper deck is completed there will be more pumping and more mud until the water is lowered to the deck below. Inspection at this deck will then be undertaken without undue haste. It is believed that the lower down the water goes the more difficult will be the work of clearing the mud away. The problem of inspection also will be made more difficult as the successive stages of pumping out progress as daylight will not penetrate into the hull of the vessel and work will have to be done with artificial light.

What can be saved of the Maine and what it is most expedient to do with the vessel can only be well determined when she is exposed to view. Many engineer officers fear she can never be floated and will have to be taken apart in sections if it is decided to save her at all. Other officers believe she will break and fall to pieces when the unwatering of the cofferdam gets well under way.

MAN WITHOUT A PAIN.

Hurrah for the man without a pain! If he is not the salt of the earth, then the earth must surely remain unsalted. He feels no inward burning necessity of breaking into newspapers with constant declamations on to the badness of men and things. His life is not full of suppressed resolutions as to the wickedness of everybody else, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean. He has no special yearning to ascend Chautauqua platforms and feed full the listening throngs with all the horrors of existence. In private life he is the citizen who looks after his family, who is regarded as a good neighbor and who gains and deserves the respect of all those who know him. In the business world he is the man who does his work without a lot of noise and wasted motion and thereby earns the gratitude of his associates or employers. In public life he is the man who sees that the business of government gets attended to and leaves to louder statesmen the honors of big headlines and Chautauqua lectureships. After hearing or reading the studied and labored complainings of the other variety, the thought of him is like the murmur of pleasant waters. It cools, refreshes and strengthens the jaded spirit. It reminds one that everything is far from being lost, that the world's work is still being efficiently done, that the republic is safe, and that the sun is still shining.

A Boston restaurant keeper kept a green turtle on its back in his window and was tried on a charge of cruelty to animals. A Harvard university professor testified that the turtle was more nearly related to the turtle than the fishes, but the defense took the ground that it was not an animal, but a fish, and the judge instructed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty. Whatever intellectual Boston may hold as to the status of the reptiles, there is no good reason why the laws forbidding cruelty to animals should not be broad enough to cover more than warm-blooded animals.

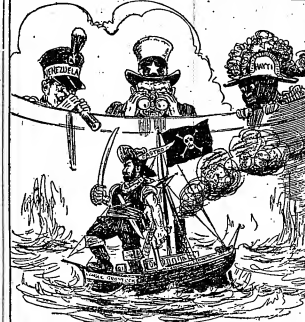
An Oak Park professor is advocating the establishment of n school in which the art and science of courtship may be taught. Good heavens! Has the man no knowledge of human nature? As soon as courtship is made a thing that people will have to study and work at nobody will wish to introduce in it. The way to make courtship popular—which seems to the Oak Park professor's object—is to enact a law prohibiting it.

The sick friend is serving useful purposes. He has long served as an excuse for the belated homefarer who has been sitting by his bedside. Now he is coming in handy for the speeding motorist who is hurrying to his dying bed. It would be a great shock to his loving friends if by some mischance this convenient scapegoat should suddenly recover.

That Pennsylvania farmer who took a club and proceeded to batter up an automobile whose driver refused to stop when the former's cattle became frightened, possibly acted contrary to law, but he had down in his generous ante of mind engendered in the public by autoists who decline to act reasonably on the road or who ignore the rights of pedestrians.

A savings bank official reports that a strange number of bogus coins find their way into the bank. Maybe a trick like that on a beby is more reprehensible than putting buttons in the contribution box.

A Harvard professor says Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" would be rejected if submitted to the editor of a modern magazine. Of course, its length would be against it at first sight.



The young Californian who sang, "I'd rather have fingers than toes" will be surprised to learn that a jury in Chicago has assessed the latter at exactly four times the value of the former.

An Ohio man beat his wife with a baseball bat because she had moved his bed during housecleaning time. She wouldn't have minded, perhaps, if he had gut mad enough to beat a rug or two.

FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

SPECIAL MESSAGE SENT TO CONGRESS ASKING FOR LEGISLATION TO STOP FRAUDS.

FRUITFUL LABELS SOUGHT

Urges That Action to Prevent Delusion of the Sick Be Taken by Amendment of Food Law—Shirley Introduces Bill on Subject.

Washington.—Death dealing drugs of the cure-all variety and their makers are severely condemned by President Taft.

In a message to congress the president scathingly arraigned the manufacturers of whot he denounced as "dangerous drug frauds" and urged congress to amend at this session the puro food and drug law to strengthen that oct in vital points of weakness recently pointed out by decisions of the United States Supreme court.

President Taft believes that unless the law is amended forthwith the country will egain be flooded by "injurious nostrums" and "cure-alls" which were common before the pure food law first was enacted.

The message was transmitted to both the senate and the house, and it was said that the letter body probably would take up the matter at an early date. Representative Shorley of Kentucky niready has introduced a bill bearing on the subject.

The president, in his message, calls attention to the provisions of the pure food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, designed to prevent the manufacture and shipment of "worthless nostrums labeled with misstatements of fact as to their physiological netion—misstatements false and misleading even in the knowledge of those who make them," and asserts that the low was received with general satisfaction and "has been generally enforced," more than 2,000 cases having been prepared for criminal prosecution under its terms. He continues:

"The Supreme court has held in a recent decision that the act does not cover the knowingly false labeling of nostrums as to curati-s effect or physiological action, and that inquiry under this sslutary statute does not by its terms extend in any case to the inefficiency of medicine to work the cures claimed for them on the labels.

"It follows that, without fear of punishment under the law, unscrupulous persons, knowing the medicines to have no curative or remedial value for the diseases for which they indicate them, may ship in interstate commerce medicine composed of substances possessing any slight physiological action and labeled as cures for diseases which, in the present state of science, are recognized as incurable.

"Fraudulent misrepresentations of the curative value of nostrums not only operate to delude purchasers, but are a distinct menace to the public health. There are some so credulous as sufferers from disease. The need is urgent for legislation which will prevent the raising of false hopes of speedy cures of serious ailments by misstatements of fact as to worthless mixtures on which the sick rely to their disease progress unchacked."

McCORMICK IS HEARD

HARVESTER HEAD REPEATS FUNK'S STORY OF FUND.

Alleged Solicitation of Contribution to $100,000 Expense Money Is Again Described.

Washington.—The secote special committee of eight, which is to make a second investigation into the election of Senator Lorimer, counsel of Illinois had Cyrus H. McCormick, president of the International Harvester company, as its first witness at the first hearing.

Mr. McCormick swore that Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the company, had told him his corporation had been invited by Edward Hines, president of the Hines Lumber company, to coontribute to a $100,000 fuod used in the election of William Lorimer.

"Mr. Fuok come to me in my office," said Mr. McCormick, "and said that Mr. Hines, of the Union League club in Chicago, had approached him on the subject of our company making a contribution. The object was to obtain e coo)tribution to a fund which was to be inede to recoup expenditures in connection with the elgction of Senator Lorimer. Mr. Funk told him that his suggestion could not be considered.

"I told him I was glad that he had declined, and that practically ended the fiedlend."

Asked if Mr. Fuok had mentioned any other persons in connection with the collection of the fund, Mr. McCormick replied that he had brought in the name of Edward Tilden, president of the National Packing company.

As to the editorial in the Chicago Record-Herald concerning the $100,000 fund, the witness said that about the time the article appeared Mr. Funk told bim he had given the facts to H. H. Kohlsaat, editor of that paper. He did not say that he had advised Mr. Kohlsaat he relieved of his pledge of secrecy.

"I did not think that Mr. Kohlsaat should go to jail," said Mr. McCormick, "and consequently advised that he be permitted to give the facts over to his information."

Mr. McCormick said that Funk had told him of a second interview with Hines, and that Hines had sought him out to tell him that he had not meant that his suggestion of the $10,000 contribution should be taken seriously.

"Do you not think that you should haya given the information in the provtons inquiry?" asked Chairman Dillingham.

"It did not seem to ms to be my duty to go before the committee," ha said; "I did not follow all the details."

BRIBE CASES ARE DROPPED

Direct Vote Bill Rejected.

Washington.—The house refused to accept the bill for direct election of senators in the form in which it passed the senate, and by a vote of 172 to 112 sent it to conference. The Bristow amendment was the only change made by the senate, and it war because of refusal to accept this amendment that the house voted for conference. The vote was on strictly party lines, the Republican—Selle of Tennessee—voting with the Democrats, and one Democrat—Burke of Wisconsin—with the Republicans.

CALL EX-GOV. YATES

ILLINOISAN IS WITNESS BEFORE LORIMER SENATE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

DENIES TALKING TO HINES

Editor Hinman of Chicago Testifies That He Believes That's Legislative Jack Pot Supported by Liquor Interests at Peoria.

Washington.—The Lorimer investigating committee of the United States senate was told by George W. Hinman, editor of the Chicago Inter Ocean, that there was a biennial Illinois legislative "jock pot" which derived a great portion of its support from the whisky interests at Peoria.

Mr. Hinman was called to explain editorials which had appeared in his paper relative to the various investigations of bribery of the United States senate of his friend, William Lorimer.

To Attorney Marble's questions, Mr. Hinman said he was a close friend of Senator Lorimer, but had received no money to be used in his election.

The witness was questioned at length in regard to the "jack pot" funds of the Illinois legislature.

Mr. Hinman said he had never talked with anyone who said he contributed to a "jack pot," operated one or received money from one. "But I believe there has been a 'jack pot' in every legislature of Illinois since I went to Illinois 12 years ago," he added.

"What do you mean by a 'jack pot?'" asked Senator Fletcher.

"A corruption fund."

Mr. Hinman showed some heat when the committee asked him about his business relations with Funk, Hines, Tilden and Lorimer.

"I ceased speaking to Mr. Funk about three years ago because he was too malignant an enemy to Mr. Lorimer," explained Mr. Hinman.

The witness admitted at first to answer if he had borrowed money from either Hines, Tilden or Lorimer, but said it was a question concerning his private business.

"Oh, well, I will answer under protest," he said after thinking it over. "On one occasion I borrowed $4,000 from Mr. Hines on three or four months' time."

"When?"

"Within the last eight or ten weeks."

Ex-Gov. Richard Yates of Illinois was the next witness. He denied that he was the person addressed as "governor" in the now famous telephone talk between the Grand Pacific hotel in Chicago and Springfield the morning of the Lorimer election.

He also said Edward Hines is said to have informed the "governor" that he had just left President Taft and Senator Aldrich at Washington and would be at the deadlock convention in a few days with money to elect Lorimer. Governor Deneen will now be asked if he was the one talked to.

The letter told of a letter he had written Senator Lorimer in which he had characterized Governor Deneen as a "liar." In reply to Senator Kenyon he said he had made the same statement to Governor Deneen in his office.

"Not using the shorter or uglier word," he added, "but there was no more scathing language used. I repeated a list of accepted bids, subject to revision for clerical errors.

"The bids above approximately 1,190 accapted bids. Of the $60,000,000 issue, bonds to the emount of $2,330,500 will go at 103 and upwards, $4,686,500 at 102.75 to 102.99; $11,019,500 at 102.50 to 102.74; $16,563,800 at 102.25 to 102.49, and $1,382,700 at 102.21 to 102.24.

"This means that of the whole issue, nothbng was sold for less than 102.21.

RECIPROCITY HAS A CHANCE

Situation in Senate Shifts When Farmers' Free List and Wool Bills Are Reported.

Washington.—Reciprocity will probably win. Another quick shift of the situation in the senate put the Democratic leaders in the finest possible attitude of favoring the commercial pact with Canada free of all amendments.

The necessities which brought about the coalition of Democrats and Republican Insurgents ceased to exist when Senator Penrose, chairman of the finance committee, though given 20 days in which to consider the farmers' free list and wool bills, reported them out with an unfavorable recommendation, and they took their place in the senate calendar.

Now standing between the farmers' free list and the pact is only the action where the senate may call them up for consideration at will, there is no longer any necessity to offer them as amendments to reciprocity in order to get a record vote.

TAFT SILVER FETE

THOUSANDS REJOICE AT WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

White House Lawn Is Convarted into a Fairyland—Hurldreds of Rich Presents Sent by Friends.

Washington.—A reception on the White House lawn brought the silver wedding celebration of the President and Mrs. Taft, the second that has been held in the executiva mansion, to n close.

Invitatloos had been sent to close to 12,000 persons, and while the official count of those who shook hands with the president was not given out, it was estimated that at least 5,000 persons were present.

Never in the history of the nation probably has such a function been held in Washington. The diplomatic corps, the United States Supreme court, the senate and the house of representativas, the departments of the government, the men who are high in political affairs of the country, the army, the navy and every walk of life almost were represented.

Possibly 16,000 people crowded about the tros fenco that surrounds the grounds and looked longingly at the electric display, the splashing fountains and the gay throng within.

The ceremony and the reception would begin at nlno o'clock, and promptly on the hour, to the strains of the wedding march, the President and Mrs. Taft came slowly down the staircase of the White House, preceded by the six presidential aids and followed by the cabinet. Out through the red room to the rear portico of the mansion came the bride and groom and out onto the lown, which has been converted into a veritable fairyland, the procession marched. They took their stand beaeath two trees just about the center of the lawn, whose branches were joined by an electric sign flashing "1886-1911."

Mrs. Taft surprised even those familiar with the improvement in health thet she has shown by remaining by the president's aide in the receiving line all the evening. She wore a gown of white satin, brocaded with silver flowers, with a court train. Miss Helen Taft, who was next at hand, wore a gown of pink satin with a tunic of pink chiffon.

Bill to Amend Act Goss In.

Washington.—Senator McCumber introduced a bill amending the pure food and drugs act to conform with the recommendation made to congress by President Taft.

WESTERN CANADA'S GOOD CROP PROSPECTS

YIELDS OF WHEAT WILL LIKELY BE 25 TO 30 BUSHELS PER ACRE.

In an interview with Mr. W. J. White, who has charge of the Canadian government immigration offices in the United States, and who has recently made an extended trip through the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in Western Canada. He said that every point he visited he was met with the one report, universally good crops of wheat, oats and barley. There will this year be a much increased acreage over last year. Many farmers, who had but one hundred acres last year, have increased their cultivated and seeded acreage as much as fifty per cent. With the prospects as they are at present, this will mean from $12 to $15 additional wealth to each. He saw many large fields running from 300 to 1,000 acres in extent and it appeared to him that there was not an acre of this but would yield from 20 to 25 or 30 bushels of wheat per acre, while the cat prospects might safely be estimated at from 40 to 70 bushels per ocre. In all ports of the west, whether it be Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, north and south, east and west, and in the districts where last year there was a partial failure of crops, the condition of all grain is universally good and claimed by most of the farmers to be from one to two weeks in advance of any year for the past ten or twelve years. It does not seem that there was a single foot of the ground that was properly seeded that would not produce.

There are those throughout western Canada who predict that there will be 200,000,000 bushels of wheat raised there this year, and if the present favorable conditions continue, there does not seem any reason why these prophesies should not come true. There is yet a possibility of hot winds reducing the quantity in some parts, but with the strongly rooted crops and the exhilarating anticipation thet the country has already been favored with, this probability is reduced to a minimum.

The prices of farm lands at the present time are holding steady and lands can probably still be purchased at the price set this spring, ranging from $15 to $20 per acre, but with a harvested crop, such as is expected, there is no reason why these same lands should not be worth from $20 to $25 per acre, with an almost absolute assurance that by next spring prices will still be a further advance in prices.

Mr. White says that these lands are as cheap at today's figures as in the country's proven worth as they were a few years ago at half the price even the cheapest land but a vagua idea of the producing quality of western Canada lands.

The land agents of the different towns along the line of railvcy are very active. A large number of acres are turned over every day to buyers from the different states in the south, where lands that produce no more are sold at from $150 to $200 per acre.

The homested lands are becoming scarcer day by day and those who are unable to purchase, preferring to homestead, are directing their attention to the park acres lying in the northerly part of the ceniral districts. It has been found that within these are somewhat more difficult to bring under the subjugation of the plow, the soil is full of productive ae in the districts farther south. They possess the advantage that the more plentiful growth of trees indicates; that there is on these lands an open acreage of from fifty to seventy per cent of the whole and the balance is made up of groves of poplar of fair size, which offer shelter for cattle, and in the greater are of it goodhold strength and plentiful, bringing about a more certain crop of mixed farming than can be carried on in the more open districts to the south.

The immigration for the past year has been tha greatest in the history of Canada and it is keeping up in record shape. The larger number of those, who will go this year will be those who will buy lands nearer the line of railways, preferring to pay a little higher price for good location than to go back from the line of railways some 40 or 50 miles to homestead.

Mr. White has visited the different agencies throughout the United States and ha found that the correspondences at the various offices bes largely increased, the number of callers is greater than ever.

Any one desiring information regarding western Canada should apply at once to tha Canadian Government Agent nearest him for a copy of the "Last Best West."

Declining With Thanks.

A young woman prominent in the social set of an Ohio town tells of a young man there who had not familiarized himself with the forms of polita correspondence to the fullest extent. When, on one occasion, he found it necessary to decline an invitation, he did so in the followiog terms:

MONEY FOR SCHOOLS

PLAN FOR BUILDINGS AT ST. ANTHONY PARK, MORRIS AND CROOKSTON OUTLINED.

CLASS ROOM FOR 500 MORE

Enrollment Will Be Limited to the Accommodations to Prevent Overcrowding—To Increase Teaching Force.

St. Paul.—To meet almost overwhelming increase in enrollment at the St. Anthony Park institution and the Morris and Crookston schools, Dean A. F. Woods, of the state agricultural college, has announced plans for immediate improvements and additions at these three places aggregating a total of $606,500 to come out of the $1,300,000 appropriated by the last legislature for buildings and maintenance during the next two years and some from appropriations made during the previous session.

To Get Ready for More Students.

By means of improvements and additions at St. Anthony Park the dormitory accommodations will be increased by fifty for boys and fifty for girls and the class room capacity, when a new Mechanic Arts building is completed, will be extended 25 per cent and probably more.

The improvement at Crookston will increase the capacity from 150 to 350 and those at Morris will raise the capacity from 100 to 300.

Following is the list of improvements to be made at St. Anthony Park:

Buildings at St. Anthony Park

New Mechanic Arts building	$240,000
Dairy barns	5,000
Additions to dairy barns	2,500
Addition to milk house	15,000
Power plant improvements	15,000
Addition girls' dormitory	17,000
Addition boys' old dormitory	17,000
Addition dining hall dormitory	20,000
Hog barn	3,500
Grading lighting, fencing	10,000
General repairs	15,000
Total	$376,000

Work to Start at Once.

Plans for the new Mechanic Arts building already have been drawn and the site has been fixed 150 feet south of the new administration building. Work will commence within a few weeks. The engineering departments as well as the manual training departments will be housed in this structure, which is planned to give class room and laboratory accommodations for more than 500. It really will be in two parts, one containing the shops and the other the class rooms.

The new girls' dormitory will be enlarged and finished, adding fifty to its capacity. The sum of $20,000 will be expended on the old boys' dormitory, and $20,000 will be put in additions to the dining hall dormitory, increasing the accommodations for boys by fifty, as well as the dining hall capacity.

Changes to Be Made at Morris.

Following are the improvements at Morris:

New dormitory	$50,000
Girls' dormitory	50,000
Power plant	25,000
Public fence, etc.	20,000
Total	$165,000

At present the capacity of the Morris school is limited to about 100. By the building of the two new dormitories, one for girls and the other for boys, there will be room for fully 300 and possibly more.

$65,000 for Crookston School.

At Crookston the following improvements will be made:

Addition to Mechanic Arts building	$10,000
Class room, farm dwellings	15,000
New science hall	40,000
Total	$65,000

With this expenditure Dean Woods estimates the capacity will be raised from 150 to fully 250, although the appropriation for the new science hall does not become available until 1912.

"It is probable we will put the enrollment limit at the State Agricultural college for the college students and the school students at 1,500," said Dean Woods. "Last fall we were swamped with students and in some instances girls had to be taken care of on cots in the corridors of the girls' dormitory, while in the men's building one persistent student slept several nights in a bathtub until lodging could be found for him outside the institution.

"The ratio of instructors to students has run about one to twenty-six and it should be one to fifteen, approximately. We hope later on to correct this."

Big State Ditch Projected.

St. Paul.—"All state ditch work in Aitkin county will be completed by Sept. 1," said George A. Ralph, state's drainage engineer. "Preparations are well under way for the construction of ditch 95 in the western part of Roseau county. It will be one of the largest the state has ever dug, as the main ditch and the laterals are over ninety-five miles in length, and the specifications call for an excavation of 1,900,000 cubic yards."

Street Closing Compromise.

Winona.—Two propositions designed to compromise Bishop Heffron's Seminary street closing controversy were submitted at the meeting of the city council and action was deferred for two weeks, at the request of one faction of those people interested in adjusting the matter. One of the propositions came from joint committees representing the Board of Trade and the Merchants and Business Men's association and the other in the form of resolutions from the Winona Street drive association.

COLORED OLEO IS PROHIBITED

NEW STATE LAW GOES INTO EFFECT JULY 1.

Cafes, Hotel, Etc., Using Oleo Must Do Stats on Bill of Fare or Waiter.

St. Paul.—The new state oleomargarine law will go into effect July 1. The law not only prohibits the sale of colored oleomargarine in any form or manner, but permits the sale of uncolored oleomargarine only when the customer has full knowledge of what he is getting.

The bill was introduced by Senator H. N. Benson, of St. Peter, and had hard sledding. It prohibits the sale of any substitute for butter which is colored in any tint of rather. It does not help if the manufacturer uses half or two-thirds cream—it is against the law to sell it if it looks like butter.

When uncolored oleomargarine is sold, the tub or package must have the word "oleomargarine" in a prominent place in big type. The retailer in turn must deliver the product to his customer in wrappers having stamped in plain type the word "oleomargarine" and also the name of the retailer and the manufacturer. The use of any descriptive matter intended to mislead the customer, such as "Jersey butterine" or "country rolls" or "dairy rolls" is prohibited.

Another section prohibits the proprietor of any hotel, dining room, dining car, drinking place, cafe, bakery, boat, lumber camp, mining camp, railroad camp, boarding house, hospital or other place where guests, boarders or patients are served food for pay from serving any substitute for butter unless the words "oleomargarine used in place of butter" are on the bill of fare or posted on the walls of the room.

The penalty for violation of the law is a fine of from $50 to $100 or a jail sentence of thirty days, with higher penalties for a second offense.

GIVES MANUFACTURERS' GAIN.

Mankato and Stillwater Show Healthy Growth in Census Period.

Washington.—A preliminary statement of the general results of the thirteenth United States census of manufacturers of the city of Mankato shows increases as follows: 37 per cent in the number of salaried officials and clerks; 26 per cent in the salaries and wages; 17 per cent in the number of establishments; 11 per cent in the value added by manufacture; 11 per cent in the average number of wage earners employed during the year; 9 per cent in the value of products; and 8 per cent in the cost of materials used.

The decreases were 38 per cent in the miscellaneous expenses and less than 1 per cent in the capital invested.

There were 63 establishments in 1909, as compared with 54 in 1904; an increase of 9, or 17 per cent.

The value of products in 1909 was $3,723,000, and $3,422,000 in 1904; an increase of $301,000, or 9 per cent. The average per establishment was approximately $59,000 in 1909, and about $64,000 in 1904.

The value of products represents their selling value or price at the plants as actually turned out by the factories during the census year.

A summary for Stillwater, shows increases as follows: 16 per cent in the capital invested, 11 per cent in the cost of material used, and 5 per cent in the number of establishments. There were decreases in all the other items.

There were 38 establishments in 1909, as compared with 36 in 1904, an increase of 2, or 5 per cent. The value of products in 1909 was $2,256,000 and $2,784,000 in 1904, a decrease of $98,000, or 4 per cent.

NEEDLE BATH FOR TRAMPS.

Soap, Too, Figures in Means of Wisdom to Get Rid of Hoboes.

Winona.—The needle bath will be used by the City of Winona as a means to induce tramps to give the city a needle bath on their perambulations through the country. Mayor Julian R. Schroth a week ago recommended that some means be taken by the council to put a stop to the visits of the wanderers.

The street committee turned down a stone pile as being an expensive and unprofitable way of securing additional stone, but recommended the needle bath, and this will be installed without delay in connection with the tramp room at the police station.

Tramps hereafter coming to Winona will be compelled, before being given a night's lodging, to take a needle bath. They will be placed in the needle bath department, and then water will be turned on them in fine streams from all directions. After such treatment it is not believed they will come this way again.

In connection with the bath, the tramps will be compelled also to use soap.

BANKERS AT BEMIDJI.

Minnesota Association Holds Its Annual Outing.

Bemidji.—The Minnesota Bankers' Association held its annual meeting in this city, a goodly number of the members being present. President L. A. Huntoon of Moorhead was in the chair and the speakers on the program included James T. Tawney, of Winona, Joseph Chapman, of Minneapolis, Kelsey S. J. D. BREN INDICTED

DEPOSED TREASURER OF UNIVERSITY IS CHARGED WITH GRAND ARCENY.

HIS ROBBERY TALE IN IGNORED

Funds Totaling $21,616.31 Make Up Alleged Shortage in Accounts of University of Minnesota.

Minneapolis. — Joseph D. Bren, deposed treasurer of the University of Minnesota, was indicted by the grand jury, the charge being grand larceny of $21,616.31 of university funds. Before voting this indictment on in the summer making a thorough investigation of the university financial situation.

In returning its indictment the grand jury took no cognizance of the money Mr. Bren has returned to the university to cover as he said, any shortage which might be found. The county attorney explained to the jury that when Mr. Bren did not produce this money on demand of the proper authorities he immediately became liable to prosecution and the fact that some money was paid over to cover shortages would not alter the case.

Robbery Money Included.

The gross amount named in the indictment includes the $13,826.79 of which Mr. Bren said he was robbed by highwaymen near the university, the $4,990 which so mysteriously appeared in a tin box in Mr. Bren's office days after his arrest, and the $710 and $360 he turned over to the university to cover shortages. This total $19,886.79. The difference between this figure and the $21,676.31 is the additional shortage the examiners report is shown by his books.

Bankar Testifies.

C. W. Ferwell, a vice president of the Northwestern National bank, was the first to take up before the jury the burden of the long story of incriminations which the police have to tale against Bren. It was he, according to his testimony, who accepted an account which Bren opened at the bank under the name of W. J. Bryant. This is the account used by Bren for wheat speculations in which he lost close to $6,000 in a few months.

One important point in Mr. Farwell's testimony was that Bren gave as Bryant's address that of the Bren home at 2439 Grand Avenue. Then appeared before the jury Frank Starr, deputy public examiner, and he staggered under the weight of dozens of books brought from the university.

Next came Miss Gussie Ryen, clerk in Bren's office at the university. She was asked about that $4,990 which so mysteriously appeared in the tin box. Also there was D. W. Sprague, whom Mr. Bren succeeded at the university, and he gave some testimony of importance as to the books. C. E. Decker, secretary to the board of regents and purchasing agent at the university, added his words.

To the prosecutors the Bren case itself is no longer of such great importance as developments of another nature which are persistently promised for the future. Those are all along the line of a general and sweeping investigation which, it is promised, will reveal much which needs reformetion.

BULL ATTACKS MAN.

Animal's Lack of Horns Only Salvation of Victim.

Brainerd.—Tossed into the air by a vicious bull and stomped on by the beast, Harvey Williams, aged 31, single, toy at the mercy of the animal with his collar bone and several ribs broken. Tiring of the attack, the bull left him and Williams made his way to the home of his employer, George Wetherbee, of Crow Wing station, eight miles south of Brainerd.

Harvey Williams is the son of Mrs. Della Williams, residing in Southeast Brainerd, and had been working four days for Mr. Wetherbee. In the evening he went out into the pasture and when between two brush piles knocked ten rods from the fence, the bull, which previously always appeared to be a gentle animal, suddenly turned and attacked him before he had a chance to run. The beast has no horns.

KILLS WIFE AND SURRENDERS.

Quarrel Because She Wanted to Feed His Stepson.

Pierz.—Theodore Martin, aged 30, five miles west, shot and killed his wife.

A son by her first husband visited home, leaving in the evening. The mother wanted to give him lunch. Martin objected, a quarrel followed and he shot her in the abdomen and head, then went to Little Falls and gave himself up to the sheriff.

MANY FISHERMEN PAY.

Stats May Get as Much as $10,000 From Non-Residents.

St. Paul.—It is estimated that nonresident fishermen will contribute between $8,000 and $10,000 to the state fund for the propagation of fish.

The Game and Fish commission sent out more than 8,000 non-resident fishing licenses, and several of the counties have already exhausted their supply and have sent in orders for more.

BRILLIANT PLAYING OF CHICAGO CUB.

Jimmy Doyle, Claver Third Baseman.

Speaking of shoes, Jimmy Doyle of the Cubs is passing through all the thrills of filling those of a star, and Jimmy Doyle of the Cubs is not any more shy on filler than was Heinie Zimmerman of the Cubs. Doyle is playing in Zimmy's old position, third base. Zimmy in turn has moved southwest on the diamond and is covering J. Evers' old territory, second, and neither Zimmy nor Doyle loss in luster in comparison with the respective personages whose shoes they are now filling.

Hearsey has it that the shoes of a star are rather incoherent in shape, and ersatz in size, and generally discomforting to any strange wearer. But third bess covered by Doyle is not a widely different institution to third base covered by Zimmerman. Doyle opened the gate for opportunity the first time he looked wistful and copped his present position. It was the first time he was given a chance this season of doing other than the unprofitable pastime of officiating as a wall flower.

CARDINALS WILL BEAT REDS

So Says Manager Roger Bresnahan of St. Louis Nationals—Has Confidence in His Men.

Meneger Roger Bresnahan of the Cardinals says that his club is going to come close to beating the Cincinnatis out in the National league race. Bresnahan thinks that his club would have finished much higher last season and "Stats," Sellee, his star southpaw, not been "in dutch" for several weeks.

Sallee is admittedly as good as any southpaw the league has seen in years when he is on his good behavior. "Slats" has one of those "I-don't-care" dispositions and frequently has runins with his manager.

As a result "Slats" spent considerable time under suspension last season. This year "Slats" is swirling the best game of his career, and is satisfied at last. He trimmed the Giants. That does Salles more good than winning a dozen ordinary games.

The rest of the St. Louis pitchers are strong, according to Manager Bresnahan. He looks for Harmon to have a great season, and Bob has a retiling good start. Steels, "Bres" says, is going to be a wonder, and Guyer, Golden and Lendermilk will win a bunch of games.

Bresnahan says that Golden is the "king hard luck pitcher of heseball." Golden has won but one game to date and has been beaten seven times. The Cardinals have failed to tally in three of these seven defeats, while Golden has held his opponents to less then three runs just five times.

Among the Baseball Players

Bebs Adems came back.

Still the cry is for an eerlier start for games.

Maddenism seems to be the only star to last.

Bobby Wallace has picked up another slugger in Bowan.

Ernie Oritz, the new Cnb pitcher, is another of George Huf's products.

That shaking up Charlie Doofs gave his team evidently was a good move.

An hour and seventeen minutes for a ball game is the season record for spoed.

Perhaps the only way to hsat the Chicago teame is to put the men out of commission.

Incidentally, Manager Duffy's men have played fewer games than any team in the league.

How does it happen that a man who scores all round the bases on a hit is given only a single?

Jimmy Sheckard is having the best year of his career, and he is like wine—he gets better with age.

Jack Coombe of the Athletics is making up lost time. He is trying to win every game he pitches.

Boston Red Sox are again being shaken up. No wonder the Red Sox never got anywhere above third.

Harry Steinfeldt has been forgotten. Jimmy Doyle is filling his shoes to the satisfaction of the West Side rooters.

The papers are starting to give Clark Griffith his knockout drops at last. Many a good ball player has been driven from Redland in the same way.

WILD NIGHT WITH WADDELL

Topsy Hartsel Describes Pleasant and Tumultous Evening He Spent With Rube.

Topsy Hartsel.

"It was my forluns once," says Topsy Hartsel, of the world's champion Athletics, "to spend a pleasant and tumultous evening with G. Edward Waddell, more generally known as 'Rube,' and, at the sems time in the zenith of his big league fame. Just once, and only once, I never cared for any more of the same, thank you.

"The Athletics were just swinging into the championship of 1906, thanks in a great measure to the glorious pitching of the Rube, and he was one of the most popular citizens of Philadelphia. This particular evening he approeched me and explained that we could have the time of our lives, if we felt no inclined. First of all, said he, we would go to supper. We did, but the supper was interrupted to some extent, because Mr. Waddell, happening to meet a men in the dining room whom he did not like, smote him over the head with a whitefish, a proceeding which seemed to be somewhat outside the limits of one's menu.

"After supper Mr. Weddell said he would take me beck of the scenes of a certein theater, where melodrama is the reage. I had never been behind the curtain and was delighted, more so, when the stage hends, all recognizing Rube, treated us with great honor and courtesy. The play was a wild western thing, chockful of shooting. As we cepse into the dim recesses behind the stage, one of the few quiet minutes of the show was taking place—the here was just looking into the eyes of the heroine and telling her how much he loved her. Not a sound broke the tense silence, and just then Rube, picking up a gun that was standing reedy for the villain, pulled the trigger.

"It cracked the love scene, and the stage hends threw Mr. Weddell out. And I went with him.

"They are not gentlemen in there," said Mr. Waddell. 'Let's go to the ——— theater, where Howard Hoft is playing. He's my pal.'

"So we went to another house, and again we got behind the scenes. Rube was popular—honest, he was. If you remember Howard Hall's old play, 'The Man Who Dared,' you will remember that a den of lions furnished the thrills. The cage was standing beck in the wings, and Mr. Waddell, in his merry way, insulted one of the lions. Just as Rube grabbed the lion by the tail, the beast swung round and struck—and knocked a peg in the Rube with his sleeve ripped off and a big red streak in his arm. And scats we were thrown out in the alley.

"Topsy,' said Rube, 'don't forget, my son, we had a few with a couple of guys that said Connie Mack was a nogood son of a hyene, and one of them smashed me with a knife when I defanded Connie's reputation. You've got a black eye—that'll maks the ploy look good strongre. I guess we can touch him for $20 each if we tell it good.'

"I never went out for a social evening with Mr. Waddell any more. His ideas of diversion are too strenuous for a man like me."

SOUND DOOM OF LIVELY BALL

August Herrmann, Chairman of National Commission, Sees Speedy Retirement of Cork Center.

The slaughter of pitchers by batters of the National and American leagues soon will be checked by the retirement of the new cork centered ball, according to August Herrmann, chairman of the national commission and president of the Cincinnati club of the National league.

A movement already has been started for the relief of the moundsmen, who have feced a terrific bombardment of safe hits since the introduction of the new ball. A circular letter mailed to all directors and officials of the American and National leagues asking for expressions of opinion regarding the continued use of the new ball was received by Mr. Herrmann the other day.

"I think it will be but a short time until a ball of a less lively pattern will be in use," said Mr. Herrmann. "The present ball makes the games too one-sided and uncertain. I think the cork-centered ball as now manufactured soon will be relegated to the shelf."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $2.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $2.50.

Entered as Second-class mail matter April 20, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam, Minn., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The speech of Senator Knute Nelson, against the Reciprocity bill made a profound impression in Washington and throughout the east.

Hon. D.P. O'Neil will spread the wings of the American Eagle at Clearbrook July 4th. If he tells what the last legislature did not accomplish, the celebration will last two, or three days.

Roosevelts indorsement of old Taft will have about as much affect among the North Western farmers, in the next campaign, as it had for his New York congressman in the last campaign. They will listen to "Teddy" talk but will all vote for the other fellow.

With the mayor of Cass Lake under arrest, as the leader of the northern Minnesota bank robbers, and the county Attorney of Beltrami county resigning, after refusing to prosicute the gang, now under arrest, it would seem that the officials must look "out" among the leaders of society up in that county.

It appears that our papers is getting to be so "yellow" to please the Thief River Falls Times. They do not understand the situation. If they did they would know that we could not use strong language enough and send our paper through the mail. We intend to treat gentlemen, as gentlemen, but when we go after chicken thieves and little sneaks, that is sneaking around trying to stab us in the dark, we always use a double barrel shot gun loaded with rock salt, so it will sting when it strikes them. However if your are looking for a chance to indorse dirty work in the newspaper business "dig in," and help them out, and if you are looking for a shot you can get it.

There is no use of agitating the consolidation of schools in this part of the county until we get in our ditches and get roads. When there is any movement to consolidate in this part of the county you can bet it will center in Highlanding, where the records show that we have the biggest country school in the county. The only district on the eleven townships that has maintained an eight months school and got special state aid. And this has been done with nearly one half of the real estate in the district homestead land, with no taxes against it, while next year all the land will be put on the tax list. If Littlmore can get Swansons notice published correct by next May, and we are not going to back up and move to Erie by a long shot. We do not understand how Mostue has been led into this, mean it was through an impression that some of our north side people gave him the idea that they were very anxious to build up Erie enterprises, instead of their homes, but all the people are not bulls that say in this district, if they had been, our creamery would have been at Erie. No if Littlmore and Mostue want a life school to move out to Erie, they might get one in Thief River Falls, but they can't have the Highlanding school, and any agitation at this time for any such moves will only stir up a dirty row, in which some one is sure to get the worst of it, as we will throw brick bats at anyone that tried to injure this school.

The DesMoines, Iowa Capital, a newspaper published at Des Moins Iowa, has taken a poll of the Republican editors of that state, and finds them overwhelmingly against the Reciprocity Treaty. Where can Taft get his support for another term?

If that Canada treaty should pass, every loyal editor of the Northwest should run a out of Taft steady, and under it these words. "Here is the thing that makes wheat so cheap, and dear at the same old price."

Rubenjiarre's Style of Dress.

Rubenjiarre's manner, of dress, upon all the period when the demagogues affected the slovenliness and disorder of indigence in order, in failing the people, was clean, decent and precise as that of a man, who respects himself in the eyes of others. His white powdered hair, turned up in rouleaux, crimped his temples; a bright blue coat buttoned over his hips, open over the breast to display a white vest, short yellow colored breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles, formed his ineffable costume during the whole of his public life. It was said that he desired by this, never varying the style or color of his garments to make the same impression in the sight and imagination of the people as a medal of his face would have caused.—Lamartine's "History of the Girondists."

Very Soothing.

"I don't know what I am going to do with that kid of mine. He's always getting into fights. I jerked him up for it the other day. 'What do you mean by fighting on the public streets like this?' I asked

"'Well,' he said, 'Jimmy Montgomery said you were my father.'

"'Well, ain't I your father?'

"'I s'pose you are, but a feller don't want it thrown up to him right in front of a crowd.'"—Boston Traveler.

A Taste For Soap.

Very few of the queerest of tastes can beat that of the Misses Prescott, of whose life in Rome Mrs Hugh Fraser tells in "A Diplomatist's Wife In Many Lands." She says that he used to keep a cake of soap on his writing table and dabble in it constantly, saying, when he was remonstrated with, that people should be clean inside as well as out."

Most Important.

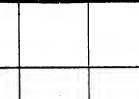
George—What can be the matter? The telegram says, "Come home at once." I must fly.

George as he arrives home two hours later—What on earth is the matter, dearest?

Young Wife—The baby said "Dad-dah"—Exchange.

Where His Interest Lay.

Excited Mississippian—Your wife's just had a scrimish accident; thrown from car which ran over a dog. Bones tackedly— Was it a fox terrier with black spots on his shoulders?



Minding Her One.

Mabel—That story you just told is about fifty years old. Maude—And you haven't forgotten it to tell that time!—Toledo Blade.

To resent kindly rebuke is not a sign of spirit, but of stupidity.

Judges' Wigs.

The wig is only worn by English barristers to give them a more official appearance, and no one can say that it fails in this respect. The custom was originated by a French judge in the seventeenth century when, happening to lose a particular wig one day, he found it gave him such a stern and dignified appearance that he decided to get one for himself and wear it at all times, in court. This he did, and the result was so satisfactory from a legal point of view that not only judges, but barristers also, took up the custom throughout Europe.—London Graphic.

"The Only Thing That Will Relieve Neuralgia."

The piercing pains of Neuralgia, which often follows a bad cold or La Grippe, are frequently almost unbearable and few medicines afford any relief to the sufferer.

I am a rural mail carrier and have been a user of the Dr. Miles' medicines for years.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills can't be beaten. They are the only thing I have found that will relieve my neuralgia and I have tried most everything, besides medicine from the doctor. I am willing to tell anyone what the Anti-Pain Pills did for me."

Spider Racing.

Lord Devon's property was greatly impoverished by the twelfth earl, who squandered nearly his entire fortune and rightly embarrassed the entailed property. He was addicted to a most singular form of gambling, namely, spider racing, which he played with the last Marquis of Hastings and the eighth Duke of Bedford. Each player selected a spider, which was placed in the table, and then the latter was gently tapped from underneath. The warmth caused the insects to run, and the spider which got to the edge first won. But spiders are clannish creatures, and it would frequently happen that a spider which was after the edge of the table and the winning goal, quite back, traverse the table in all directions and lose its basket the thousands of pounds at nearly won. Lord Devon, Lord Hastings and the Duke of Bedford each by them abandoned himself to this strange vice, which contributed in no small degree to the ruin of the two former.—New York

Again we arise to remark; we told you so.

Mr. Louis L. Roth, of Stark treather N. D and Mr. M. A. Benson of Thief River Falls were visiting S. L. Holm this week, and expressed themselves as well pleased with this part of the country. They returned to Thief River Falls yesterday with a sail boat, down the Red Lake River.

We have the agency of the State Farmer Mutual Hail Insurance Co., of Waseca, and will insure crops against loss by hail at the rate of $5, a hundred, or to make it plain we bet you one hundred dollars to five dollars, that there will not be any hail. Call and see us, as it is safer to let a rich company share your risk.

Gilbert Hoove, Hanson Gigstad and County surveyor C. H. Martz are up Viewing ditches this week. We are like the farmer that told the young Dr. that they did not want a man to practice, but a man to doctor. We have had about enough practicing, what we want is a ditch digger, from Diggerville, to get in and dig them ditches contracted for p.d.q.

Erie will Celebrate July 4th, in grand style. They are building a large bowery and will have first class Music for dancing afternoon and evening. A matched game of base ball in the afternoon, Erie vs Lillo, for a $10, purse. A good program of sports in the afternoon. Grand Display of Fire works in the evening.

All come to Erie July 4th, and have a good time.

Erie and Crookston will both have big celebrations July 4th.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter McAndress will entertain a number of neighbors and friends July 4th.

The farmers clubs of Highlanding and Kratke will picnic in the groves of John Quirk and James O'Brien

We received, yesterday the entire Rhoda poker "jack pot", amounting to two dollars and fifty cents. The next time they want a little game they will have to use matches.

More About Ditching.

We have sent for a complete list of all the taxpayers on ditch No. 47, and as soon as we get it, we shall call a meeting of all the taxpayers on the ditch. We will then organize, and appoint, one two, or three men, from among our number to look after OUR interests. We want them to have a copy of all proceedings had on the ditch and a copy of the Engineers print, showing depth of ditch, where the dirt is to be put on the side, and how the road is to be built. Then we want to see to it that the work is done within the time it was contracted to be done and according to contract. Is it not fair, that the men who must pay for the work have the looking after it? Or must we go way back and sit down, and have the work that we must pay for done when, and in the way Mr. Contractor pleases?

ROLAND LOCALS.

Mr. Moskaito has been rather tiresome lately.

Mrs. Normando and sister Carrie returned to Red Lake Falls last Saturday.

Mr. Gust Iverson is helping the butter maker at the Clearwater creamery during the rush.

Wedding bells are still ringing and tomorrow night Axel Gustafson and Miss Annie Florence are to be married.

Mrs. Sheilld and daughter was down to be present at the Alrick Short wedding.

The Clearwater Congregation are going to build a new church, this summer.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Wichterman and daughter Alice, from Trail City were up to the Alrick and Short wedding.

Miss G. Gunderson spent Sunday with Miss Anniebell Rolandson.

Willing to Do Honor.

Phil May, the great English artist, earned his first fame in Australia. One day a broken down minister applied to him for charity, and May engaged him as a model. As a joke he also demanded that his eighty-year-old pensioner agree to leave him his skeleton when he died. When May left Australia he called his model in. "You've played me a dirty trick," said May, "by swindling me out of that skeleton. I could have bought one to order and cheaper for half the money you've cost me." The old fellow, ashamed of his base ingratitude to his best and most patient friend, answered: "Don't be angry with me, Mr. May. It's not my fault. I meant to keep my word. Stay in Sydney a few months longer and give me another chance to show you that I am a man of honor."

The Bible as a Detective.

The Bible was used until quite recent years for the detection of thieves. Dr. Jessopp told in 1882 how there were still persons living who had witnessed the ordeal to which an East Anglian woman subjected his servants when his cash box was missing. He ordered them all into his bedroom and hanged them around the walls. From the center of the ceiling hung the rope used to tower coffins into the churchyard graves, wound round a Bible from the leaves of which projected the church door key. This was sent spinning round, and the one at whom the key pointed when it stopped was proclaimed as the thief. Happily the man thus marked out was able to prove an alibi. But this did not convince the servants that the test was a bad one. They only concluded that the thief was not there.—London Chronicle.

Ines' Claim

BY IZOLA FORRESTER

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Who's the kid in ruffles?"

Lewis turned quickly at the question. He had been so busy answering the agent from the Poncas that his companion had passed unnoticed. Now, at a glance, the new rancher at Ajados took in the general get-up of one who he knew must be a neighbor.

Harry turned likewise, and smiled at him guilelessly.

"It is," Lewis returned, briefly. "That was taken in camp near Sequoia, in California. I had a piece over there last year."

"Seems like I've seen the girl before up this way."

"Hardly. She's an easterner."

"Is she? What's her name?"

Lewis looked over at Hawks, the agent, with lazy good nature.

"Why don't you introduce your friends, Hawks?"

"Oh, I can introduce myself, if that's what troubles you," broke in the big chap. "I'm Burty Axtell, Channing's outfit—next to yours. That sure does look like a kid that's been handling claim northeast of us. She's a girl from the east, too."

Lewis dismissed the matter simply by not replying. He bent over the boundary map the agent had brought over, and went on with his work. The words of the big, blue-eyed youngster from Channing's never even lingered in his memory. The very idea of comparing Ines with any "kid," as he had expressed it up in these heaven forsaken hills. He grinned once, thinking of her face if she knew of the comparison.

He had met her at Sereníta the previous year, a slim, lovely Californie girl, who seemed to embody all the glamour and dreamy charm of her native state in her own personality.

Sitting Beneath the Spruces.

He had loved her from the first, and had at least had the wit and knowledge not to tell her of it, not to force himself on her. She could not understand how he, a fortuneless chap with only his wits to travel on and a boundless ambition to buoy him up, had landed at the gorgeous summer home of the Harringtons. Billy Harrington had been his pal at Berkeley, that was all, and when they heard he had come west to hunt luck they had simply been kind enough to recall the old days and send him out an invitation to spend a week or two at Sereníta.

The snapshot Billie had given him from his own collection. He loved it there, taken leaning against a rock, with the suggestion of the great redwoods back of her, and her dear, fair sunny with happy smiles.

No, he had not told her he loved her. Where was the use? To give a girl who was naturally expecting wealth in her future husband's category of virtues, a chance to laugh and turn him down.

He turned around. Burty's shadow fell across the open doorway.

"I didn't want to speak out before that pin-headed, knock-kneed college from the Poncas," he remarked casually. "But I think you're either an infernal liar or an awful fool. Is that the truth, so to speak, friend and neighbor. That girl there is in big trouble, and if you do know she's you're a blasted dog not to get into your buckskin boots and come where she lives."

"How do you know that I know her?" demanded Lewis.

"Because," said Burty calmly, and effectively, "there's a snapshot of you nailed to the wall of her cabin, and I knew you as soon as I ever laid eyes on you."

Lewis gasped. Not a word did he say until both were in the saddle riding northeast from the valley, straight up into the hills above Ajados; then he asked: "What's the trouble?"

"She's sick, that's what. She ain't been strong ever since she came out here in the spring, and the summer work's laid her up. She's got one of the women from Channing's to help her, a half-breed chink, and she's trying to be game and stick out her time and hold the claim down."

"Why did she take it up?" Lewis stared ahead of him. "Why should she, of all women in the world, take up a homestead claim."

"Ask her yourself," retorted Burty. "She don't like me. I worked for her in the spring, cutting out timber, and building her shack for her, and fixing things to rights, and I didn't want to take any money for it."

"Why not?"

"Because I asked her to marry me instead. So she don't believe in my good intentions no more."

"I see," said Lewis. He could imagine Burty proposing to Ines Condell.

They reached the little clearing at high noon. The spruce trees grew close up to the very edge of it, and from the front door one could look for miles and miles of the sweeping valleys about Ajados. Molly, the woman from Channing's, sat in the doorway, half asleep. She looked worn out, and tired, but roused up as the men dropped from their horses and hobbled them.

"She's better," she told them. "She's been mighty sick, but the fever's gone now, and she's thinking of going home and giving up. She ain't here in the house. She's gone down yonder to the pines there on the edge of the gulch."

It was there that Lewis found her, sitting on the rocks, beneath the spruces, her dear, clear cut face turned toward the far off spot where the Lewis ranch lay. And just for once, Lewis found the way clear. He had often wondered just how he should ask the woman he loved to marry him, just what tender, decent words in all the language should win her for him, and now, now, he bent down behind her, and folded both arms closely about her, and ere she tried to struggle he told his lips on hers. When she let still in his arms he spoke, looking into the eyes that faltered at his glance.

"Did you come out here on my account?"

"Yes," she said; "I wanted to show you that I was not the useless sort of brainless toy you thought me. I knew I could fight this life here with you, if you—"

"And I dared not ask you, sweetheart?"

"Why not?"

"How could I ask a girl who was used to wealth—"

"But I never was, you dear, dear goose," she laughed. "I was not an honored guest at Ajados at all. I had been visiting a wealthy schoolmate, and was asked by courtesy, nothing more. I thought at first that you went because, well, because Cophetua could not see his way to marrying the beggar maid this time; and then Billie told me the truth about you, and how you were coming to this section to take up a homestead claim, and so I came too."

"We'll use this for a summer house, dear," said Lewis. "The ranch is larger and more fitted to a honeymoon."

They strolled back to the shack together, and flirty, watching them as they came slowly up the path, turned away and went to get his pony.

"Thanks, old man," Lewis told him, as he put out his hand.

"Thanks! Man, I didn't do it for you. It was for her, God bless her." And he went whistling down the trail to Ajados.

HIS CONSCENCE HURT HIM

Man Confesses to Attorney That He Didn't Give Middle Name to Census Taker.

A haggard men entered the office of the district attorney and waited diffidently for an hour to get a word with him. Finally he obtained audience with the official, who asked him what his business was.

"I've cheated the government!" whispered the haggard man, nervously fingering the hat in his hands.

"And you want to make restitution?" asked the district attorney. He had heard of such cases. "How did you cheat the government—evade the customs duty, or steal something from the mint?"

"No, no, nope of those things."

"Did you embezzle from a national bank, perhaps?"

"No; never had anything to do with a national bank."

"Did you overcharge Uncle Sam on a contract?"

"Not that, either."

"Did you crack a country postoffice?"

"No."

"Then how did you cheat the government?"

"Why, you remember the census, don't you?"

"Yes, yes, go on," said the district attorney.

"Well," blazed the man, looking over his shoulder furtively, "when the census man came to my house I didn't give him my middle name."—Philadelphia Star.

Respect for the Aged.

"What's the matter, Miss Dallington?" asked the village wag. "You never laugh at any of my jokes."

"I have been taught never to laugh at the old and decrepit."

Simple Dresses

TWO charmingly simple dresses are shown here, both suitable for cotton or soft woolen materials.

The first has a panel of trimming, either braiding or broderie Anglaise, according to material used; the foot of skirt is trimmed to match. The yoke of the Magyar bodice is of finely tucked material edged with a shaped piece of trimming, the material being gathered to this, and shaped plastron is arranged beneath; the belt is of trimming, so are the sleeve bands. Het of straw edged with a frill of lace and trimmed with roses and foliage.

Materials required: Five yards 46 inches wide, if bruided material forms trimming, four yards, if not, 2½ yards broderie Anglaise 18 inches wide, if used.

The second costume is in thistle mauve cashmere; it has the skirt trimmed down sides with panels of cheney silk edged with narrow satin bands. The over-bodice is entirely of the cashmere, edged with satin, while cheney silk is used for the under-silk, which is finished off at neck and elbows by narrow lace frills. A belt of satin encircles the waist. Hat of thistle mauve straw, trimmed with black wings.

Materials required: Four yards cashmere 44 inches wide, one yard satin, 2½ yards silk 22 inches wide.

FOR THE TIME OF SORROW

Proper Way to Extend Condolences to One's Friends Who Are in Grief.

There are persons who never take notice of another's sorrow. They are worth until the bereaved one is met.

Sometimes this attitude is from fear of intrusion, again it is from fear of not saying the right thing, too often it is from procrastination. Whatever the reason it is a mistake. There are some few who dislike outside sympathy in sorrow, the majority are hurt if it is not given. They never quite feel the same toward the friend who they think was neglectful of their trouble.

The visiting card with a few words of sympathy is sufficient, save among close friends. A married woman incloses the card of her husband.

Never make a note of condolence etiited. It should express you, and not be an essay on grief. Also be brief. A few sincere sentences count more than pages of rambling platitudes.

It is customary to send the note to the member of the family you know best, including the others in your expressions of sympathy.

It is customary now to have engraved forms of acknowledgment on black-edged cards. These are sent out in the name of the head of the family, and are sent to all who offered sympathy. They can be had in a few days on a rush order.

There are many who think such a card too formal, and in any case intimate friends should have personal notes. Flowers always require a note in the first person from some member of the family, or in case the note is written by a friend it should say: "Mrs. Blank has asked me to thank you for the flowers," etc.

When one is a Catholic, with these acknowledgments are sometimes inclosed small, black-edged engraved cards asking for prayers for the deceased. Occasionally a small portrait of the deceased is used on the inner fold of the card, with the date of death beneath.

Novelty Wraps.

Many novelty wraps of voile, chiffon and marquisette are being shown by the large department stores, says the Dry Goods Economist. Some of these are really left unlined and look particularly attractive over evening or lingerie gowns. Some of these are made which can be readily slipped on or off. These coats are shown in black, cerise, purple, Holland blue, Empire green and other fashionable colorings.

Neckband Again.

The mode of the low-necked dress and the collarless frock has called out the black velvet neckband once more. This band is about an inch in width. When last worn this was merely a band, fastening in back or front under a buckle or pretty pin. Now, however, it is fastened in the back in the manner of 30 or 40 years ago, with the long ends hanging down the back.

ONE-PIECE BLOUSE.

This is a one-piece blouse, quite simple but rather novel in style. It is finely tucked at the upper part, the tucks being quite short on the shoulders, and getting longer towards center front. A piece of wide insertion or passementerie is taken round blouse under arms, also trime sleeves, which are finished off by narrow material frills to match the neck.

Hat of straw, trimmed with a tulle rucks.

Materials required: One and one-half yard 44 inches wide, 1¼ yard trimming.

Tailored Suits.

In tailored suit skirts fullness has been introduced through plaited sections, set into rather close fitting skirts as broken panels and also through the use of plaited panels overlapping in tunic form.

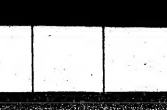
In the former style is an interesting skirt model which has as a back panel two deep, closely plaited flounces, which divide their width to form the skirt length, with the exception of a few inches, which are taken by the shallow hip yoke.

Of similar type is another skirt with the plaited flounces on either side of the flat center panel. Both of these are excellently close fitting skirt, still shown by many Paris houses.

The Fabric Gloves.

Chamois finished lisle are coming into popularity.

The fine suede lisle is the kind of glove which, having made friends, keeps them.

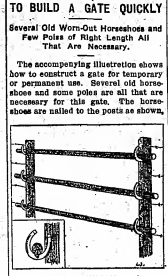


The silk gloves is cool, but makes the hand look larger.

The cotton glove does not wear very well.

Several pairs should be possessed to admit of frequent washing.

The washable glove, which is not allowed to get very dirty, wears the longest.



ROAD and FARM IMPROVEMENT

TO BUILD A GATE QUICKLY

Several Old Worn-Out Horseshoes and Few Poles of Right Length All That Are Necessary.

The accompanying illustration shows how to construct a gate for temporary or permanent use. Several old horseshoes and some poles are all that are necessary for this gate. The horseshoes are nailed to the posts as shown.

Hold Gate Bars With Horseshoes.

says the Popular Mechanics. Where a temporary gate is necessary the shoes can be put on quickly and also removed without much trouble when the gate has served its purpose.

GOOD ROADS AID EDUCATION

How Future of Twelve Children Was Directly Affected—Where They Travelled and Why.

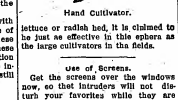
What does a good road mean to a rural school? What does a good road mean to a rural community socially?

A certain township in southeast Kansas new fit to construct two miles of rock road, from a small town south through a rural school district, says the Kansas industrialist. Six children of school age lived on farms adjacent to the rock road, and six on the same length of earth road in the west part of the school district. The earth road was in poor condition most of the time.

The children on the good road went to city schools, walking most of the time. The children on the almost impassable road went to a rural school. At that time the instruction in the town school was not any better than the rural school, in the common branches. The city school was not what it ought to have been. The rural school was noted for its excellent instructors.

Two of the children living on the rock road are now sophomores in agricultural colleges, two are seniors in high school, and two are freshmen in high schools. All of them are interested in agriculture, will graduate from agricultural courses, and return to the farm.

Two children living adjacent to the earth road finished the rural school. Their interest in education was balanced against the almost impassable condition of the road the greater part of the school year. Now they are hardly average farmers. Forr became discouraged and quit the rural school before they were graduated. Three of them are day laborers in a nearby town. The fourth is owner of a small restaurant in the same town.



The children of the rock road walked to church, Sunday school and lectures, and attended the social events in town and in the country adjacent to the rock road.

It hardly seems possible that a stretch of two to four miles of poor road would make such a difference in one's life, does it? But it did.

CULTIVATOR FOR GARDEN USE

HAVE YOU TRIED PAXTINE

The Great Toilet Germicide?

You don't have to pay 50c or $1.00 a pint for listerian antiseptics or perfolds. You can make 16 pints of a more cleansing, germicidal, healing and deodorizing antiseptic solution with one 25c box of Paxtine,—a soluble antiseptic powder, obtainable at any drug store.

Paxtine destroys germs that cause disease, decay and odors,—that is why it is the best mouth wash and gargle, and why it purifies the breath, cleanses and preserves the teeth better than ordinary dentifrices, and in sponge bathing it completely eradicates perspiration and other disagreeable body odors. Every dainty woman appreciates this and its many other toilet and hygienic uses.

Paxtine is splendid for sore throat, inflamed eyes and to purify mouth and breath after smoking. You can get Paxtine Toilet Antiseptic at any drug store, price 25c and 50c, or by mail postpaid from The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass., who will send you a free sample if you would like to try it before buying.

Adequate Rest is Necessary.

Prof. Frederic S. Lee of Columbia university, New York, writing on the subject, "The Physiology of Rest and Exercise," in the Journal of the Outdoor Life for June, shows by experiments on dissected frogs the way in which exercise tires the muscles and, in fact, all the organs of the body. He says, "There is no known antidote to fatigue, unless it be rest, with all that rest implies. Sleep allows the reparative processes of rest to be performed most quickly and completely. A moderate degre of fatigue, or even a considerable decree, when not too often incurred, is not detrimental to a healthy body and is even to be advised. The healthy body is provided with great recuperative powers, and does not rapidly succumb to even excessive demends on its energy. But it should be allowed the proper condition for recuperation, and that condition is adequate rest. There is danger when the fatigue of one day's labor is not eliminated before the next day's work is begun. The effect may be cumulative, the tissues may be in a continued state of depression, and the end may be disastrous."

The Movement for a Safe and Sane Fourth

It is safe to say that no moral crusade ever inaugurated in this country has made more rapid progress than the movement for "a safe and sane Fourth." It is only a few years since the idea was first suggested in its present tangible form, and yet dozens of cities and towns have already adopted it in its most pronounced form, while countless others have accepted a portion of the creed, and yet others are planning to fall into line this year. It affords the most conclusive evidence of the power of public opinion that in practically every community where the safe and sane crusade has taken root no official action has been taken nor recommended by the municipal authorities until public sentiment spurred them to it.

What individual deserves credit for first conceiving the idea of a safe and sane Fourth, and what town or city can lay claim to first putting the idea in practice, presents almost as mooted a question as the famous one as to who first suggested the name of William McKinley for the presidency. Several different persons and several different cities have laid claim to the title of originator of the innovation. Perhaps it would be most just to concede that the plan took shape spontaneously and simultaneously in several different localities, such communities as Cleveland and Washington, D. C., being among the first of the larger cities to put the plan in practice on a comprehensive scale, embracing the whole jurisdiction of the city involved.

THE COLOR SQUAD

A TOWN CRIER ANNOUNCING THE EVENTS OF THE DAY

The incentive for this safe and sane movement was found, of course, in the appalling loss of life attendant upon celebrations of the Fourth in the old-fashioned way. Perhaps there were just as many accidents proportionately in connection with Independence Day celebrations in the days of our grandfathers as there were just prior to this crusade, but then again there may not have been, for the toy pistol makers and firecracker manufacturers were busy in later years devising "improvements" in the noise-making line that seemed to prove fruitful of mishaps when in the hands of irresponsible youngsters.

Or even if, as opponents of the safe and sane Fourth have claimed, the proportion of accidents did not show an increase the growth in the population of the country served to roll up a total so much more appalling in sheer force of figures that a good many people were aroused on the subject. Then, too, the perfection of present-day methods of newsgathering has made it possible for the newspapers to give a complete chronicle of the havoc of the old-fashioned Fourth on the morning following the day we celebrate, and this has served to bring home the matter to many people who never suffered from a Fourth of July accident in their own immediate family and circle of friends.

When the statistics began to show, a few years back, that the American people were expressing their patriotism on the Fourth in a manner that each year cost the lives of several dozen persons and injured, more or less seriously, several thousand others, there was a country-wide protest that swelled in volume. Not, of course, without some opposition, the idea has spread and its extent may be surmised from the statement that the recent failure of one of the largest fireworks manufacturers in the country was said to be due solely to this new order of things, whereas other importers and manufacturers of firecrackers and fireworks have loudly lamented that their business will be ruined if the thing goes on.

The "safe and sane Fourth" is so new that there are few hard and fast rules regarding it. Indeed, a conception of the idea, differing in more or less degree, is encountered in every different city which has adopted the plan. The basic principle is not, however, as some people suppose, the abolition of all noise and fireworks on the Fourth. On the contrary, the advocates of the safe and sane program favor waving flags and booming guns and sputtering sky rockets and all the other frills dear to the memories of our childhood, but they take the stand that these things should be managed—and particularly the fireworks "set off"—by experienced hands, instead of by children and grown-ups who have little practice with this sort of thing and who, perhaps through thoughtlessness, are very careless of other people's safety as well as their own.

The extent to which a city regulates the sale of fireworks and noisemaking explosives may be taken as an index of the measure of its adoption of the safe and sane gospel. Some cities have gone so far as to prohibit absolutely the sale of firecrackers and fireworks, while others merely limit firecrackers to length of three inches with a view to eliminating the deadly "cannon cracker." All the more progressive municipalities have put a ban on the toy pistols and the miniature torpedoes, which in years gone by have probably caused more deaths than any other similar destructive agent, particularly among the younger children. In our up-to-date cities it has been necessary for some years past for a retail merchant to obtain a license or police permit to store and sell fireworks, and thus it has been a simple matter for the authorities to put a snuffer on the business by refusing to issue such permits.

The accepted plan of providing a safe and sane celebration as a substitute for the old-time noisy free-for-all jollification is to place the matter in the hands of a committee of prominent citizens, which raises by subscription a fund of several hundred or several thousand dollars, to defray the expenses of the common celebration, just as money is raised for a street fair. The popular idea is to centralize the new-fangled Fourth of July celebration. In some places this is done literally by holding all the events of the day at some centrally-located rendezvous such as a public square, a fair ground or a park. In other instances there are three or four, or maybe half a dozen, "centers" of celebration located in as many different sections of the city and designed to give the residents of each district a lively Fourth without necessitating a journey far from home.

Two main aims are constantly kept in mind by wide-awake committeemen who plan a Fourth of July frolic in accordance with the safe and sane ideals of the twentieth century. One of these ambitions is to have "something doing" every minute of the day so that no critic can say that things are less lively in the old town than in the days when every citizen could make his own celebration in his own front yard. The other purpose is to arrange features that will enlist the co-operation of the greatest possible number of children so that the little folks will not feel that they are being cheated out of their Fourth of July fun and made to merely serve as spectators for the performances of the grown-ups.

This latter consideration explains why it is that the average safe and sane Fourth includes one or more open-air plays or spectacles or drills in which hundreds of school children and even kindergartners take part, appropriately dressed in red, white and blue, and carrying flags or other suitable emblems of the occasion. These open-air fetes are not wholly restricted to the younger members of the community, though. Pageantry has been growing rapidly in popular favor in this country of recent years—following its vogue in England and elsewhere abroad—and of course the Fourth of July makes an ideal occasion for such a portrayal, particularly if it deals with a historical subject.

Many of the features of the safe and sane Fourth are old friends familiar to us from the Independence Days of the past. For instance, there is the early morning salute of cannon and the "exercises," embracing the reading of the Declaration of Independence by some local orator and an "address of the day" by some celebrity brought to town for the occasion. Even the firemen's contests and hose races still have honored places on many of the programs, and so, too, have the time-honored balloon ascensions, although more likely than not the once-popular parachute jump has now been succeeded by an aeroplane flight. Even the "$5,000 display of fireworks" that rounded out the day under the old plan is retained, only now it is considered advantageous to have the rockets and pinwheels and all the other spark throwers set off by professionals sent by the firm that furnishes the display, instead of leaving it to local talent that doesn't get much practice at this sort of thing except on the Fourth and at election time, and in consequence is apt to pay the price of blistered hands and singed hair, if nothing worse.

And speaking of fireworks brings to mind the fact that daylight fireworks play a prominent part in most of these new safe and sane celebrations of the big summer holiday. Of course, daylight fireworks are no new invention and they have been used to some extent on the Fourth of July for many years past. Only they have been hailed as one of the vehicles of celebration specially adapted to the safe and sane scheme, and the market has been stimulated accordingly while the manufacturers have been encouraged by this new demand to improve their offerings and give greater variety in effects.

The approved style of daylight fireworks consists of bombs in the form of large balls, which are shot aloft from mortars just as are the bombs which now have conspicuous place in all pretentious displays of night fireworks. The discharge of the gun from which the bomb is hurled skyward in itself affords sufficient noise to satisfy any lover of the old-fashioned Fourth, and when the bomb has attained a considerable height it bursts with a second report and releases a number of tiny flags or streamers of red, white and blue bunting, or maybe a fanciful design in tissue paper that is inflated by the breeze and in the form of a snake or dragon or what-not floats gracefully to earth to be grasped by some fortunate member of the struggling throng of children that have watched its descent. The time-honored hot air balloons of tri-colored tissue paper are another stand-by of the safe and sane committeemen and in connection with an up-to-date city celebration hundreds of these couriers are dispatched to the clouds. To lend zest to the flights for the youthful spectators it is sometimes the custom to append packages of "prizes" that drop as the balloon ascends—prizes such as fans or flags or badges or possibly tickets, each "good for one plate of ice cream."

AUTHOR OF "MONEY."

The author of "Money" held a high opinion of the influence exercised by his works, especially by "Palham," his first novel. "This book," he writes, "killed Byronism. It put an end to the Satanic mania and turned the thoughts and ambitions of young gentlemen without neckcloths, and young clerks who were sallow, from playing the Corsair and boasting that they were villains." It certainly drew at least one substantial tribute from a reader. According to Lytton's biographer, "amongst the curiosities at Knebworth is an enormous gold dressing case, elaborately fitted with every conceivable requirement for the toilet of an exquisite, which was an anonymous gift of some enthusiast to the young author of 'Palham.'"

"Arms and legs are not so indispensable, after all," remarked the man who narrowly escaped with his life in an explosion, where he lost the use of both arms.

He sipped his milk in silence through a straw, shook some change out of his pocket to the waiter, and, reaching down with his mouth for the lighted cigar, puffed vigorously. Then, bowing his head and jamming it into his hat on the table, he arose and turned to go, saying: "But this head of mine is mighty useful."

HIRAM CARPENTER'S WONDERFUL CURE OF PSORIASIS.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s psoriasis, and others leprosy, commencing on my scalp; and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there would be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs; feet badly swollen; toe-nails came off; finger-nails dead and hard as a bone; hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. O my God! how I did suffer.

"My sister wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied to one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got Cuticura Resolvent, Ointment and Soap. I commenced by taking Cuticura Resolvent three times a day after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura Ointment morning and evening. Result: returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper. Hiram E. Carpenter, Henderson, N. Y."

The above remarkable testimonial was written January 19, 1880, and is republished because of the permanency of the cure. Under date of April 22, 1910, Mr. Carpenter wrote from his present home, 610 Walnut St. So., Lansing, Mich.: "I have never suffered a return of the psoriasis and although many years have passed I have not forgotten the terrible suffering I endured before using the Cuticura Remedies."

FIRING FOURTH OF JULY SALUTES

BY WALDON FAWCETT

READY TO FIRE THE FOURTH OF JULY SALUTE

THE early morning salute on the Fourth of July is to boom celebration of our greatest national holiday much what the gorgeous morning parade, or better yet, the "grand entree" and pageant of all nations, is to a long awaited circus—that is in the eyes of the average small boy. It is of once the herald and forestaste of the glories to come. And what man, whatever his years or present-day responsibilities, can wholly forget the keen anticipation with which he awaited that early morning summons, if, indeed, he was not down on "the commons" or the vacant field at the edge of town to ace with his own eyes the barking of the tamed dog of war.

From time out of mind the firing of salutes with cannon has been one of the approved methods of celebrating the Fourth of July and it is likely that it will continue to be the fashion to the end of the chapter, no matter what other changes may be made in the approved form of commemorating our festival of Independence. The discharge of big guns on the July holiday is simply an elaboration from the noise-making standpoint of young America's practice of exploding firecrackers, and since the average red-blooded citizen is merely a small boy grown tall, there is widespread sympathy with, if not co-operation in, this noisy acknowledgment of the glorious Fourth.

Whereas canvassing seems to be a fixed feature of the program of the day we celebrate, it must be admitted that its practice has undergone some changes with the passing of the years. In the days of our grandfathers the booming of the big guns kept up pretty much all day—indeed in these days the patriotic citizens of the new republic liked such din so well that they fired off cannon not merely on the Fourth, but on Thanksgiving and Christmas and New Year's as well. And on Independence Day if the booming did not literally keep up all day at least there was a prolonged salute at sunrise, another at noon, a third at sunset and a final thundering along with the skyrockets and Roman candles in the evening.

FIRING A FOURTH OF JULY SALUTE

ON THE MORNING OF THE GLORIOUS FOURTH

In this more decorous generation we have to be content, most of us, with one salute of this sort on the Fourth. At U. S. navy yards and military posts and other governmental reservations the salute is fired at noon, but in the average town or city where the civilians must do the firing—especially if these selfsame civilians are to participate in a picnic or a parade—the regulation salute is sent echoing over the countryside soon after the break of day. Of course, if there is to be a ceremonial flag raising during the day, or a moment is to be unveiled or some high-up public official is to be given a reception, there may be a salute as a sort of accompaniment for the function, but for the most part nowadays the average American community has to get along on the Fourth with one formal salute.

Another change that has come with the passing of the years is in the matter of the arrangements for the firing of the salutes. The average individual who listens to the reverberation of the distant guns never gives a thought to this part of it, but obviously somebody has to attend to this part of the celebration. In the old days almost anybody who volunteered for the task—and who, maybap, was willing to contribute for the occasion—was considered competent to act as artilleryman for the occasion. Similarly almost anything that would answer the purpose of a cannon was accepted as a vehicle of noise making. How often under such circumstances was a worn old field piece dragged forth to do such duty and loaded nigh to the muzzle by enthusiasts who thought far more of the din than of the danger that lay in an overcharge of ammunition. Sometimes a hollow log or even a length of pipe was made to serve as a substitute.

The natural sequel of such a happy-go-lucky scheme of firing Fourth of July salutes came in a constantly increasing record of accidents which finally hestirred public sentiment an the subject. Manifestly a large share of the mishaps of this kind, the chronicle of which filled the newspapers on the day following the Fourth, were due either to inexperience in handling the guns or to the kindred cause of lack of knowledge in measuring powder charges. Well, the upshot of the agitation was that there found favor the plan for having all Fourth of July salutes fired by "professionals," as it were—that is by men who make a business af setting off large caliber guns and who do it every day af their lives, or at least quite frequently, instead of merely once n year.

Thus it has come about that in most communities where their services are available the official Fourth of July salutes are now fired by enlisted men of the United States army, navy or marine corps or members of the National Guard or Naval Militia of the several states. Accidents have not been eliminated but they have been greatly reduced and the salutes are more accurate—that is, a salute fired by such a gun crew will consist of just the proper number of discharges at uniform volume and with the proper intervals between instead of the hodge-podge that was formerly delivered in many instances when a salnta was likely to be prolunged until the gunnars grew tired or the powder was exhausted and when the volume of each peal of artificial thunder varied according to the guesswork of the amateurs in measuring out the powder.

In one way, though, it is a pity that there had to be any change in the method of firing the Fourth of July salutes for noise making was a stock fun for the man who did it years ago, whereas it is no more nor less than a detail of the day's work for Uncle Sam's gunners. Indeed it may surpries some of our readers to learn that there are artillerymen in the regular army and men-o'-war's-men on our naval vessels who thoroughly detest the roar of the big guns. It is not that they are afraid or are lacking in experience, for some of these men have been in the service for years and have repeatedly feced death in a variety of forms and yet never is a veteran never gets over his dislike of the din at close range.

But then the enthusiastic crowds that on the Fourth of July hear the echoing salutes in the distance have no idea of the shocks administered to the man behind the gun when a "shooting iron" of any size lets go. The strain of waiting for each report and bracing himself to withstand it is also a severe tax on the nervons system of the gunner, to say nothing of the unpleasant experience that follows the discharge when the gunner is struck in the face as though by a sherp gust of wind and sustains a jarring, particularly of the spine, which may force him to have a memento all the remainder of the day in the form of a severe headache. Of course guns of the largest size are never employed in the firing of salutes. On United States warships, where guns of every caliber are at hand, from which to pick and choose the saluting is usually done with three-pounders and on shore light artillery or field pieces of about the same dimensions are utilized.

A salute should consist of a specific number of discharges having a certain significance, and one or another of these regulation salutes are fired when the noise-making is in the hands of regular or volunteer soldiery, but in dependent gun crews recruited for the Fourth continue to claim extensive license in this respect. There are several different salutes as prescribed in Uncle Sam's books of regulations that may be adopted for the Fourth of July greeting. Perhaps the most extensively used of all is the American salute of one gun for every state in the Union. By following an interval of a minute and a half between discharges this salute can be strung out for more than an hour and at half-minute intervals, which is slow enough to suit most persons, it enables an interval of booming that exceeds twenty minutes.

Another salute that is used on this holiday and that is appropriate to the occasion is the old Federal salute of thirteen guns—one for each of the thirteen original states. This salute is no longer used to any great extent on other ceremonial occasions, but it comes in pat on Independence day. Extensive use is also made on the Fourth of the standard national salute of twenty-one guns. Ordinarily this number of guns is also accepted as the international salute and it is also the special salute of the president of the United States, fired whenever the chief magistrate visits a fort or steps aboard a naval vessel. The salute in popular on the Fourth because it seems to be just about the proper length and its use on this holiday is justified by the fact that the number twenty-one is formed by the eddition of the figures 1, 7, 1, 2, comprising the numerals in Uncle Sam's birthday year.

FIRING A FOURTH OF JULY SALUTE AT A NAVY YARD

Every saluting vessel in the United States navy will thunder out a salute to Independence day no matter whether she be at anchor in a foreign port, tied up in one of our navy yards or cruising out of sight of land in the open sea. The national salute is the one used just as it is on Memorial day and on Washington's birthday. The salute of minute guns is prescribed under certain conditions in the navy, but the regulation for between guns in all salutes including the national salute of twenty-one guns is five seconds. During the firing of the salute all the officers and men stend at attention. It is customary for foreign warships anchored in American herbors to fire a selute as compliment to the United States on the Fourth and the same courtesy is usually shown by foreign forts and warships when Yankee naval craft are spending the eventful holiday in allen waters. Whenever any foreign authorities or ships fire our national salute, the firing is no sooner concluded than an officer from the American ship in port makes on official call upon the foreign officials and extends thanks.

MOLLY PITCHER, HEROINE

The best known of all the American heroines of battle is Molly Pitcher, the story of whose adventures, especially on the battlefield at Monmouth, is one of the most picturesque incidents of the revolutionary war. The early life of Molly is somewhat vague. She is supposed to have been born at Carlisle, Pa., October 13, 1744. Her right name was Marr Ludwig, and while the soldiers were only familiar with her first name, calling her Molly, they soon applied the second, because whenever they saw Molly they also saw the pitcher with which she carried water to the sick and wounded in the camps.

Several writers say Molly came to this country from Germany with her parents, who were among the Palatines. The first information we have of her is that she was employed as a maid in the family of General Irvine at Carlisle, and on July 24, 1769, was married to John Hays, a barber. Her husband was commissioned a gunner in Proctor's First Pennsylvania artillery, Continental line, December 1, 1775, and Molly followed him to the field. This was a common thing for the wives of private soldiers to do, their time being passed in laundering for the officers.

At the assault at Fort Clinton she showed much pluck and also the following year in the important battle of Monmouth, N. J. In the latter battle her husband, a gunner, had fellen, when she sprang to his place and fired the cannon.

Molly had been carrying water to the soldiers from a spring, the mercury being at 96 degrees in the shade. As no one was able to take his place when he became incapacitated, it is said she dropped her pail, seized the rammer, and vowed that she would avenge his death. She proved an excellent substitute, her courage exciting the admiration of all, and on the following morning, in her soiled garments, General Greene presented her to Washington, who praised her gallantry and commissioned her a sergeant.

It is releted she received many presents from the French officers and that she would sometimes pass along the French lines, cocked hat in hand, and would get it almost filled with coins. She is said to have served in the army nearly eight years in all. She was placed on the list of half-pay officers and for many years after the Revolution lived at the Carlisle barracks, cooking and washing for the soldiers.

The house in which she spent her later years in Carlisle was demolished in recent years. She died January 22, 1825, at the age of seventy-nine, and was buried with military honors, but her grave remained unmarked until 1876, when Peter Spahr of Carlisle conceived the idea of erecting a monument.

A monument on the battlefield of Monmouth rather commemorates Molly Pitcher, a bronze relief representing her in the act of ramming a cannon. She also figures in George Washington Parke Curtis' painting "The Field of Monmouth." So familiar had the heroine of Monmouth become that the name "Molly Pitcher" was applied by the continental soldiers, in their hot and weary march through New Jersey, to any woman who brought them water to drink.

"Molly" is credited with having remarked at a banquet at which there were British soldiers, when she was called upon to toast King George: "When Washington leads his soldiers into battle, God help King George!"

COULDN'T STAND EXPOSURE.

The member of the legislature, of whom some graft stories had been circulated, was about to build a house.

"You will want a southern exposure, I suppose?" asked the architect.

"No, sir!" said the man. "If you can't build this house without any exposure, I'll get another architect."

MADE HIS OWN WAY

Immigrant Boy Becomes a Law School Professor.

Samuel Want Was Penniless When He Came From England Ten Years Ago—Now an Expert Commercial Lawyer.

Baltimore, Md.—At twenty-two years of age, Samuel Want, who came to this country a penniless immigrent ten years ago, has been appointed a member of the law faculty of the University of Maryland. Mr. Want is also an assistant editor of the American and English Encyclopedia of Law, Lawyers' Reports Annotated and several other legal publications. He is instructor in commercial law at the eastern high school, a member of the Maryland bar, and is engaged in other activities and labors.

The appointment by the faculty of the University of Maryland, of which Chief Judge Herlen is dean, is the result of sheer force of merit and effort on the pert of young Want. He entered the university in 1907 as a freshman and was graduated from the school in June, 1908. He made the three-year regular course in less than 12 months and the faculty were quick to appreciate the intellectual and gittad qualities of the young man.

His speciel duties on the faculty are to instruct students in the selection of books and authorities. The young professor has had a varied and picturesque career made interesting because he came to this country penniless and without friends at the age of twelve years from Newcastle, England.

Young Want knew a former Englishman who lived in Darlington, S. C., and straightway made for that southern town. He astonished the residents of that city when he emblcd from a freight train into the post office and inquired for the men whom hs knew while a little lad in England. His secured employment as an office-boy in a store and at the same time reed his speller and arithmetic at night.

At the age of fourteen the youthful Want was made menager of the store. Instead of scrubbing the floor and carrying bundles, he did the buying and hed charga of the seles department. He reed much and was determined to become a lawyer. He came to Baltimore et the age of eighteen and entered the University of Maryland.

The members of the class of 1908 remember well bow the spare, studious and quiet stranger learned the law yet astonishing rapidity. Judges Harlen and Stockbridge, Gorter, Rose, the late John P. Poe, and other eminent instructors of the university soon saw thet the youth was possessed of more than the average ability. It was with considerable pleasure that they saw him receive his diploma, for be had the second highest average in the class.

Want is e modest, unassuming young man and strongly objects to talking about his own accomplishments. He admits that he is a graduate of the school of hard knocks, and this his path in life has been rather rugged, but that is all he could be induced to say. He is a broadly cultivated young scholar. Besides having an extensive knowledge of the law, he is a student of the classics and foreign languages. He is an omnivorous reader and absorbs everything he reeds. He is merried.

Americans Learning Spanish.

Boston, Mass.—Pupils desirous of learning Spanish in the schools are numerous. During the last year at Columbia university, conferences were held in that institution on the language of Cervantes. The mayor of Boston recently compelled all the school masters in his jurisdiction to include Spanish in the school curriculum and it may safely be affirmed that there is hardly a mercantile firm of any importapce in the United States that does not possess an employe who can both speak and write Spanish fluently.

The reason of all this is not far to seak. The United States is in anxiety to find new markets for its products has set its eyes on South America and hopes to find a new field there and also in Central America among its many republics, and they are satisfied that in the long run they will have them all under their control.

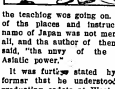
Spending a Million a Day on Roads

WASHINGTON.—One million dollars a day is the record that will be established throughout the United States as the expenditure for improving and maintaining public roads. Never before in the history of the country has there been such interest in the improvement of highways, and with the legislatures of the states appropriating millions of dollars for this purpose, the good roads movement has received its greatest impetus since the foundation of the republic.

The money that will be expended on the roads of this country during the next six months will be more than ever known in the same period of time. In 1904 the total expenditure for the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges in the United States amounted to about $40,000,000, but the expenditure for this purpose in 1911 will aggregate about $140,550,000. Exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, the outlay for roads will amount to $1,000,000 a day during the present road building season. This includes all moneys raised by local taxation, bond issue, state appropriation and private subscriptions.

"Every state in the Union," said Logan Waller Page, director of the United States office of public roads, in telling of the results of the great campaign for good roads, "seems at last to be thoroughly aroused to the benefits derived from investments in improved highways."

In California the state has issued $18,000,000 in bonds with which to build o system of state highways. This work will begin during the present season. In the state of Connecticut about $2,500,000 will be expended this year out of the state treasury for trunk line and state aid roads. Of the $5,000,000 bond issue recently authorized in Maryland more than $1,250,000 will be available this year for trunk line and state aid roads. Massachusetts will expend from state revenues over $1,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of state roads. It is expected that at least $5,000,000 will be expanded on state aid roads and on trunk line systems in the state of New York, in addition to $7,000,000 already raised by local taxation. In 1910, thirty counties in Ohio voted $2,500,000 in bonds to be expended this year. Ohio will also expend about $500,000 from the state revenues for road improvement. In Pennsylvania, the state-aid appropriation will probably amount to over $1,000,000, and a $50,000,000 bond issue is being considered.

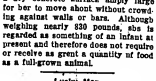


Number of Dope Fiends Is Increasing

ACCORDING to statistics collected by government investigators, "es ore becoming a nation of drug fiends. The number of persons addicted to this degrading and debasing habit is placed at 7,000,000, and the evil is constantly growing. With the object of warning the country, the United States government has issued a bulletin, cautioning the people against what is known as the "habit-forming" compounds. The experts employed by the government are certain that new drug fiends are being created every year through the insidious patent medicines and the soft drink that contain a trace of the narcotic agents which finally form the terrible drug habit. There are 100 sanitaria throughout the country for the cure of this mind-wrecking habit and there are hundreds of graves being filled every year with unfortunate victims of the drugs.

The bureau of chemistry, under the direction of its chief, Dr. H. W. Wiley, which made a far-reaching investigation of the drug habit, was appalled by the results of its inquiry. It found that the amount of opium being imported into the United States has doubled within the last generation. It discovered that hundreds of preparations for the cure of headaches and the relief of pain that are being sold every day were filled with alluring, enslaving agents that create the drug user's lotos fiend. It found that 110,000 ounces of cocaine were being consumed annually by the drug users of the country.

Midshipmen Being Trained for Japan



THE 194 midshipmen who recently graduated at the United States naval academy, and whom it is proposed to create ensigns as soon as possible, have in the last year of their course received special training to fit them peculiarly for a war with Japan. A member of the class has let the secret out. The hundreds of other middies will be similarly treated. The members of the graduating class during the last four months have been familiarized with the principal naval bases, arsenals, naval forces, and resources of Japan, and they have in theory fought naval battles with Japan.

It could not be learned who had given the orders to instruct the midshipmen what to do in case of a war with Japan, and the greatest possible secrecy has been maintained while the teaching was going on. In many of the places and instructions the name of Japan was not mentioned at all, and the author of them simply said, "the navy of the strongest Asiatic power."

It was fortw stated by the informer that he understood the 85 graduating cadets at West Point, N. Y., had received the same instructions as to land fighting that the midshipmen had in naval warfare.

Young "Hippo" for the Capital Zoo

A FINE young female hippopotamus from East Africa is the latest addition to the national zoological park in Washington. The hippopotamus is about two years old, weighs 820 pounds, and is an exceptionally fine specimen. The interest in the new arrival was almost as great as it was several years ago when former President Roosevelt received his famous consignment of animals from Menelik II of Abyssinia, which he promptly turned over to the national zoo.

The hippopotamus is of the species which inhabits the rivers and lakes of Africa south of the Soudan. She came down from East Africa, via Germany, and was not born in captivity, but in the jungle, on the bank of some teeming African stream. She was about the biggest piece of live "freight" that has arrived in Washington in some time. Every preparation, however, had been made for her arrival, a new cage and tank having been installed in one of the wings of the lion house.

Miss Hippo has the best accommodations at the zoo. Zoologically speaking, her apartment corresponds to a room and private bath in a hotel. The cage is divided in half, one part consisting of a big tank and the other a dry concrete surface ample large for her to move about without crowding against walls or bars. Although weighing nearly 820 pounds, she is regarded as something of an infant at present and therefore does not require or receive a great a quantity of food as a full-grown animal.

"He is what you might call an optimist man?" "Decidedly—his sins never find him out and his debts never find him in."—Puck.

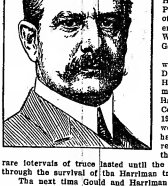
WHO'S WHO AND WHY

TO RULE A YOUNG REPUBLIC

FROM a hungry newsboy on the streets of Washington to the president of the youngest republic in the world is the remarkable record of Dick Ferris of Los Angeles. Coincidentally with the revolution in Mexico headed by Madero there broke out a revolt against Mexican authority in Lower California and one of those who supervised it and helped to finance it was Ferris. A filibustering expedition fitted out by Ferris left San Francisco for Lower California and without much of a struggle the weakened authority of Mexico was overthrown and the republic of Lower California created. Of this new republic Ferris has been elected president.

Ferris was a "newsy" on the streets of Washington twenty years ago and found the battle of life a hard one. One cold night after he had sold a paper or two on a street car he was injured while stepping off and one of his arms was broken. One of those who took an interest in the lad was the late Frank Hatton, a passenger on the car and then the publisher of a Washington paper. He had the boy removed to a hospital and later took such an interest in him that he provided means for his education., Ferris was a quick and ambitious youth and turned out a credit to his benefactor.

COOKE DECLARED NOT GUILTY

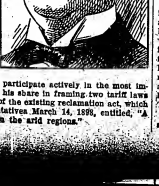


Edgar S. Cooke, who was found not guilty of embezzling $36,000 from the Big Four railway, was formerly local treasurer of the road in Cincinnati and was well known in railroad circles. The belief is that the jury's charge helped to free Cooke, Judge Hunt declaring the testimony of Mrs. Ford and of Warriner only made them equally guilty if Cooke were guilty.

Cooke was the last of those indicted in connection with the $643,000 shortage of Charles L. Warriner, Cincinnati treasurer of the road, to be tried. First Warriner, indicted on numerous charges, pleaded guilty to one charging the embezzlement of $5,000. He was sentenced to six years in prison.

Then Mrs. Jeannette Stewart-Ford, accused of blackmailing Warriner, was tried in February, 1910. The jury in her case disagreed. Finally, after many delays, Cooke succeeded in having his case brought into court and the most sensational trial of the series ensued. Cooke sat impassive as the formal verdict was read, but Mrs. Cooke, who had been at his side for days, buried her face in her hands and sobbed. She approached the jurors and shook each one by the hand. Later Cooke's face brightened and, with tears of joy in his eyes, he clasped the hand of his attorney.

GOULD OUT AS ROAD'S HEAD

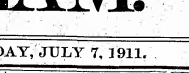


The recent abdication of George Gould from the presidency of the Missouri Pacific the keynote of the family's great system of roads, was a confession that the fight of nineteen years with himself on one side and Harriman, the New York Central, Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio and other big railroads on the other, has ended in defeat. In the language of Wall street, "they've got" George Gould.

The fight against George Gould was waged ever since his father died in December, 1892, with intermission. His first heavy battle was when he met Edward H. Harriman and Edwin Hawley in a fight for control of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company in 1902. Without much difficulty he wrested them, but that fight was to have great influence on his future career, for it was then that he began the feud with Harriman that with rare lotervals of truce lasted until the latter's death and even afterward, through the survival of the Harriman traditics.

The next time Gould and Harriman joined battle was in 1903. Gould planned, as his father had planned, to be the owner of the first transcontinental system and in 1903 he made the boast that within 18 months he would have his system from ocean to ocean complete. But the interests opposed to him were too powerful and his moves were checkmated.

PROMINENT WESTERN SENATOR



It is said that the Pacific Coast Democrats may offer Francis G. Newlands, United States from Nevada, as a candidate for presidential nomination.

Mr. Nawlands, who is now serving his second term in the senate, is a Mississippian and was born in the old city of Natchez in the summer of 1848. He entered Yale college in 1863, during the civil war, and remained until the middle of his junior year in 1866; later he studied law at what is now the George Washington university, was admitted to the bar in Washington and went to San Francisco to practice. He removed his office to Reno, Nevada, in 1888, and since has been recognized as one of the ablest and most influential leaders in his state.

He served ten years in the house of representatives and was a member of the Democratic minority of the committees on irrigation, foreign affairs, banking and currency and ways and means, where he was able to participate actively in the most important legislation of the period and did his share in framing two tariff laws and a currency law, and was the author of the existing reclamation act, which he introduced in the house of representatives March 14, 1898, entitled, "A bill for the construction of reservoirs in the arid regions."

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Yeggmen Terror of Small Town Banks

LINCOLN, NEB.—Since last fall no less than a hundred country banks in Nebraska, Oklahoma and Nebraska have been robbed. In each instance from $1,000 to $7,000 was taken, and practically the same procedure was followed in each case.

In the three states named six approximately 2,500 banks, 2,000 of them in little towns and villages with practically no police protection. This is the usual program in the cases reported:

Soon after midnight the residents are aroused by two or three explosions. Those daring enough to venture on the streets see an automobile standing in front of the bank and two men with guns giving orders to stand back. Inside are their companions, filling sacks with money from the safe. Having gathered all the cash possible the burglars enter the machine, fire a few intimidating shots and go racing out of town.

Then come the gathering of a posse, the cranking up of cars and a desperate attempt to follow and capture the robbers. In no instance has there been a capture, and despite offers of rich rewards for the robbers, dead or alive, the robberies continue.

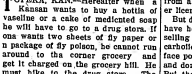
The automobile is blamed for much of the crime.

"Before the coming of the motor car wa could overhent this class of criminals," said a police officer who was discussing the crime. "They went on horseback and there was little difficulty in covering the country by telephone and heading them off.

"Now the country is alive with parties making cross-state runs and no more attention is paid to a strange car than to a freight train. With a high powered car it is easy on the prairie roads to cover 100 miles in three hours. Then with a change of outer clothing to give the appearance of tourists the robbers can motor leisurely through the most populous cities and put up at the first-class hotels without arousing suspicion.

"It is practically impossible for the pursuers to follow them because the route taken is unknown and the rapid progress of the robbers puts them out of sight.

Hoosier Eggs Must Now be Guaranteed



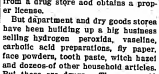
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The large egg dealers and shippers of the state now buy eggs "loss off," and will compel the farmer to sell good eggs or none at all. This decision was rendered at a meeting bera soma time ago of the Indiana Association of Car Lot Shippers, which meeting was attended by nearly 40 of the 100 or more members. Resolutions were adopted, advising that the association would buy eggs only on the plan of "loss off."

This decision was in line with the amendment which the last legislature added to the pure food law, making it a violation of the law to offer a bad egg for sale. This law applies to the farmer, the grocer, the huckster, the dealar, the shipper, or to anybody else who sells eggs. H. E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner, attended the meeting and made an address, in which he told the members his department would do everything in its power to enforce the new law. Up to this time it has been the common practica for the farmer to sell all his eggs in a lump, regardless of whether the eggs were good, bad or otherwise, and he received a flat price for them. This rasult was that the consumer had to take his chances of getting good eggs when he bought eggs at a grocery.

"It is a crima for any person to offer a bad egg for sale," said Mr. Barnard, "and the fact that a person had a bad egg in his possession is proof he intends to sell it.

"When a consumer goes to a grocery and buys a dozen eggs he must get a dozen eggs. Frequently, heretofore, when a man bought a dozen eggs he got two or three bad ones. This practica must be stopped. The consumer must get what he pays for. Not only will we insist on the shipper living up to the law, but we propose also that every grocery shall guarantee the eggs it sells. Then the consumer will be protected."

Only the Drug Stores May Sell Drugs



TOPEKA, KAN.—Hereafter when a Kansan wants to buy a bottle of vaseline or a cake of medicated soap he will have to go to a drug store. If he owns wants two sheets of fly paper or a package of fly poison, he cannot run around to the corner grocery and get it charged on the grocery bill. He must bike to the drug store. The state board of pharmacy has ruled against the department stores and grocerias selling drugs.

No one has been poisoned or hurt in buying department or grocery store drugs, but the business was getting to be so big that the board decided to stop it before the business ran away. The department stores usually shave the price a little, and maybe this encouraged the ruling. The pharmacy law prohibits anyone but a registered pharmacist selling drugs except in rural districts, where any merchant may sell patent medicine if he is five miles from a drug store and obtains a proper license.

But department and dry goods stores have been building up a big business selling hydrogen peroxide, vaseline, carbolic acid preparations, fly paper, face powders, tooth paste, witch hazel and dozens of other household articles. But these are drugs. They are sold as drugs and to be used as medicines, hence they come under the prohibition of the law and the state board has a right to say who shall sell them, and the patent medicines by others than druggists, must cease.

Queen Sets Style for English Women

LONDON.—Queen Mary has issued another sumptuary law for the world of fashion. A little while ago she intimated that ladies wearing the tightly fitting modern skirt would not be welcome at Buckingham palace, and it is evident that if the queen is unable to lead the fashion, she intends to command it when and where she has the power, for she has now issued further orders that no low collared dresses or large hats are to be worn in her presence.

These orders of the queen are all in keeping with her well known views and with those of King George. "They have made domesticity the fashion," was said of them by a fashionable critic the other day. As a matter of fact, apart from their pressing public engagements, the existence of the royal couple would be described by any member of the smart set of the Hanoverian era as positively humdrum. They realize this.

"I know people think that we are a stuffy couple, but we do not mind that," the queen is said to have remarked a few days ago.

If Queen Mary's expressed views and her example is followed, it is likely there will be a fashion for something much more decorative, in the way of gloves than is furnished by the customary range of fawn and black and white.

Several of the peeresses have followed the queen's lead and are wearing heavier embroidered or dalicately painted gloves, finished with gold or silver bands or lace edging at the elbows.

ANOMALY OF PROFILES.

How often have we sat directly opposite a comely face in the street car for instance, admiring its regular well-formed features, when, with a certain turn of the person's head, the illusion of beauty suddenly vanished, the new view presented revealing contours of cheek, chin and mouth disappointing in the extreme, says the Photo Era. The consoling feature, perhaps, is the car, which, projecting abnormally in so many cases, now assumes an air of repose. Few faces will produce a profile of classic beauty, and even some of these fail to yield flattering full face portraits. This is one reason that one sees more front view portraits than profiles in painting and photography. Incidentally, it may be remarked that many a man would look better with his head presented in profile, if he wore a mustache instead of being smooth-shaven. Not only does it preserve the harmonious proportions designed by nature, but its removal, in obedience to fashion's decree, sometimes result in unpleasant disclosures, such as an abnormally long upper lip or an ill shaped mouth, besides imparting undue prominence to the nose. A possibly humorous phase of this subject is the report that patrons of marriage bureaus in large German cities now insist upon both fullface and profile photographs of their prospective consorts.

Judge Foster's characterization of "joy riding" as "thieving," coupled with his imposition upon the prisoner before him of a sentence of a year in the penitentiary, gives the new law increasing the severity of the penalty for the offense an excellent start, says the New York Post. Such an attitude will not only serve as an emphatic warning to reckless chauffeurs, but will make it difficult for judges who might be inclined to undue lenience to yield to their weakness. It is a contemptible that, in rendering law effective, an ounce of enforcement is worth a pound of additional legislation.

Two British assistant army physicians committed suicide in London and the inquest resulted in the attribution of their self-murder to insanity caused by overwork. It was a sad end, yet precautions to avoid such a melancholy fate may be exaggerated. Everyone who stops to reflect upon the subject probably will be able to recall the names of more than one among the persons of his immediate acquaintance who never will die of overwork.

Save the babies. So many people are getting lynched and killed in automobile and motor cycle races, not to mention the fatalities in aeroplane and warship disasters, that the little ones are sure to be needed.

The charge is that all the microbes not otherwise disposed of, amounting to several billions if not more, attach themselves to the public roller towel. The appearance of the towel, too, strongly corrobrates the charge.

INDICT WIRE TRUST

CHARGED WITH FORMING POOLS TO RESTRAIN TRADE AND CONTROL PRICES.

NINE ASSOCIATIONS INVOLVED

Frank Gould and Satterlee, Morgan's Son-in-Law, Among Accused.—Steel Trust Not Implicated,

New York, N. Y. — Nine indictments charging restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law were returned by a federal grand jury here against as many associations and a long list of individuals comprising the so-called "wire trust," affiliated with the steel industry. Prominent among the defendants are Herbert L. Satterlee, a son-in-law of J. Pierpont Morgan; William P. Palmer, president of the American Steel & Wire Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel corporation, and Frank Jay Gould of New York, president of the Old Dominion Iron & Nell Works Company.

Only two of the subsidiary companies of the United States Steel corporation are mentioned, namely, the American Steel & Wire Company and the Trenton Iron Company. The American Steel & Wire Company, however, is mentioned in the indictments against seven of the associations. In the indictments against the Telephone Cable association and the Fine Magnet Wire association, it is not mentioned.

The most prominent individual defendants and a full list of the associations to which they are members follows:

Individuals Indicted.

Frank J. Gould, president of the Old Dominion Iron & Nell Works, Bells Isle, Richmond, Va.

Herbert L. Satterlee, president of the Habirshaw Wire Company, Yonkers, N. Y.

William P. Palmer, president of the American Steel & Wire Company, Waukegan, Ill., and Worcester, Mass.

Charles F. Brocker, vice president of the Anaonda Brass & Copper Company, Anaonda, Conn., and member from Connecticut of the Republican national committee.

Harry G. Stoddard, president of the Trenton Iron Company, Trenton, N. J.

Erskine Hewlett, vice president of the Trenton Iron Company.

Frank N. Phillips, president of the American Electrical Works, Philipsdale, R. I.

Ferdinand W. Roebling, president of John A. Roebling's Sons Company, Tronton ond Roebling, N. J.

Philip W. Smith, second vice president of the Standard Underground Cable Company, Pittsburg, Pa., Oakland, Cal., and Perth Amboy, N.J.

Associations Indicted.

The Horseshoe Manufeturers' Association, William P. Palmer and others.

Bare Wire Copper Association, William P. Palmer ond others.

Weatherproof & Wire Magnet Association, William P. Palmer and others.

Lead Encased Rubber Cable Association, William P. Palmer and others.

Wire Rope Manufacturers' Association, Edwin S. Jackson, Jr., and others.

Fine Mognet Wire Association, Ferdinand W. Roebling and others.

Underground Power Cable Association, Philip H. W. Smith, and others.

Telephone Cable Association, Frank N. Phillips and others.

Rubber Covered Wire Association, William P. Palmer ond others.

It is set forth that the various associations named under their respective association names and each selected a supervisor and adopted rules and regulations. An arbitrary rating was determined, it is charged, by the ratio of output for an agreed time; each member was obligated to pay $5,000 or less into a fund called "the general deposit" and in case any member failed to abide by the regulations his deposit was forfeited.

Raw materials were bought at "arbitrary and non-competitive prices to be agreed upon by said defendonts, being prices lower than those for which the respective corporation would be enabled to purchase said raw materials but for the unlawful conspiracy herein described."

In the indictment against the Bare Copper Wire Association, it is charged thnt the corporations forming the association produced 95 per cent of the entire bare copper wire consumed in the United States and that they had absolute control of this price.

Upon conviction each of the defendonts is liable to not more than a year's imprisonment, or a fina of $5,000, or both.

In the indictments neither thn American Steel & Wire Company nor the John A. Roebling's Sons Company, also known as the Trenton Iron Works, are designated as belonging to the United States Steel Corporation.

Columbia Crew Seaten Near Finish Through Collapse of Bow and Stroke—Pennsylvania is Third, Wisconsin Fourth, Syracuse Last.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Cornell was the winner in the 'varsity eight oared event in the annual intercollegiate regatta on the Hudson. Columbia finished a close second.

With bowman and stroke lying limp and senseless in their seats—rowed into utter exhaustion by a last cruel spurt—the crew of Columbia university crossed the finish line only a length and a-half behind the winners eat eight from Cornell. They were beaten after victory had seemed to be within their grasp from the very bang of the starting gun. But nature, rather than Cornell, defeated them. The time was: Cornell 20:10 4-5, Columbia 20:16 4-5. Penna was third, after a brilliant struggle with Wisconsin whom they nosed out in the last few yards, while Syracuse, far, far behind, was a bad last. It was beyond all doubt the most brilliant 'varsity contest ever rowed on the historic old course.

There was joy for the followers of the Columbia camp, though, in the fact that their freshmen crew triumphed by two lengths over Cornell, with Syracuse, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin further back.

The 'varsity four went to the Ithicans after a spectacular struggle with Syracuse, who finished only half a length behind. Columbia beat out the Red and Blue.

There were fewer yachts and a smaller crowd than usual both on the observation train and on the rocky heights of Poughkeepsie and Highlands. Probably 40,000 persons, including Governor Dix, on the deck of the naval reserve ship Gloucestar, watched tha races.

Airman Seachy Circles Cataract in Aeroplane, Skims Surfaon of Rapids and Lands Safely.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 28.—With the whirr of his biplana motor drowned in tha roar of the cataract and mast and machinn momentarily obscured in spray and mist, Lincoln Beachy, the California aviator, after circling above thn falls, swooped beneath the arches of thn upper steel bridge and down the gorge almost to the whirlpool.

It was tha first tima a bird-man had cut through the air currents and over clouds and leaping foam caused by Niagara's falls and rapidn that have lured so many adventurers to their death.

Throngs on the American and Canadian shores gazed with consternation as the aviator sa he rose to a height of about 2,000 feet, twice circled above the cataract and then made thn long swoop toward thn narrow passage under the bridge. His biplana came racing over the Horseshoe fall so low that he was lost to view for an instant and then winged close to thn water. It seemed almost to skim thn water as bn mada the bridgn passage.

RAIL MERGE UPHELD

COMBINATION OF RAILROADS DECIDED TO BE LEGAL.

In Dissenting Opinion Jurist Declares the Government's Petition to Be Well Founded.

St. Louis.—The United States circuit court of the eighth district handed down an opinion that the purchase of the Southern Pacific railroad by the Union Pacific did not amount to a direct and substantial restraint of either interstate or international commerce." The recent decision of the United States Supreme court in the Standard Oil case was cited among others by Judge Elmer B. Adams, who wrote the majority opinion. Supreme Court Justice Willis Van De Vanter, while a circuit judge of the eighth district, participated in the hearing, deliberation and decision in the case and concurred in the opinion of Judge Willem C. Hook filed a dissenting opinion.

"Our conclusion," said Judge Adams, "is that, all the facts of the case, considered in their natural reasonable and practicel aspect, and given their appropriate relative signidtsction, do not make the Union Pacific a substantial competitor for transcontinental business with the Southern Pacific in or prior to the year 1901.

"Certainly the desire to appropriate the fretting business done by the Southern Pacific on the minor lines or to suppress competition of traffic which was in the aggregate of such small proportions could not have been the inspiration of the vast outlay involved in the purchase of the Huntington stock. It did not amount to a direct and substantinl restraint of either interstate or international commerce. This is not sufficient to bring it within the condemnation of the anti-trust law."

The court held also that the investment of the Harriman lines in the Santa Fe was not for acquiring control, and that if it was for obtaining inside information concerning the operation of a great competitor they chose a lawful way for doing it.

SLEUTHS DOG FUNK

HARVESTER COMPANY'S MANAGER SAYS HE IS BEING CONSTANTLY SHADOWED.

GETS THREATS OVER PHONE

Declares Detectives Haunt His Steps Even into Committee Room at Washington—Repeats His Spring-field (Ill.) Testimony.

Washington.—A decided sensation was caused in the Lorimer investigation when Clarence S. Funk, whose story precipitated the present inquiry, disclosed just before leaving the stand that since he told the story to the Helm committee he had been followed day and night by private detectives which ba intimated were employed by Edward Hines, the Chicago millionaira lumberman.

Funk also said he had received many threats over the telephone and in anonymous letters, and it therupon developed that the committee room and had taken their places among the spectators.

Mr. Funk admitted that ha knew the name of one of the detectives and could produce him before the committee. The investigation was brought to a temporary halt while the committee retired and had a consultation with the witness. The conference lasted an hour, during which time Mr. Funk made an effort to find the detective. Failing in this, the hearing adjourned, and it is expected that the detective will be summoned before the committee.

Mr. Funk's interesting disclosure came after a long and rather dull session in which he repeated the testimony he gave the Helm committee at Springfield and told again the story of how Edward Hines approached him and asked him to contribute $10,000 to help make up the fund of $100,000 spent in gatting Lorimer elected by the Illinois assembly.

Mr. Funk did not remember mentioning the names of Roger Sullivan and one of the Weyerbousers to Hines, but one of the latter is related bis conversation with Hines.

ALASKA COAL CLAIMS VOID

Cunningham Filings Are Disallowed by Land Commissioner Sanctioned by Secretary of Interior Fisher.

Washington.—The famous Cunningham Alaskan coal land claims, through which it has been alleged that the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate planned to extend its vast interests in Alaska and to control one of the most valuable fields in the world, were finally disallowed by the department of the interior.

Walter L. Fisher, secretary of the interior, having approved the department's decision, as handed down by Fred Dennett, commissioner of the land office, the last door is believed to have been closed to the Cunningham claimants. Their attorneys have threatened an appeal to the United States Supreme court, but such an appeal can be based only on some point of law involved and not on questions of fact as announced by the department.

The Cunningham claims have been in the public eye for more than two years. They brought about thn Ballinger-Pinchot investigation by congress and the dismissal from the public service of Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot. Louis R. Glavis, a chief of field division in the land office, and several minor officials. Both Pinchot and Glavis were dismissed for insubordination incident to their attacks on former Secretary Ballingar.

ROOT AMENDMENT IS LOST

Provision Proposing to Change Paper Section in Reciprocity Bill Defeated in Senate.

Washington.—Without evan tha formality of a record vote the Root amandment to the reciprocity bill was voted down obliviou.

In tha first test of strength on reciprocity the senate defeated the paper section proposal by a two-to-one vote. A few scattering ayes, followed by a roar of nose, told tha story.

President Taft expressed great satisfaction over the result. The friends of reciprocity accept the result as a majority of what is to follow when the vote is taken. Scores of amendments await to be disposed of yet, and there are still more to be introduced. They run the entire gamut of tariff revision. But all amendments will be resolutely voted down.

INDICT LUMBER MEN

FEDERAL GRAND JURY INDICTS FOURTEEN.

Officials of Organization Are Charged With Violating the Sreman Law and Accused of Conspiracy.

Chicago.—The special grand jury in the United States district court returned before Judge Landis indictments against 14 securities and former secretaries of wholesalo and retail lumber dealers' associations in the western territory, charging a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade in violation of the criminal provisions of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Those indicted are:

Arthur S. Holmes, Detroit, Mich., secretary of the Michigan Retail Lumber Dealers' association and editor of the Scout, a trade paper owned and controlled by lumber dealers.

George F. Sweet, also secretary of the Michigan association.

Willard C. Hoitb, Minneapolis, secretary of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association.

Henry A. Goruch, Kansas City, Mo., secretary of the Southwestern Lumbermen's association.

Bird Critchfield, Lincoln, Neb., secretary of the Nebraska Lumber Dealers' association.

E. S. Hull, also secretary of the Nebraska association.

Harry C. Scearce, Mooresville, Ind., secretary of the Retail Lumber Dealers' association of Indiana.

H. H. Hemaway, Denver, Colo., secretary of the Colorado and Wyoming Lumber Dealers' association.

Louis I. Hellmen, also secretary of the Colorado and Wyoming association.

H. S. Adams, Chillicothe, O., secretary of the Union Association of Lumber Dealers, and also of the Ohio Association of Retail Lumber Dealers.

B. N. Heyward, Columbus, O., also secretary of the Ohio association.

A. L. Porter, Spokane, Wash., secretary of the Western Retail Lumbermen's association.

R. P. Bransford, Jnion City, Tenn., secretary of the Retail Lumber Dealers' association of West Tennessee.

A. C. Rightor, Pittsburg, Pa., secretary of the Retail Lumber Dealers' association of Pennsylvenia.

Three men escaped indictment by giving testimony before the grand jury, thereby wrapping themselves in the cloak of immunity prescribed by law. They are Paul Lachmund, Milwaukee, secretary of the Wisconsin Retail Lumber Dealers' association; George W. Hotchkiss, Chicago, secretary of the Illinois Lumber and Builders' Supply Dealers' association, and at present secretary of the secretaries' bureau, and George Wilson Jones, also secretary of the Illinois association and assistant secretary of the secretaries bureau.

Each individual is indicted on two counts, the first alleging a conspiracy among the retail dealers to restrain interstate trade and commerce between the manufacturer and wholesaler and the consumer, and the second charging a conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition which otherwise would exist between wholesaler and manufacturer and the retailer in supplying the consumer.

NEW PAROLE RULES

NEW BODY ESTABLISHED BY ACT OF RECENT LEGISLATURE, PROMULGATES LAW OF PROCEDURE

ORAL ARGUMENTS ARE BARRED

Prisoner's Conduct, Previous Record, Nature of Crime and Future Prospects to Decide His Fate.

Seventeen rules, governing the parole of prisoners from the state reformatory and the state prison and providing the procedure that will be followed by the State Parole board established under the law passed by the last Legislature, were promulgated by the State Board of Control.

The rules provide that the parole board shall meet at the two institutions as near the first of each month as possible, to hear applications for parole; prohibit oral arguments favoring or opposing a prisoner's parole, and make it obligatory upon a prisoner, when applying for parole, to furnish the board all facts concerning his previous history. This information will do kept confidential.

Four points will be taken into account by the board in considering an application for parole: The prisoner's conduct in the institution; his previous record, tendencies and habits; the nature of his crime, and the probabilities, from all of the facts obtainable, that he will lead a correct life if paroled.

The Rules.

The rules in full follow:

First—the board of parole will meet at the Minnesota state reformatory and the Minnesota state prison as near the first of each month as convenience and the permit, to hear applications for parole.

Second—Applicants may appear before the board of parole at the first meeting after they have served the minimum sentence, provided they have remained in the first grade for six months previous to their appearance before the board.

Third—An application which has once been denied shall not be again made within six months from date of denial, unless otherwise directed at the time of the hearing.

Fourth—The law creating the board of parole does not prohibit said board from receiving or considering petitions urging the release of any prisoner on parole, but for convenience in the dispatch of business and in the interest of uniform justice to all, oral arguments or petitions from any person not connected with the prosecution or the prisoner in favor of or against the parole application of any prisoner, will not be permitted.

Fifth—In considering the question of the parole of an inmate, the board will take into account his conduct while an inmate of the institution; his history prior to his imprisonment; his character, tendencies, and habits, as shown by his prison life; the nature of the crime committed by the prisoner; the circumstances from all the facts that the prisoner is a fit subject for parole.

Sixth—Each prisoner, shortly after entering the institution, will be required to give a statement of his case in accordance with the questions and on the blank form provided for that purpose. This statement will be made a part of the permanent record of each prisoner, and will be used for the purpose of investigation and verification as to his past record, and will be presented with other records to the said board of parole, when the prisoner's application for parole is under consideration.

Seventh—No prisoner who claims to have friends who can give employment or assistance or addresses to the superintendent of the reformatory or to the warden of the state prison or to the state agent, will not be paroled until a satisfactory history of his past life is obtained. Such information, when obtained, shall also be used by the superintendent or warden of the prisoner or his friends, but will not be made public without his consent. It is required, in order that the officials may be thoroughly acquainted with the conditions and circumstances surrounding the past life of the prisoner.

Eighth—Employment for Prisoners.

Eighteen months before the sentence does not enter into the consideration of applying for a parole therefore it is not allowed unless provided for by special permission, that prisoners write to friends or relatives asking for assignment for employment either before or after their discharge.

Ninth—Matters pertaining to the place and kind of employment to be taken up with each prisoner by the state agent, under direction of the board of parole. All contracts for employment are subject to the approval of the board of parole or by the executive committee.

Tenth—Parents, wives or relatives of paroled prisoners will not be allowed to sign employment contracts unless specially provided by the board of parole or its agents. Where it is thought necessary a personal investigation of places of employment will be made, in order to avoid unfavorable conditions for supervision of prisoner while on parole as it is possible to do so.

Eleventh—Should it be necessary in order to avoid trouble or censure by improper treatment of the paroled prisoner or of his inability to do the work required, prompt investigation will be made by the state agent under the direction of the superintendent of the state reformatory or the warden of the state prison, to the end that justice and protection and justice to the employee and employer.

Twelfth—No paroled prisoner will be placed where there is any reason to believe that he will not be treated fairly and justly, and said for his service in accordance with the laws governing the hours and location.

Thirteenth—No change of employment will be made without the written consent of the parole officer, except as to the duties of his part of his agreement.

Fifteenth—During the period of parole the prisoner shall be in the legal custody and under the control of the superintendents of the state reformatory or the warden of the state prison, or the state agents of the respective institutions, until the expiration of the maximum term of his sentence has expired, unless sooner discharged; all of which shall be under the direction of the state board of parole.

Sixteenth—Paroled prisoners must remain at their employment until given written permission to leave by the state agents or by the superintendent or the warden of the respective institution from which he was paroled.

Seventeenth—Should any person on parole leave the employer or attempt to hide from or conceal himself from authority over him, he will be regarded as an escaped prisoner and every possible means will be employed to secure his detention and prompt return to the institution from which he was paroled.

STANDARD MEASURES.

State Railroad Commissioners Arranging to Get Correct Set.

Washington. — At the instance of Chairman Mills and Messrs. Staples and Elmquist of the Minnesota Railroad and warehouse commission, the federal bureau of standards will cooperate with the state in the enforcement of the new law relating to weights and measures.

Messrs. Mills, Staples and Elmquist had a conference with S. W. Stratton, director of the bureau of standards. In discussion the conference, Chairman Mills said:

"Director Stratton explained the work of Bureau of Standards and how its co-operates with state and municipal authorities in securing standard weights and measures. When we return to Minnesota we will purchase a set of weights and measures to be used as the State standard and will send them to the Bureau of Standards here to be tested and certified.

"With this set of weights and measures we can proceed with inspections throughout the state, as we are directed to by the law passed by the last legislature. We will appoint a number of inspectors, who will be paid fixed salaries, but who will collect fees for their work and turn them into the inspection fund. We have found in Chicago and in this city that there are objectionable features to the fee system of compensating for inspectors, and we propose to take the fees collected and measure service therefrom. We hope to make the bureau self-supporting."

HAS NEW FORESTRY METHOOS

Hubert, Minn., Man Submits a plan To Federal Officials

Washington.—New methods in forestry by which, it is claimed, land can be reforested from seed half the time it generally takes, have been submitted to Chief Forester Graves and Secretary of Agriculture Wilson by Freemen Thorp, of Hubert, Minn. Mr. Thorp formerly was a practical painter inWashington. His painting of Speaker Colfax, vice president under U. S. Grant, and many state paintings of the house of representitives, was hung in the capitol Saturday.

Seventeen years ago Mr. Thorp bought 1,500 acres of land in Minnesota. Since then he has been experimenting in forestry. By constructing embankments from two to three feet high around his trees he has managed to give them the boneficence of about twice the former amount of moisture, and to conserve water and enable it to settle around the roots. He found that his trees within the embankments grew about twice the size of those outside in the same period of time.

He came to Washington to fish and hang the Colfax portrait he brought along specimens of the timber. Among these are oak, white pine, and jack pine. These were exhibited to the chief forester and the secretary of agriculture. These officials promoted to make visits to the Minnesota farm in the near future. It is likely that similar methods will be tried soon in the nutional forests.

RURAL SCHOOLS INSANITARY.

Health Board Employes Investigate Complaints From Many Places.

Complaints are being received by the State Board of Health showing deplorable sanitary conditions in connection with the Minnesota rural schools. Employes of the health board have made examinations into the schools against which complaints, and they are convinced that these conditions are inimical to the health of the pupils and to the residents of the districts.

The board received a vigorous complaint from a town living near the outbuildings of a rural school. He said that conditions were unbearable and implored the board to take immediate steps to have them rectified. The board however, is powerless to act. There is also an absence of authority in the department of public instruction to compel the clean unsanitary school premises. At the last legislature a bill was proposed authorizing the board of health to inspect rural schools. It was not passed.

There are laws providing for an inspection into sanitary and other conditions of the jails and hospitals, but there is no law compelling local boards to keep their schools clean and sanitary.

VINEGAR CASE ON

ACTION AGAINST CHICAGO FIRM NOW ON AT MINNEAPOLIS, TO BE BITTERLY FOUGHT.

FIRST UNDER U. S. FOOD LAWS

Federal Experts On Ground—Manufacturers of Whole Country Are Watching Seizure of 100 Barrels of Cider Vinegar.

The first important application of the federal pure food law provision relating to cider vinegar commenced in the United States district court in Minneapolis, when the case of the government against Spellmun Bros. of Chicago came up for trial.

According to government experts both the prosecution and defense have been accumulating data for a long period and the present action will be fought to the bitter end.

Assert Product Was Not Pure.

Spellmun Brothers are charged with violating the pure food law by selling cider vinegar in Minnesota which the federel authorities assert was not pure. The vinegar, 100 barrels, was seized here by government inspectors who declared it was a distilled product and was not made entirely from the juice of apples, although some of the original juice was found in it. The allegation is made that their products is about one-half cider vinegar and one-half distilled products, mixed with acetic acid. The government experts speaking generally, say manufacturers not only sell an impure article, but make it so that one barrel will produce about the same results that two barrels of pure cider vinegar do, and that it is therefore much in demand by picking works. The consignee were Berrett & Barrett, local dictributors for Spellmun Bros.

The federel experts, Messrs. Doolittle, Tolman and Bender, held a conference yesterday with United States District Attorney C. C. Houpt and will continue it today.

Jury Trial Under the Law.

Mr. Doolittle said no test of the law relating to vinegar had been made since it went into effect. Many seizures had been made, he said, but the manufacturers never allowed the cases to go to court until the present instance. Spellmun Brothers, however, assert their product was pure and therefore was entitled to be labeled as such.

Immediately after the seizure the firm decided to offer contest. Since that time experts of the company and the government have been busy gathering and organizing data to be used in the trial. Mr. Doolittle said manufacturers the country over are watching the proceeding and its outcome will be of unusual interest to both sides.

The case is being heard by Judge C. A. Willard.

BREN OUT ON BOND.

Former Treasurer of the University on $15,000 Ball.

Minneapolis. — Joseph D. Bren, former actiug treasurer of the University of Minnesota, entered on an indictment charging the embezzlement of $21,616.31, is at liberty on bonds for $15,000, after he had been in the sheriff's custody for three hours.

The bonds are for $10,000, $3,000 and $2,000. The $10,000 bond is signed by Bren's father and brothers, Frank Bren and Sam Bren. The $3,000 bond is signed by A. C. Jerome, a real estate man, and Henry C. Gilbert, a lawyer. The bond for $2,000 is signed by James A. Tyler, a contractor, and Martha Cross, a teacher.

Although the grand jury has adjourned to Aug. 8, the work of examining Bren's books is being continued by the public examiner and by John Barry, expert accountant employed by the county.

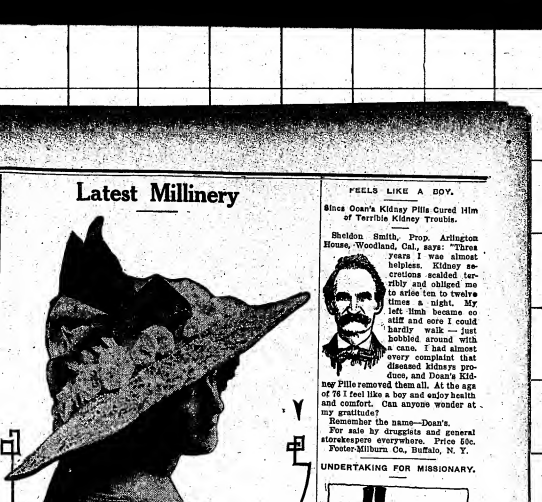
CLOUDBURST AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Heavy Rains, Accompanied by Hail And Electrical Storm.

Minneapolis. — The three drought was broken here by a storm of cloudburst proportions. In less less than one hour there was a precipitation of three inches.

A water main added to the flood when it broke at the height of the storm. The water ripped its way thru Harding, tore up the pavements and flooded neighboring basements.

Lightning struck the eight-story building of the Studebaker Automobile company, and set the roof on fire. The flames were put ont before much damage was done.



Six residences, a barn, a saloon and a street car were also struck, one man being injured on the latter.

G. N. FLYER IN WRECK.

"Winnipeg Limited" Hits Box Car Blown on Track Near Barnesville —No One Badly Hurt.

Barnesville.—The Winnipeg Limited, the Great Northern's crack train, at a point four miles south of the city, crashed into a lone box car, which had been driven on to the main line from the yards here by last night's strong windstorm. Engineer Otis of St. Paul was cut about the face by flying glass from the cab windows.

THIS hat, in white hemp, is bordered with a band of Irish crochet lace. White tulle rosse eet in a white wing scarf are banked over the low, rounded crown. A bow of chiffon velvet in pale coral color is wired to stand at the right front where it is mounted egainst the crown. If this is not a perfect design, no one has been found as yet and we need not look for anything better.

The happy possessor of a scarf of real face in duchess point, Honiton or Spanish lace, or any of the finer hand-made laces, may use them as a drapery on white hemp, in the manner shown in the third hat pictured here. To cut such a piece of lace is out of the question; a too short-sighted to entertain at all. It may be doubled, plaited or folded over, and laid over or about a white hemp shape and fostened to the shape with a band of handsome ribbon and rosettes of fine flowers. Rich lace should be applied to the shape with very little fullness. The design and work are to show and must be emphasized; therefore full gatherings are out of harmony. If there is too much lace in a length, one end may be rolled up and concealed under a trimming.

ETIQUETTE FOR THE VISITOR

Many Little Points That Mean Much and Must Be Considered of Importance.

A girl's first fitting from home encroundings and restraint is a pretty good test of her manners and true character. She often develops traits that she herself was never before aware of. How often to attract attention and court popularity at some summer resort the quiet sedate maiden suddenly becomes conspicuous and "sporty," or stranger may have the effect of making her self-conscious and rude. She does not mean to he so, but she often loses her perspective for the true fitness of things and a new environment breede all manner of unsuspected qualities.

If she would only realize the wealth of wisdom and the breadth of experience that a well-bred girl may glean from traveling and meeting intereet-ing people!

She should never be cold and forbidding to strangers, but she should also avoid the fatel mistake of rushing into intimecies which she will too soon regret.

A gracious mennor and good temper are charme which attract invariably the best natural sweetness of girlhood is greeter thnn any pose which she may try to seeume.

When visiting friends or relatives a guest should adapt herself as well as possible to her environment and bring no jarring note or undue disturbance into the family circle. There are so many little attentions that can bring comfort and joy into a household! If a hostess feels that her guest needs consideration and entertainment and special service, she will not wish to repeat her invitation to soon again.

Never he late for meals, he pleesant to the servants, observe the prevailing habits of your host and hostess, be thoughtful and considerate, so that when your visit is ended there will be true regret, and there will be a genuine ring in your hostess' voice when she says, "Be surn and come soon again."

When Traveling.

Don't try to "do your hair" in the dressing room of a sleeping car. You will either exclude other women or be jostled by them. Get up early and push up the upper berth (you can precall upon sim by using tact or blandishments) and sit "Turk fashion" in front of the mirror. Cleanse your face, ears and throat with cold cream and violet water, arrange your hair to don your garments and step out of your berth as from your hotel room. A few minutes with toothbrush, nail brush and soap in the dressing room, and you are ready for the "first call for breakfast."—Good Housekeeping.

Rice Fritters.

Beat two eggs until thoroughly broken, then add one pint of milk, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one tablespoonful melted butter, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one pint cooked rice, grated rind and juice of half a lemon, and flour enough to hold the mixture into a deep hatter. Drop by dessert spoonfuls into smoking hot fat, and when the fritters float and are delicately browned remove to a brown paper; dust with pulverized sugar when ready to serve.

FOR THE TRAVELER.

Here is a smart traveling costume of fine navy-blue serge, the collor and cuffs being finished with striped blue and white silk. The same design is also intended for Tussore, with black and white ribbed silk trimming, the seame piped emarily with black silk, particularly becoming to e stout figure.

The Quaint Poke Bonnet.

For the woman whose face can stand this piquant bit of headgear, the eighteenth century poke honnet is a most fascinating affair.

Some of the smart millinere are showing spring and summer models in this shape. Often they are carried out in two kinds of straw—in contrast black and white.

On these bats the trimming is, of course, well toward the back. Sometimes a great bow stretches across the straw, or clusters of dainty poeies adorn the sides.

The crowns on these poke honnets are arranged fold-like and tilt well toward the back of the head to accentuate the "poke" effect.

Luxurious Negligees.

Some of the new negligees are hard to tell from the transparent coats which are displayed in other departments. Between a pink chiffon boudoir gown, embroidered in self color and dropped over a pink silk lining, and a pink chiffon embroidered coat over pink satin, there was no little radical difference that only one ophthalmic optician in distinctions sartorial could have asserted which was for which. The average woman, however, will contend herself with one of the distracting houdoir gowns of china silk and lace, or of flowered organdy cut in lovely long lines and lined with lace honeycombings.

FEELS LIKE A BOY.

Since Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Him of Terrible Kidney Trouble.

Sheldon Smith, Prop. Arlington House, Woodland, Cal., says: "Three years I was almost helpless. Kidney secretions scalded terribly and obliged me to arise ten to twelve times a night. My left limb became so stiff and sore I could hardly walk — just hobbled around with a cane. I had almost every complaint that diseased kidneys produce, and Doan's Kidney Pills removed them all. At the age of 76 I feel like a boy and enjoy health and comfort. Can anyone wonder at my gratitude?

BABY'S HAIR ALL CAME OUT

"When my first baby was six months old he broke out on his head with little bumps. They would dry up and leave a scale. Then it would break out again and it spread all over his head. All the hair come out and his head was scaly all over. Then his face broke out all over in red bumps and it kept spreading until it wee on his hands and arms. I bought several boxes of ointment, gave him blood medicine, and had two doctors to treat him, but got worse all the time. He had it about six months when a friend told me about Cuticura. I sent and got a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. In three days after using them he began to improve. He began to take long naps and to stop scratching his head. After taking two bottles of Resolvent, two boxes of Ointment and three cakes of Soap he wee cound and well, and never had any breaking out on his head. His hair came out in little curls all over his head. I don't think anything else would have cured him except Cuticura.

"I have bought Cuticura Ointment and Soap several times since to use for cuts and sores and have never known them to fail to cure what I put them on. I think Cuticura is a great remedy and would advise any one to use it. Cuticura Soap is the best that I have ever used for toilet purpoce." (Signed) John F. D. Bruton, R. F. D. 3, Atoke, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1910.

In Golf.

"Is this your ball over here?"

"Is it in a hole?"

"Yes."

"A deep hole?"

"Yes."

"With eighty overhonging banks, so you can't possibly get at it?"

"Yes."

"Then it's my ball, all right."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 '05, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Although we are a new county, it would certainly be a good advertisement to put, at least a small exhibit of our farm products, on exhibition at the state fair. We hope to have a string of corn that will compare favorably with any grass corn raised in the state of Minnesota.

The Annual School meetings are to be held on next Saturday evening July 15th, at 7 o'clock p. m. Every tax payer should attend these annual meetings, as that is the time the length of the school term is voted and the amount of taxes voted. That is your business Mr. Taxpayer, and you should go to school meeting and attend to it.

Senator Nelson proposed that the senate take a recess to November or December, before they took action on the Canadian reciprocity bill If they do the bill is likely to be defeated, as it does not seem possiable that the Republican party desire to commit suicide, for they may be sure if they pass that bill that the farmers will go in with the Democrats and level that tariff wall flat

The placing of Dr. Dumas, of Cass Lake under $10,000 bonds, on the statement of a stranger that was caught red handed committing a robbery, would have the appearence of a violation of article 1 of Sec. 5 of the Constitution. Of course no one indorses crime, but if Dr. Dumas had not had a rich father he would have had to raid in jail until Septemb'er. We would think there was something wrong with the statements of some of these detectives, that are working for a reward, even if we knew of our own knowledge that they were stateing facts, as some of them would aware their graduation into the penitentiary for a small reward. If Dumas is guilty we hope he will fast his just punishment, but that Bemidji judge that fixed his bail at $10, 000, on the statements of a bank robber must never have read the Constitution of the state of Minnesota, and must have red hair on the back of his neck

When the sea is smooth we have many good sailors.

Force Yourself to Be Well.

"Plant your feet firmly and squarely on the ground, throw back your shoulders, fold your arms and affirm in most emphatic terms that you are strong, healthy and well. Do this for a few minutes every morning, and, even if this is not how you actually feel, maintain by your physical and mental attitude that it is your condition, and you will soon find that it becomes so and that you are not really telling "lies." This was the advice given by Dr. J. Stenson Hooker in a lecture on "Soothering and Posing For Health" at the simple life conference and exhibition in London. "It is wonderful to what extent our state of health can be altered in this way," Dr. Hooker added. "It stirs up the currents of feeling which act on the nerves. These act on the blood vessels, and then the whole system is improved, and we become different beings."

He Was Well Off.

H. Clay Calhoun, testifying in an assault case, spoke of our Washington White as "well off."

"Now, witness," said the cross examining lawyer, "when you declare White to be well off, what do you mean? Is he worth $10,000?"

"No, sah. Oh, no, sah," said Calhoun. "He is worth $2,000?"

"No, sah, sah, emphatic, no!"

"He is worth $1,000?"

"No, sah; he ain't worf it cents."

"Then how is he well off?"

"Well, sah, I mean as an A No. 1 colored man, spoke of and Washington White as "well off."

A Versatile Gardner.

The Dwellers in a suburb town of Massachusetts are justly proud of their gardens. It reminded me a while ago from a city village "way round the Cape" to see the first signboard announcing one of these gardens. "Don't this beautiful!" my hostess said as we passed under a rose arbor and entered into a cozy nursery rustic of turkey-red, morn's head, hollyhocks and many other favorites.

"It's a wonderful garden of its kind," said the visitor dispassionately, "but it isn't quite up to the mark when you consider our gardner."

"Indeed!" and the lady looked at me less mortified to be smart: "What sort of gardner have you, please?"

"Well," said her Cape visitor calmly, "what we call a good gardin is one where you can start out with two big baskets and a hoe, step through the flower garden part, past the vegetables, down to the water; dig your clams fast, pick your sweet corn, lay your beaues on top of that and bend the whole lot over at the kitchen door. There's your share dinner and trim mice all from one gardin."—Youth's Companion.

The Wise Woodpecker.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year beautifully in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception. But he does not eat the acorn, for, as a rule, he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a forethought of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorns remain intact, becoming saturated, are predisposed to decay, when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided at a time when the ground being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.—Cleveland Leader.

Indignant.

The mayor of a small town had come to Leipzig to see the fair. A stranger who had lost his way asked him, "Prny, good honest man, what is the name of this street?"

"I am not a good honest man," said the former; "I am the mayor of Marburg."

Distinction, If No Difference.

"Why do you want to marry my daughter?"

"I'm no object of charity; I wouldn't accept your money in any other way."

KNEW HIS BUSINESS.

This Parisian Beggar Realized the Value of New Shoes.

Begging has long been a great art in Europe. By using subtle touches of misery and calculated effects of disease and dismemberment the beggar became a master of pathetic appeal. A delightful story of Dupre, the sculptor, is quoted by Hamilton W. Mable in the Outlook.

Looking out of his window in a hotel one bleak wintry morning in the good old times, Dupre saw an old beggar shifting barefooted on the stone steps below. His heart was moved with compassion, and he began to search for a pair of shoes. He found two pairs, one of them new.

"Do not give the new pair away; you will need them yourself," urged his prudent wife.

"No," said the sculptor, "I shall find the old pair more comfortable. Moreover, if I am to give anything away I am going to give the best I have."

So he hurried downstairs and put the new shoes in the hands of the barefooted old man. The next morning the beggar sat on the steps as usual, and, as usual, he had worn here. Dupre hurried down to him. "Where are the shoes I gave you? You are not wearing them," he said.

"No," replied the old man, "I could not wear them, excellency. If I did nobody would give me anything. I have pawned them."

Lakes of Blood.

The name Lake of Blood or its equivalent has been given to places as far apart as England and South America.

"Sanguelac"—i. e., the Lake of Blood—was the name given by the Victorious Normans to the battlefield at Hastings, where the Saxons were overthrown and slain with terrible carnage.

For a similar reason Lake Trasimene has borne the name "Sanguinetto" because its waters were reddened during the second Punic war by the blood of some 15,000 Romans who fell before the troops of Hannibal.

Yet another Lake of Blood, called also "Tenare Cocha," is situated in the state of Ecuador. It is one of a series of lakes formed by the extinct craters of volcanoes on the towering heights of the Andes range of mountains.

The Donkey's Head.

Among the most extraordinary pieces of symbolism known to have been used by the early Asiatics was a figure of a donkey's head used as a representative of the deity. There is no doubt whatever that this same emblem was once used among the Hittites, the Egyptians and out of two sided symbols of a crystal ball of their feet God, but the superstition of the yellow donkey of India, the story of the swift ass of Sakuntala and the ass of Dionysus and many other marvelous ass stories are all survivals of that curious form of religious worship, the adoration of the sun's head.

Eddystone Lighthouse.

The Eddystone lighthouse, fourteen miles off Plymouth, England, and exposed to the full fury of the most westerly seas, was built by Winstanley in four seasons. Begun in 1696 and finished in 1700, it was destroyed by the dreadful storm of 1703. The second structure was completed in 1709 and destroyed in 1755, after it had faced the wind and the waves for something over forty-six years. The third tower, finished in 1759 and condemned in 1878, was followed by the present wonderful structure, which since 1882 has been defying the elements while it flashed out over the terrific waters its saving light. Since the brave Winstanley built the first Eddystone lighthouse similar safeguards have sprung up like mushrooms all along all the coasts of all the oceans, and those who sail upon the great deeps of the earth are forewarned and forearmed against the dangers which threaten them.—New York American.

A High Priced Fricasee.

Lord Alvanley, a noted wit and high liver in England a hundred years or so ago, included on having an apple tart on his dinner table every day throughout the year. On one occasion he paid a caterer $1,000 for a luncheon put up in a basket that sufficed a small hostine party going up the Thames during one of a dozen men dining together at a London club where each was required to produce his own dish. Alvanley's was the most expensive, won him the advantage of being entertained free of cost. This lunch was gained at an expense of $540, that being the price of a simple fricassee composed entirely of the "nuts" or small pieces at each side of the back, taken from thirteen kinds of birds, among them being 100 snipe, 40 woodcocks and 20 pheasants—in all about 300 birds.

Our Eccentric Phrases.

Why do we always talk of putting on a coat and vest? Who puts on a vest before a coat? We also say putting on shoes and stockings. Who puts on shoes before the stockings? We also put on signs telling people to wipe their feet when we mean their boots or shoes. And a father tells a boy he will warm his jacket when he means to warm his pantaloons. We are a little eccentric in our phrases at times.

Ulterior Motives.

"See, here," said the kind hearted lady, "I gave you a piece of pie two weeks ago, and you have been around one or more of your friends here every day since."

"Does do me a injustice, ma'am," replied the husky hobo. "Dem guys wot I seet was me enemies."—Chicago News.

Not Familiar With the Quotation.

"Ah, Mr. Blinks," said the fair one lightly, "I see you wear your heart upon your sleeve."

Mr. Blinks looked bewildered and hastily rolled down his cuffs.

"I guess maybe it was my red flannel undershirt you noticed," he lamely remarked.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised Me From the Grave"—Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough of your great medicine. If anyone had offered me $10,000 for the second bottle of Nervine that I used I would not have sold them."

MRS. THOMAS TAYLOR,

A Lucky Game of Chess.

A story is told of the Moorish prince Abul Hejex, who was thrown into prison for sedition by his brother Mohammed, king of Granada. There he remained for several years until the king, fearing he might escape, placed himself at the head of a fresh revolt and seized the crown, ordering one of his pashas to see to his immediate execution. Abul Hejex was playing at chess, when the pasha came and bade him prepare for death. The prince asked for two hours' respite, which was refused. After earnest entreaty he obtained permission to finish his game. He was in no hurry about the moves, we are told, and well for him he was not, for before an hour had elapsed a messenger brought the news that Mohammed had been struck dead by apoplexy, and Abul was forthwith proclaimed king of Granada. It was indeed a small favor for the pasha to grant, but it altered the whole current of the king's career.

Mrs. Clarke, says the Boston Globe, does not trust those things entirely to memory, but writes them down. Recently she wrote a letter to her husband, who is in the city, and in the course of it she said: "Don't forget to bring home the cake of soap I asked you to get."

Mr. Clarke, on receiving the letter, wrote back: "Don't forget to bring home the letter I asked you to write."

Shocking!

Miss D., a teacher of unquestioned propriety in all its branches, was one of the throes of commencement, and to the best of her ability was entertaining some young man—the mother of her fair pupils. They conversed on some beautiful flowers in the drawing room. "Yes," exclaimed the old lady, "but if you think these are pretty, you just ought to go upstairs and look in the bath-tube of the girls' dormitories. They are just full of American beauties!"

A New Sensation.

Little Jean had visited one of the large summer amusement parks for the first time, and with the courage possessed only by those girls whose playmates are boys and girls older than themselves, she had not hesitated, when invited, to take a ride on one of the "thrillers" that abound in such places.

To her mother, on her return from the park, she confided the sensations she had experienced as she swept round the curves of the "figure eight" with her brothers.

"Mamma," she said, "when I went round those awful turns so fast I felt just as if I had freckles on my stomach!"—Youth's Compaiion.

Ben's Logic.

"Ben," said his friend, waking up from a reverie in which he had been gazing abstractedly at the shiny expanse of Ben's skatin'-rak-for-dies, "is there anything you could do for your baldness?"

Ben, by the way, is only forty.

"No, lod!" he replied with decision. "Fifteen years ago I was getting stuck. I tried lots of things. But about that time t' prince of Wales—Edward, you know—came to open t' new hospital, and I said to myself as soon as I saw him itfhis his hat to t' crowd, 'Ben, my lad, tha can give it up as a lost job, and save thy brass. If there was owt 'at 'ud cure a bald heead thoy'd ha' cured his.'"—Tit-Bits.

HEART RIGHT,
When He Quit Coffee.

Life insurance Companies will not insure a man suffering from heart trouble.

The reason is obvious.

This is a serious matter to the business man who is solicitous for the future of his dear ones. Often the heart trouble is caused by an unexpected thing and can be corrected if taken in time and properly treated. A man in Colorado writes:

"I was a great coffee drinker for many years, and was not aware of the injurious effects of the habit till I became a practical invalid, suffering from heart trouble, indigestion and nervousness to an extent that made me wretchedly miserable myself and a nuisance to those who witnessed my sufferings.

"I continued to drink coffee, however, not suspecting that it was the cause of my ill-health, till on applying for life insurance I was rejected on account of the troubles with my heart. Then I became alarmed. I found that leaving off coffee helped me quickly, so I quit it altogether and having been introduced by the advertisements of Postum I began its use.

"The change in my condition was remarkable. All my ailments vanished. My digestion was completely restored, my nervousness disappeared, and, most important of all, my heart steadied down and became normal, and on a second examination I was accepted by the Life Insurance Co. Quitting coffee and using Postum worked the change." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Geraldine's Husband

BY ANTOINETTE PATTERSON

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Just think! I have a dinner every night this week, and three luncheons for Saturday!"

Geraldine Markham turned around from her secretary to view the effect of her words on her husband.

But all that Wilfrid Markham said —and that without looking up from his paper—was:

"I am afraid, Geraldine, you may find that dried luncheon something of an effort!"

"You don't take the slightest interest in anything I do," Geraldine continued pettishly, ignoring the sarcasm.

"Because you do such stupid things," retorted her husband.

"It's stupid of you to say such things when, from utter lack of experience, you don't know whether what I do is interesting or not. If you'd go about with me, even if only for a week, then your judgment might be worth something. But no; all that counts with you is a comfortable chair, a cigar and an old book. I do so wish at times you were a little more like other men."

Wilfrid Markham looked up. His wife was very young and very pretty —and, well; perhaps the shoe fitted him rather well.

"I don't want to be disagreeable, Geraldine," he said, "so if you wish you may accept the next batch of invitations for me for a whole week."

The Markhams had been married, as Geraldine had put it with that down-drop of her pretty mouth, "a whole long year!" And they were beginning to pull in different directions.

But now, at these last words of her husband, the year seemed to Geraldine a much shorter time. "That is bully of Wilfrid," she thought, and then she bent over his chair and kissed him.

"I'll promise some time this winter to read three of the fattest books you can pick out," Geraldine said, by way of exchange.

Just then Ida maid announced Mrs. Henry Paysan.

Wilfrid Markham prepared to make his escape, but his wife de-

"I'll Ask Him," Said Geraldine.

tained him. "Do stay to see her," she urged; "she is entertaining a good deal this year, and one of the invitations we are going to accept I want to come from her."

So Markham adjusted his cravat and patiently remained.

Mrs. Paysan entered the room like a fresh breeze.

"My dear!" she exclaimed, "how fortunate to find you at home! And Mr. Markham, too, whom I had the pleasure of meeting but once for about three minutes. But I assure you those three minutes were among the pleasantest in my life. Geraldine, you simply must bring Mr. Markham to the little dinner I am giving on the 29th. I've invited some awfully clever people, and your husband will be just in his element. Promise me, Mr. Markham, you will let-Geraldine bring you."

"I shall be charmed," Wilfrid Markham said.

After the visitor had gone Wilfrid quite surprised his wife by the interest he showed. "What a remarkably pretty woman she is," he remarked several times. "I don't think I have ever seen a much sweeter face or manner. What a fool Harry Paysan must have been to let her go out of his life!"

Geraldine smiled to herself at the thought of her husband's lack of worldly wisdom, but she said nothing. To have him consent to go out with her for a whole week was quite enough.

Wilfrid had unmistakable charm, she knew, and people would be apt to make rather a fuss over him once they got the chance.

On the morning of the twenty-ninth a new evening suit arrived for Mr. Markham.

"My other one looked so old-fashioned," he explained to Geraldine, "that I felt it would really be disrespectful to Mrs. Paysan."

The dinner proved a great success. At least so Wilfrid Markham declared. He had been placed at the right of the hostess, who had been most graciously interested in everything he said, and so appreciative of the sense of humor on which he had always prided himself and which somehow Geraldine usually failed to see.

Several times on the way home he had again remarked to Geraldine what a fool Harry Paysan must have been. As for Geraldine, the dinner had seemed to her rather a stupid affair; abs boped the others for which they were engaged would prove more interesting.

Two days after Mrs. Paysan's dinner Geraldine was called up on the 'phone by that lady herself.

"Geraldine, you won't think me very outrageous, will you, dear, when I say I want to borrow your husband for the opera tonight. I've just been sent two tickets, and Mr. Markham told me he adored music. He's such a dear! Now, Geraldine, don't say he has an engagement."

"I'll ask him," said Geraldine.

Mr. Markham looked up briskly so soon as his wife mentioned Mrs. Paysan's name. "How kind of her," he exclaimed. "Well, I'll talk to her myself."

And Geraldine heard a most enthusiastic acceptance going over the 'phone.

That night Mrs. Markham sat up reading until her husband came home, which was not until very late, as Mrs. Paysan had persuaded him to return to her apartments for a little supper. Markham reproached his wife for not waiting up for him, and then went into raptures over the music, and never in his life had he met any one to whom music spoke so sympathetically as to Hortense Paysen.

Geraldine disguised the chagrin she certainly felt, and replied rather limply she was glad he had enjoyed his evening so much.

At the other entertainments of this notable week Geraldine saw with ever-increasing alarm that her husband was "taking" immensely. She felt that never before had she fully realized, much less appreciated, his real charm. When he had reserved all of it just for her it had seemed comparatively little worth having, but now that it was being bid for in every direction she wanted it all back again. Whatever had possessed her, then, like some great faithful dog, he had been more than content and happy to rest quietly by his own fireside, to poke him up?

Geraldine had plenty of attention herself in the meantime, but it was a poor compensation having a man she didn't care for talk sentiment to her, while the men she did care for was apparently saying the same thing to another woman.

By the end of the week Geraldine Markham looked quite thin and pale, but her husband's enthusiasm seemed undiminished. He kept urging the acceptance of every invitation that came their way, until finally Geraldine herself struck.

"I'm not going out any more," she said. "I'm tired and sick of it all. I'm thinking of going into a convent. When I reach you I looked upon you to e peaceful, happy home-life, never for a moment thinking you would turn out to be a man whose vice and only thought was society!"

"Society be hanged!" Markham exclaimed with unwonted vehemence. Then he added, feeling the time had now come, "I've been leading a double mild—a very mild—way of life of the average men about town. I never thought I should really like it, and I didn't just so soon as the novelty wore off. I wanted to get back to my books, Gerry!"

For answer Geraldine lighted the lamp and took up one of her husband's favorite volumes.

"I've caught up to your mark," she said, "so we'll start from there." But first she put both her arms around her husband's neck and kissed him.

"And you really don't care for Hortense Paysan?"

"Harry Paysan wasn't the least bit of a fool, after all."

A Chamois Trail.

An interesting sight is to be seen each day at noon at Grindewald in the Alps, when there is a rush of visitors to the telescopes on the chamois "chamois trail," says Harper's Weekly.

Promptly each day, at the hour mentioned, there may be seen a herd of from twenty to thirty chamois passing in Indian file up the yawning abrases of the precipitous Mettenberg rocks, separating two glaciers, the male animals leading the way, the the king of the herd keeping twenty yards in advance and on the watch. At the bottom of the Mettenberg, where the slope is freed from snow, the chamois find a meager subsistence when their usual feeding grounds are under snow. The chamois descend on their feeding grounds at dawn, when there is little likelihood of eyewitness, and return to their haunts at an hour when avalanches have already fallen.

TREATING FOR SIDE BONES

Cartilage Which May in Certain Cases Become Hardened and Thus Lead to Lameness.

(By DR. M'INTOSH, III. Experiment Station.)

On either side of the coffin bone in the horse there is a cartilage which may in certain cases become hardened by deposits of mineral matters and thus lead to lameness. They are situated on one or both sides of the leg and bulge above the upper portion of the hoof. They may be the result of inflamed conditions, bruises or troubles like corns or hoof cracks. Slipping on the stony pavement is a frequent cause, as well as the great weight of the bodies in heevy horses. If the wagon tongue falls on the foot of one of these animals may be injured and indnce the disease. The swelling is first noticed just above the hoof or near the coronet. Lameness soon follows.

The treatment usually recommended for side bones consists in the application of cold foot baths or cold water bandages for a week or more. Tincture of iodine applied to the swollen parts is very good. A blister applied after the water applications have been made for a week or so, is used by many veterinarians. The blister is made of two teaspoonfuls of cantharides mixed with four tablespoonfuls of lard. It is rubbed in well with the fingers and allowed to remain for 24 hours, when it is washed off and applied a second time the following week. These applications are continued until the lameness disappears. If this does not bring permanent relief, then firing of the injured parts and several months' rest will be necessary.

DIFFICULT HABIT TO REMEDY

Only Way to Stop Calves of Sucking Each Other's Ears is to Keep Them Separated.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

One of the most difficult habits to overcome in a bunch of young calves is that of ear sucking. When two calves milk from a pail they eat so rapidly that they fail to relieve the mouth of the saliva which naturally mixes with its mother's milk while it is sucking.

In order to relieve their mouths of the secretion which their organs of digestion demand they will seek something to suck which will relieve their mouths of the saliva which has been taken into the latter stages of their favorite object is the ear of the calf next to them.

Unless this is prevented the calf is likely to grow up with the habit of sucking itself when it comes to be a cow and reproduce or sucking the other cow in the herd.

The only way to prevent this vicious habit is to let each calf by itself until digestive organs have developed sufficiently to enable it to digest grain food, such as ground oats and wheat bran.

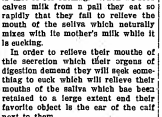
Then they will eat dry bran and ground oats and in that way relieve their mouths of the saliva. After this they may be turned together and there is little danger of their acquiring the habit.

Fattening Cattle on Bluegrass.

Cattle fattened on bluegrass pasture will make about the gain on the same feed for the first three months on the pasture season as compared with the last three months of the feeding period. This important factor as well as the influence of age, nitrogenous supplements and the margin of profits are discussed in bulletin 99 of the Missouri experiment station. The bulletin was written by Dean F. B. Mumford and records the results of five years experiments in fattening cattle of various ages on bluegrass pasture. This extensive investigation involved the feeding of 262 cattle divided into 24 distinct experiments and is the largest and most complete investigation of this subject which hee ever been made in this country. The bulletin will be sent on request by writing to the director of the experiment station, Columbia, Mo.

Worms in Hogs.

If there are signs of worms in your hogs, feed concentrated lye, one-half teaspoonful to each animal well mixed in slop or soft feed.



In the fattening pen give the pigs all they will readily clean up, but no more.

Bran and meat meal help to supply the young sows with muscle and bone.

TO PREVENT HOOF TROUBLES

Little Hook Shown in Illustration Should Be Included Among Equipment of Stable.

A tool that is one of the handiest things you can have about the stables is shown in the illustration. It is a hoof hook and should be included among the equipment of every well regulated stable, says the Prairie Farmer. A practical horseman says that the feet of the horse should be cleaned every morning before he leaves the stable. The hoof hook will remove all litter, pebbles or anything that may have become lodged in the foot. This precaution may prevent injury to the sols or sensitive structures of the foot. If the feet become very dry, pack them daily for a week with some form of clay. Then apply lard to the wall, to which may be added plan tar and resin. This ointment holds the moisture in the feet and prevents further dryness.

This treatment would seldom have to be resorted to except in the case of driving horses that are kept in the stable continually and not given much work.

HANDY HOG-LOADING CHUTE

Convenient Farm Implement That Can Be Built on Pair-Old Cultivator Wheels.

A convenient chute for loading hogs or sheep into a wagon box is made by taking two pieces of 2 by 4 lumber eight feet long for the sills and nailing down a floor of any kind of pieces three feet long with cleats for footholds. Then construct sides of slats high enough to keep the animals from jumping over. Set the rear end of the sills about two feet higher than the front end, so that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take the chute. The chute weighs low down and can scarcely ever without it in the house.

It will say also that I think there is no better medicine in the world for young girls to build them up and make them strong and well. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has always helped her.

"I am now ready and willing to speak a good word for the Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to these wonderful medicines."—Mrs. J. G. JOHNSON, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 5.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no harmful or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the largest number of actual cures of female diseases.

Hog-Loading Chute.

some kind of axle are used to make a truck placed about the center of the chute so that it may be easily moved from place to place. These wheels are of such a height or so placed that they take a proportionate part of the weight when the chute is in place. Being of this width it barely fits into the wagon box when the endgats is out, leaving no place for hogs to get out by the side of it. Instead of using the sills project far enough to engage the wagon box, two iron straps may be used after having the ends bent and sharpened so as to catch in the wood of the box and prevent slipping.

Bokhara Sheep.

The department of agriculture is seriously considering the introduction into thie country of Bokhara sheep, from which comes the fur called "Persian lamb." Astrakhan fur is now raised on territory tributary to the Caspian sea. The best fur is taken from the lamb when it is four or five daye old. The Bokhara sheep also make good mutton.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Pregnant ewes must have abundant feed.

Roots rich in protein are necessary for tha brood cow.

Charcoal or soft coal ashes should be kept in the hog pen.

A dip in warm water is the best thing for a chilled pig.

One of the best muscle producing feeds upon the farm is oats.

It is always easier to sell a good purebred animal than a scrub.

A pailful of warm slop for the sows after the pigs have come,is the thing to keep the property quiet, makes an excellent summer hay for horses, mules and cows.

The ewes should all be bred near the same date to insure uniformity of the lamb crop.

Sheep do not suffer greatly from dry cold, but should be sheltered from winds and rains.

It is deappointed sheep man's profits see goha to raise immense crops of oats and hay.

It is nearly always best to save some of the best cows, especially to farrow the early spring litters.

Whatever material is used for bedding, it should be changed sufficiently often to insure cleanliness.

Spoiled uddere often result from lambs not cleaning the udder or from caking after the lamb is weaned.

The fairs give a good opportunity to compare breeds, and farmers should use this opportunity intelligently.

Slinge is valuable, not because of the nourishment it afforde, but because of its influence as an appetizer.

Once the pigs are weaned it is a mistake to let them stop in their growth until they are ready for market.

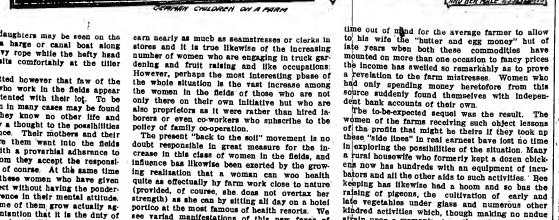
Women who Work in the Field



PHASE of European life that never fails to impress visitors from the United States is the extent to which women labor in the fields.—In many instances working side by side with the men and in others either performing the greater share of the toil or, maybap, apparently doing it all while the masculine members of the household are nowhere to be seen. This state of things is not confined to any one section or division of the Old World, either. From the west of Ireland where the tourist sees women helping with the grain harvests and aiding in the cutting of the peat all the way to Russia where the peasant women are called upon to perform every sort of labor in the fields, the same story is told by the sights which meet the eye in every rural district.

The Americans who have rather advanced ideas as to the toil which women should be permitted to perform are treated to their greatest surprise in some of the more primitive provinces of central Europe where it is no uncommon sight to see a women "hitched" to a plow as it were, side by side with a horse or other animal, while her liege lord trudges behind guiding the plow. However a rival of this state of things is to be seen occasionally in Holland where a mother and her daughters may be seen on the towpath dragging a large or canal boat along by means of a heavy rope while the hefty head of the household sits comfortably at the tiller of the craft.

It must be admitted however that few of the European women who work in the fields appear in the least discontented with their lot. To be sure the explanation in many cases may be found in the fact that they know no other life and seemingly give nary a thought to the possibilities of an easier existence. Their mothers and their grandmothers before them went into the fields in this wise and with a proverbial adherance to precedent and custom they accept the responsibilities as a matter of course. At this same time there are some of these women who have given thought to the subject without having the pondering make any difference in their mental attitude. On the contrary some of them grow actually aggressive in their contention that it is the duty of a wife to be her husband's life partner and coworker in fact as well as in name and that if the husband's occupation is tilling the soil she should lend a hand in the field work just as she would expect to stand for hours daily behind the counter if her helpmate were a small shopkeeper.

Field work by women in the United States is not so common an occurrence as it is on the other side of the Atlantic, but neither is it sufficiently unusual to cause much comment and it has increased greatly both in volume and variety in recent years. There is the difference though that work in the field as performed by such American women as engage in it does not savor of drudgery as does much of that abroad and furthermore it is engaged in, for the most part, purely because of personal preference. That is there is no masculine compulsion figuring in the matter nor is American farmer's wife or daughter misled by the fallacy that she is not doing her share if she does not perform manual labor in the fields under cultivation.

About the only circumstances in which we find the women of our farming communities going into the fields not exactly through a choice of their own is at harvest season when there is a scarcity of labor. It sometimes happens that farmers, particularly those in the more isolated sections of the west and middle west, find it impossible to secure, for love or money, the needed harvest hands and rather than see the ripened grain lost for lack of harvesters their wives, sisters and daughters have,—all credit to them for it,—come to the rescue and garnered the work of men in the harvest field. In not a few instances women volunteers have under such circumstances donned men's clothing and the almost unanimous verdict is that the advantage from the standpoint of utility more than counterbalance any detriment in appearance.

But, as has been said, most of the American women who are today working in the fields are doing so purely because they prefer it to some other means of making livelihood. This is true of the berry pickers who if they chose could earn nearly as much as seamstresses or clerks in stores and it is true likewise of the increasing number of women who are engaging in truck gardening and fruit raising and like occupations. However, perhaps the most interesting phase of the whole situation is the vast increase among the women in the fields of those who are not only there on their own initiative but who are also proprietors as it were rather than hired laborers or even co-workers who subscribe to the policy of family co-operation.

The present "back to the soil" movement is no doubt responsible in great measure for the increase in this class of women in the fields, and influence has likewise been exerted by the growing realization that a woman can woo health quite as effectually by farm work close to nature (provided, of course, she does not overtax her strength) as she can by sitting all day on a hotel portico at the most famous of health resorts. We see varied manifestations of this new fevar of American women to get into the fields for pleasure as well as profit. On the one hand we have the spectacle of women, who must needs be self-supporting, buying and working,—often without any male help whatever,—small truck and poultry farms located sufficiently near some large city to insure a good market for the produce of the farm at first hand and maybap without the payment of a slice to the commission merchant, providing the woman farmer can cultivate her own circle of customers. To go to the other extreme we see at every government "land opening," unmarried women in increasing numbers taking up "claims" and in a surprising number of cases of late these women have "worked",these claims and developed them into fine farms with very little outside help. A recent case in point was that of three former school teachers who, entirely by their own exertions, successfully carried out a "homesteading" project fifteen miles from the nearest habitation.

Farmer women too, are doing more work in the fields than ever before, for all that the easier circumstances of the prosperous twentieth century farmer has brought automobile, and pianos and telephones and a host of home comforts that might naturally be expected to take the minds of the women folk off such things as farm work. In this sphere, too, the explanation of the presence in the fields of many women who are not driven there by necessity is found in the fascination of earning "one's own money." It has been the custom from time out of mind for the average farmer to allow to his wife the "butter and egg money" but of late years when both these commodities have mounted to more than one occasion to fancy prices the income has swelled so materially as to prove a revelation to the farm mistresses. Women who had only spending money heretofore from this source suddenly found themselves with independent bank accounts of their own.

This to-be-expected sequel was the result. The women of the farms receiving such object lessons of the profits that might be theirs if they took up these "side lines" in real earnest have lost no time in exploring the possibilities of the situation. Many a rural housewife who formerly kept a dozen chickens now has hundreds with an equipment of incubators and all the other aids to such activities. Bee keeping has likewise had a boom and so has the raising of pigeons, the cultivation of early and late vegetables under glass and numerous other kindred activities which, though making no undue strain upon a woman's strength, and masterially to the bulk of her pocketbook. Not a few of the "abandoned farms" of New England which have lately been rejuvenated owe the transformation to women who have worked out their salvation through a sort of intensive farming in which more often than not the fair sex have had little assistance,—for, be it known, bired help is as scarce in some of the farming sections of New England as it is many hundreds of miles farther west.

An interesting side light on the situation is that our up-to-date agricultural colleges are now fitting girls for work in the fields or anywhere else on the farms. In these institutions the young women are studying side by side with their brothers all the way through and gaining a clearer insight than has heretofore been possible into the practical side of farm husbandry. It is a decided innovation, this plan of teaching the young women, from a scientific basis, all that can be put to use on a farm,—inside or outside the farm house. Under this scheme the farm girl acquires knowledge relative to the soil, plant growth and animal life. In short she learns (from practical demonstration as well as from books) all that can be taught about field agriculture, dairy practice, etc., as well as the mysteries of cookery and dressmaking, and home management. Incidentally it may be noted that much attention is being devoted to fruit raising, an occupation which seems to be proving attractive to a great number of the feminine recruits who have lately taken to tilling the soil as a means of livelihood.

LET THINGS GO

The ability to rest is an art. Most women either rush and tear at things all day long and never indolent and indulge in an afternoon sleep, which makes them dull. A cat nap of a quarter of an hour after luncheon is the best beauty preservative possible. But sleeping is not always resting. Neither is doing nothing. A change of view or of occupation often the greatest rest and, if the art of relaxation has been mastered, sitting with the hands limply in the lap, with the head resting against the back of the chair and the feet on a footstool will remove the strain from tired nerves.

Many women find going to the theater a rest, and others make a habit of keeping a little knitting or crochet work handy and can quite dismiss the cares of the day as soon as the fingers start making music with the needles. Blessed indeed is she who can sit down in the midst of dirt and confusion to finish a good book. There is a housekeeping horror who cannot see any brightness in a ray of sunshine while there is a layer of dust on the piano. She makes one shudder at the very name of "order" and by her uncomfortable passion for tidiness causes John to look a half hour for his slippers and sigh for the lost ease of his bachelor den.

Make yourself comfortable and everybody around you—that is a good password for this life. There is altogether too much said in encouragement of "temparament" and "nerves." It is well eyes and feet, but they are to serve and not dominate us. Learn to rest your tired nerves and relax from housekeeping cares.

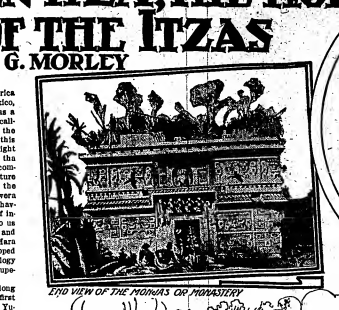
CHICHEN ITZA, THE HOLY CITY OF THE ITZAS

By SYLVANUS G. MORLEY

LONG before the discovery of America there flourished in southern Mexico, Guatemala, and parts of Honduras a great civilization, which has been called the Maya. It may be said at the outset without exaggeration that this civilization had reached a height equalled by no other people of the western hemisphere prior to the coming of the white man, in architecture in sculpture, and in printing the Mayas excelled. Their priests were astronomers of no mean ability, having observed and recorded without the aid of instrumentals of precision such es sra known to us the lengths of the Solar and Venus years, and probably the lengths of the Mercury and Mars years. In addition to this they had developed a calendar system and perfected a chronology which in soma of its characteristics was superior to our own.

The the ancient glory of this people had long since departed when Hernando Cortez first came in contact with them on the coast of Yucatan in 1519. Their star had set. Their greatest cities had been abandoned and ley in ruins, and their country was prostrated by the quarrels of a scoro or more of petty independent chieftalas, each of whom was waglag war on the other. Evan the memory of the older cities, of their cultura, such as Palenque, Copan and Quiniqua, for example, seems to have passed from the mind of men, their former existenca forgotten. Famina, pestilence and internecina strife ara al said to have been contributory causes to the decay and eclipse which overtook this brilliant aboriginal civilization several centuries bafora the Spanish first set foot in the naw world.



Probably tha largest, and certalnly the most magnificent, of the ruined cities which the Spanish conquerors found on their arrival in Yucatan was Chichen Itza, around which evan in its desolation there still cluster a thousand traditions of former sanctity and splendor. The name Chichen Itza is Maya, and means Chi-mouth, Chen-wells and Itza, the nama of the Maya tribe, who lived in the neighborhood of the place. "The Mouth of the Wells of the Itzas" therefore is tha meanleg of the name; nor could a more appropriate ona heve been applied to the placa by any people. Tha whole peninsula of Yucatan is a vast limestone formation with little or no surface water. One may travel for miles and miles and never cross river or brook, or even chance upon a modest spring. Indeed, in the northern part, where most of the great ruined cities are located, water is fully 70 feat below the surface of the ground. Tha modern inhabitants overcome this difficulty by means of wells and windmills, which afford tha only source of water supply during tha dry season (December to June) excepting what little rain water may have been caught during the rainy months and stored in cisterns.

But of wells and windmills the ancient Mayas knew nothing, and, generally speaking, had it not been for the great natural reservoirs which neture had scattered here and there over the country Yucatan never could have been colonized.

These great natural wells, or, as the Mayes call them, cenotes, are found all over Yucatan. They are usually about 150 feet in diameter, or sometimes more, and about 70 feet in depth to the level of the water. Geologists say that these cenotes are pieces where the limestone crust, which everywhere covers the surface of Yucatan, has becoma weakened by the washing of subterranean waters and has collapsed of its own weight, forming great sink holes or natural wells on a larga scale. And now it is clear why the ancient inhabitants of Chichen Itza so bemed their city. In the course of their wanderings, the general trend of which was northward, the Itzas, entering Yucatan from the south, finally reached tha two cenotes, around which Chichen Itza later was built, but which then was probably nothing but wilderness. Itcrs the striking contrast afforded by such an abundance of water in a country so generally parched and hot fell to heve attracted their attention. The placa must have seemed to the thirsty wanderers a God given site for the location of their new home. By right of discovery they claimed tha piece, and to the city which grew up around the cenotes they gave tha name of Chichen Itza, "The Mouth of the Wells of the Itzas."

The two cenotes at Chichen Itza have been knowa by the Mayas from time immemorial as the Cenota Grande and the Cenota Sacra, or the large Cenota and the Sacred Cenote, respectively. The first of these only in former times was used for the water supply of tha city, the Sacred Cenote being reserved for religious use axclusively. It is tha latter, however, and the religious observances held in connection with it, which gave the city its holy character. From far and near all over Yucatan, and probably even from points more distant, pilgrimages were made to the Sacred Cenota. It seems to have been the most holy shrine of the Maya people, comparable only in importance to the Mohammedan Mecca and tha Christian Jerusalem. In time of drought offerings of all kinds were thrown into its treasures, and in cases of extremity even living human sacrifices.

Chichen Itza today is somawhat changed in appearance from tha time when pilgrims came from far and near to propeas with human sacrifice the wrath of offended deities. Now the city lies buried in a thick jungle, which has steadily won its way into the very heart of the holy place. Colonnades have been overthrown and pyramids covered with trees to their summits; courts have been lost in a tangla of thorn and creepers; and palaces stripped of their sculptured embellishment. Desolation has spread everywhere in the wake of the encroaching vegetation.

VIEW OF TEMPLE CALLED CHICHANCHOB

PANORAMA OF THE RUINS OF CHICHEN ITZA

To visit the ancient city now, one jolts for 15 long and weary miles in a two-wheeled covered cart drawn by three mules over the roughest kind of a highway imaginable. This present inconvenience fortunately is not to be one of long standing. A new and straight road is about to be built and an automobile service to the ruins probably established, which will shorten the present length of the trip from four hours to about half an hour. Now, however, this ride from Citas, the nearest railroad point, seems interminable. The road, so called by courtesy only, winds through the impenetrable bush, which everywhere in the natural state covers northern Yucatan. Through this the creaking cart finds a dubious way mile after mile until every muscle in one's body groans an egonized protest. Finally, when it seems that the limit of physical endurance has been reached, the cart suddenly lurches around a sharp turn in the road and as if by magic the lofty Castillo dashes into view, towering high above the plain and the rest of the city in its lonely magnificence.

This imposing structure, the highest in Yucatan, rises 78 feet abova tha plain. The pyramid on which tha temple stands is 195 feet long on each sida at the base and covers about an acra of ground.

Tha Castillo would seem to have been the center of the ancient city, and probably its chief sanctuary. To tha north lies the Sacred Cenote and the causeway, just mentioned, leading to it. On the east is a vast group of buildiags, colonnades, courts and pyramids. "Tha City of a Thousand Columns," as some one has picturesquely described it. Due west is the group of structures known as tha Ball Court. To the south for half a mile or more, scattered through the jungle, are pyramids, courts, temples and palaces. The central location of the Castillo with reference to all of these, as well as its great size and commanding height, argua strongly that it was the chief sanctuary of the Holy City.

Another interesting group of structures at Chichen Itza, perhaps slightly less sacred in character than the Castillo, is the so-called "Bell Court," mentioned above as lying just west of the Castillo. This group is composed of two parallel masses of solid masonry, each 272 feet long, 27 feet high and 16 feet wide, placed 119 feet apart from each other. These two great walls, for such they really are, form a court nearly 300 feat long by 119 feet wide. High on the side of each at the middle point from end to end there is attached a stone ring four feet in diameter with a hole through it. Thesa rings are fastened to their respective walls by tenons of stone, and are so placed that the surface of each is perpendicular to the vertical face of the wall. The arrangement is very similar to tha baskets in our modern gama of basket ball, except that at Chichen Itza the "baskets" have their openings perpendicular to the ground, while in our gama tha openings in the baskets are parallel with the ground. To make a basket at the Chichen Itza court a somewhat horizontal throw, as in baseball, was necessary, while nowadays it is a toss that wins tha goal.

At the open ends of the court formed by these two walls stand temples, which in affect inclose the area, definitely marking its boundaries. On top of tha east wall, at its southern end, there is a beautiful temple, which affords a commanding view of the entire court. This has been called "The House of the Tigers," because of a frieze of stalking tigers, which is sculptured in alto-relievo around, the outside of the building. This temple contains also on the walls of an interior room, an elaborate mural painting representing an attack by some enemy upon a city, perhaps Chichen Itza itself, and its defense by the inhabitants. Some of the poses taken by the combatants in the conflict are extremely realistic; such es in tha throwing of javelins, the swinging of war clubs, and the like. This bit of mural decoration in Tha House of Tha Tigere at Chichen Itza probably marks the high-water mark of aboriginal painting in tha Western Hemisphere; at least it is superior to averything else that has survived.

The identification of these two great walls and the temples associated with them, as a ball court, rests on firm historic foundation. When the Spanish first came to Mexico they found the natives playing a game of ball, which was of sufficient importance to have a special court or ground set apart for its exclusive use. Several of the early Spanish writers have described tha game in some detail, and all agree as to its having played an important part in the life of the people. One chronicler says it that the object of the game was to strike tha ball so that it would pass through the opening in the stone ring above mentioned as an important feature of the Chichen Itza court. He adds that the feat was one of considerable dexterity, since the ball could not be hit with the hands, but that the hips or other parts of the body had to be used instead. This rule of the game very materially increased the difficulty in making a "Maya hesiat;" so much so, in fact, wa are told, that the lucky player making this winning stroke had forfeit to him as a reward for his skill all the clothing and ornaments of the spectators. At such times, the chronicler concludes, the spectators were wont to scatter in all directions without loss of time, hoping thus to escapa paying the penalty, but that the friends of the lucky player immediately gave chase and endeavored to exact the full forfeit.

Although the name Ball Court has been given to this group of temples at Chichen Itza, it should not be supposed on that account, that this great court was built primarily for sport. Such an explanation of its fundamental purpose is incompatible with any conception which the American aborigines ever seems to have entertained. To the Itza people the chief function of their Ball Court was doubtless a religious one. Games played there, if not actually held in connection with religious festivals, were at least sufficiently religious in their meaning as to completely overshadow the element of sport as we understand the term. That a game was played in which competition and skill entered in cannot be doubted in the face of contemporaneous evidence, and to this extent perhaps tha Mexican Ball Courts were' athletic fields; but it must not ha forgotten for a moment that its true significance was religious, and that the games which were played there probably were held only in connection with religious festivals. It is not improbable, however, that the Aztecs were breaking away from the religious features of sport at tha time of the Spanish Conquest, but that "Tha Holy Men of the Itzas," as the people of Chichen Itza are sometimes called in the early manuscripts, had taken any such a radical step is little short of inconceivable, so religious in character was the whole Maya civilization.

To the east of the Castillo lie a great group of courts, pyramids and colonnades. "The City of a Thousand Columns" already mentioned, most part the stones in just where they fell. In its entirety this section of the city must have presented an imposing appearance, being literally a forest of columns surrounding and connecting the various courts. As to the use of these great colonnades, tradition and history are equally silent. Some think that they were the law courts of the ancient city, where justice was administered and punishment meted out. Others say that they were tha market places, where the produce of tha surrounding country was bought and sold. This latter explanation has one strong recommendation in its favor in that the descendants of the builders of tha ancient city of Yucatan, the present Maya Indians, still hold their markets under tha pertals surrounding the plazas in the towns and villages throughout the country today.

South of the Cenote Grende there are a number of well-preserved rod structures, most of them presenting beautifully sculptured facades. To these finished examples have been given, which probably have little or nothing to do with the original uses of the buildings. Ona larga structure, for example, has been called "The Akabdzib." The name is Maya and means "The House of the Dark Writing." This building was so called, because of the fact that over ona of its interior doorways there is a lintel inscribed with hieroglyphs. This lintel is so placed that the hieroglyphics can only be seen by artificial light, hence the name, "The House of the Dark Writing." Nearby is a round tower, wich but one exception the only structura of its kind in the Maya area. This is called "The Caracol." Caracol is the Spanish word for snail, and since the interior circular corridor and spiral stairway of this structure bear some remote resemblence to the convolutions of a snail shell, the name was applied to the building. The Manjos (Spanish for monastery) is perhaps the most beautiful building at Chichen Itza. It is composite, showing three different periods of construction.

The above are only a few of the many structures at Chichen Itze. But in all directions for several miles the brush is strewn with ruins. Crumbling walls and jungle-riden caverns are to be encountered on every side; disintegration so far advanced that these once splendid palaces and temples are now but little more than shapeless mounds of fallen masonry. The total area covered by ruins which may be assigned to this center of primitive population has been estimated by soma as high as ten square miles. This larger Maya cities yet remain to be discovered now seem highly improbable so thoroughly hee tha general exploration of the area been done. Consequently we may affirm with but little hesitation that "The Holy City of the Itzas" was the largest and most important of the Maya civilization and probably of aborigiael America as well.

THE SIGH FOR LEISURE.

Liven thera the man who has not sighed for leisure? And livas thera tha man who in his morn sober moments, has not been honestly glad that he must work? Human natura, which sweetens under toil, sours in leisure. And it is by no means sura that the fall from innocence which first brought work into the world "and all our woe" was not bringing salvation disguised as labor. Faithfulness will dignify and beautify even drudgery; no mattar what the work is, provided it is honest, if it is done well it, commands our instinctive respect. Beddan, if wa did not all have to work so hard to keep alive we fails would have standing room only.

WOULD SAVE TOWER

Chicagoans Protest Against Razing of Historic Landmark.

Great Pile of Masonry Which Survived the Disastrous Fire of 1871 Very Rich in Romance and Tradition.

Chicago.—Shall the oldest landmark of tha north side, a spot rich in tradition and romance, tha only remaining monument of the time of Chicago's victory in her greatest struggle for life, ha profaned by a city's commercialism and destroyed in the name of economy?

Shall the silent sentinal of stona, tha ivy-mantled tower where sweethearts worn wont to meet, whera children played and heard wondrous stories of other days, ha reduced to a shapeless mass of stone and scattered all over the city?

Is it not possible to preserva the picturesqua gray tower of the old Chicago avenua pumping station to posterity to serva as a memorial of the great fira of 1871?

These are a few of the questions raised by scores of Chicagoans who had read of the plan to tear down the tower of the Chicago avenue pumping station in the interest of municipal economy. This ancient landmark stands at the foot of "Millionaire row." North of the famous old structura are the homes of the rich. Since 1887 the tower has stood as a constant reminder of tha permanences of the work of the city's founders.

Members of the Chicago Historical society joined in the storm of protest against tearing down the tower. They were unanimous in the sentiment that this landmark should be preserved and needs one of the show pieces of Chicago

When Chicago began to burn, the evening of October 8, 1871, terror-stricken citizens fled north to the tower in the belief that the fire would be confined to a narrow district. The following day tha fire reached the tower and roared about its base, destroying the needless sheds and adjacent buildings. The pumping engines were stopped and the walls of tha engine house began to crumble. The roof and floors of the other buildings gave way, but the tower stood firm while the flames raced northward.

The great pile of masonry was preserved when repairs were made, and since that day has been rich in tradition and romance.

Many stories of the tower deal with the romances of some of the richest sons and daughters of Millionaires' row. An eloping couple is said to have been married at the top of the tower. In the days of old thousands of young men and maidens wandered up tha stairway to the summit to plight their troth.

The doors of the tower were locked long ago. Tha only magic key that will unlock the door is in the keeping of the city authorities.

The city authorities hold now that disintegration has begun and that the tower must go. This theory is denied by members of tha Chicago Historical society, who declare that tha towar was built to stand 10,000 years and that there is no danger of its crumbling for generations. Hundreds of visitors gaze in awa at tha old tower every day.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Footwear of Humming Bird Feathers

NEW YORK.—Women on this side of the big pond learned with interest that their sisters in Paris were wearing shoes made from humming bird feathers, the ridiculously low price of $2,500 a pair placing the fluffy footwear within reach of all. Realizing that it was only a question of a few weeks before the very latest fad in toolele trappings would reach this city, and being aware of the fact that humming birds were none too plentiful, the young and old girls began figuring out how many of the gorgeous mites would have to be sacrificed to cover their spokes.

Married men read the article until they came to the line which told about the price of the new plumage, and then they dropped in their tracks. When they regained consciousness they equipped their wallet pockets with burglar alarms and hired detectives to watch their trousers while they slept. Many of them, unable to see a ray of hope, went straight to the bankruptcy court and gave themselves up. More than one happy home was rent with discord by the announcement. Women who had the temerity to ask their husband how many humming birds would be necessary in their case were generally told that a whole aviary would not make them a pair of shoe strings.

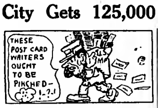
It was only natural that there should be much conjecture as to the possible adoption of the new fad by Chicago women. In view of the fact that it takes the whole southwest side of a cow to make one of them a pair of slippers it was generally agreed that one Chicago order would put the humming bird family out of business.

"I'm willing that my wife should have everything within reason," said a man whose cut glass display indicated that he was not dodging any creditors, "but I draw the line at $2,500 a pair for shoes. Just think of it! Shoes that cost $1,250 a foot. She cried and called me a tightwad when I refused to grant her the appropriation, but I told her she would have to stick to the leather kind or get another cash register."

Burro Saves Its Master From Prison

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—That old story of a prospector's love for his burro, the companion and solace of weary, lonesome hours in a desert search for gold, won freedom from jail for aged Aaron Braunsheidt here.

Braunsheidt came into Los Angeles from the desert and mountain land along the Mexican border, riding a decrepit burro. Across his shoulder was slung a rifle. At his saddle, formed by an old frayed comforter, was his camp outfit, pickax and a shovel. His beard, long and straggling, and his long, gray sunburned hair was unkempt. As he passed along the street, P. A. Rambo, agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, saw him.



At the offices of the society the old prospector told a story which won sympathy. It was repeated later to a throng of citizens who accompanied Braunsheidt and Rambo to a livery barn, where the burro had been stabled. Willing hands reached for pocketbooks and none desired to have him punished. He was released. As he walked away from the city hall building, one arm placed affectionately about the burro's neck, he was cheered by the men who contributed to provide him and his companion with food.

Braunsheidt, known to many pioneers as Aaron Brandt, has won and lost fortunes in search of wealth which he believes exists in his gypsum claims near Tucson. For forty years he has prospected. His wife and their only daughter conducted a confectionery in San Francisco. In the great fire Mrs. Braunsheidt and the daughter, Clara, were killed and their little property lost. Since that time Braunsheidt has been prospecting.

City Gets 125,000 Post Cards Daily

CHICAGO.—If any one doubts that the friends of Chicagoans do not send them cards from all parts of the world during the vacation season, just ask the letter carriers. Chicago's postoffice is now receiving 125,000 cards daily, and when the postcard crop is at its height, the office will handle 200,000 cards a day.

If all of the postcards that come to Chicago each day at this time of the year from people jaunting throughout the country on vacations were placed end to end, the line would reach a distance of twenty miles.

Five hundred postcards laid on top of each other form a pile one foot high, and so, by careful figuring it is found that the total number of cards coming to Chicago daily will form a stack 200 feet high or equal to the height of some of Chicago's taller buildings.

One little innocent postcard often makes the postman walk two or three floors higher than he would go if he were carrying only "legitimate" mail. Frequently the postmen return to the offices and find that postcards have compelled them to walk one-third farther than the regular mail would have taken them.

The Chicago postoffice handles in one day more postcards than any other office in the world under one roof. The vacation period brings one-half as many cards to the city as does Easter or Christmas time.

Children Swat Flies for the Bounty

BOSTON, Mass.—An endeavor to rid Worcester of flies through a fly killing contest is under way in that city and scores of children have entered the competition.

Many prizes, aggregating more than $600, are being offered to the children producing the greatest number of dead flies within the time limit of the contest, and during the few days the competition has been going on several hundred thousand of the germ carrying insects have been slaughtered.

The insects are measured by the quart as they are brought in and throughout the city the little ones are daily engaged in a wholesale fly massacre.

One boy tells of catching 10,000 flies in an old cow stable and thousands more around garbage cans. In their hustling for the prizes the children are invading back alleys, stables, markets, setting traps among garbage and dirt of all kinds, and patroling various insanitary places where the most flies are found.

Few contestants are confining their attention to homes, for they can gather comparatively few flies there. Some parents look at this feature of the contest with decided disapproval. They fear the children are very likely to contract diseases in invading such places and handling the flies.

Another feature is that each child must kill the flies and then dry them carefully before turning them in. In this way the children directly handle the germ-laden insects.

Traps of every shape and description as well as all manner of ingenious methods to kill the insects are being used. Fly catching devices are selling at a premium, and men and women appear as much interested in the affair as the children.

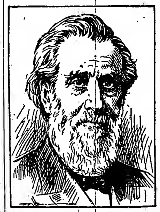
IN THE LIMELIGHT

BLIGHTED BY THE THAW CASE

The recent conviction and sentencing to state prison of Dan O'Reilly for his participation in a theft committed in New York serve to draw attention to the remarkable series of misfortunes attending various persons connected with the Thaw case. O'Reilly was one of the lawyers on the Thaw side and has never had a day's luck since he was mixed up in it. While the crime for which he has been sentenced and which disbars him as a lawyer had nothing to do with the case of Thaw, many believe that it was the nemesis of the White tragedy which worked his undoing. So far the lives of thirteen persons mixed up one way or another in the case have been blighted.

Of the other lawyers besides O'Reilly who figured in the case Clifford W. Hartridge is facing disbarment proceedings growing out of statements made in connection with it. He had to sue Mrs. Thaw, mother of Harry Thaw, for his fees and a bill of particulars was demanded. In furnishing this he told of trips he made seeking witnesses, of sums of money paid to buy the silence of certain persons and of excursions to various resorts entailing large expenditures. His revelations brought upon him the censure of the New York Bar association and proceedings to disbar him are now in the courts.

MISSES HIS WEATHER GUESS



"Professor Moore's rainstorm" has been the topic of much jocund comment in Washington. Before now the weather bureau has played a potent part in fixing the fame of great men. Noah, for example, might be comparatively unknown save for a rainstorm of unprecedented violence, and subsequent history abounds in similar instances, culminating in "Professor Moore's rainstorm" of the night of the lawn fete which crowned the silver wedding anniversary of the president and Mrs. Taft.

Twenty-four hours previous, when Washington was bedecking itself and joyously entering upon the task of making the silver wedding anniversary a close second to the coronation festivities of that other Anglo-Saxon ruler, George of Great Britain; when Washington was donning its most spotless duck trousers and "sheerest" gowns, Professor Moore, sequestered in the innermost chamber of the weather bureau building, announced that it was going to rain.

A tranquil afternoon was followed by an ideal evening. Every silvery star that was permitted by astronomical laws twinkled down on Washington.

Therefore, there is much jocund comment on "Professor Moore's rainstorm." And, coupled with the "storm," are many mentions of that other day in President Taft's administration which the weather likewise made memorable—the day of the inauguration.

THREATEN SENATOR'S TOGA

It is reported in Washington that the election of Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin, the lumber king, is to be investigated by the senate committee on privileges and elections.

Senator Isaac Stephenson is a native of New Hampshire, where he was born in 1829. After a brief residence at Bangor, Me., he located in Wisconsin and for a time was a farm laborer. Seeing the prospect of making money in the lake transportation business, he purchased a schooner and operated it successfully between Milwaukee and Escanaba. His savings he invested in timber lands, which then could be purchased cheaply, and gradually became the owner of vast tracts of valuable standing timber. Years ago he was a multimillionaire, and every day now adds to his immense hoard. He is also a banker and is financially interested in various enterprises. Back in the comparatively early days of his career he was elected to the Wisconsin legislature, and sat in that body from 1866 to 1868. In 1883 he was elected to congress, retaining his seat until 1889, and in 1907 he was elected to the United States senate to fill an unexpired term ending in 1909. It is his subsequent election for a full term that is to be made the subject of a senatorial inquiry.

EX-QUEEN WHO MAY VISIT US

One of the most deeply beloved of the royalties of Europe is ex-Queen Margherita of Italy, who, it is said, will pay a visit to the United States in the fall. It has long been her ambition to see the country where so many of her race have found a home, but even royal personages cannot travel when they choose, and the visit had to be postponed. It is probable that official recognition will be taken of her coming.

The ex-queen is a daughter of the late Prince Ferdinando of Savoy, duke of Genoa. When only 16 years old she became the bride of King Humbert, second king of United Italy, which this year is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of its independence. Eleven years ago she was left a widow owing to the assassination of her husband by the Anarchist Brescia. She is now 60 years old and still retains much of her beauty.

Since her husband's death she has devoted herself greatly to charity and has endeared herself to the Italians. It was her opposition which prevented the marriage of Miss Elkins and the duke of the Abruzzi, and her visit here will on that account be invested with an additional interest.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Good Faker in the Government Museum

WASHINGTON.—Fakes made while you wait! The government ought to be ashamed of itself, but instead of that it retains a man especially to perpetrate them. It is no near-faking either, the government work is exacting and when the duplicate specimens are completed there is no telling which is the original and which the imitation. There are probably few men of similar calling in the world, and fewer still who are as clever in that line.

The National museum has dug up a son of Wizard Jack Hendley, who in his day was the premier imitation man of the United States, and they now keep young Will Hendley busy all the time making something look like something else. It seems to be a peculiar gift, and is valuable in a museum.

He works chiefly in plaster, making casts of anything and coloring them so they look like the original, and he seems able to reproduce a counterfeit of anything from a raw oyster to a stone idol. There are a good many tricks in the trade that have been handed down from father to son, such as reproducing the bloom of a peach or scraping an apple to get the vegetable wax that will make the surface of a plaster apple look like the original fruit.

There are always new problems coming up in the curious art of making something out of something else. One of the features of the big ethnologic collection that is now being installed in the hall of the new museum building is a series of groups. These include the various families of man. There are Patagonians, Hawaiians, Eskimos, all sorts of Indians, a family of Igorrotes and altogether about 20 groups. Each of them is shown engaged in some characteristic tribal work. The Eskimos are loading a seal on a sledge.

If there is anything the museum cannot get in the original, from a rare trilobite to a Corinthian fresco, it can turn Hendley loose with the original and he will make an imitation that would fool an expert.

Senate No Longer a Rich Man's Club

NO longer is the United States senate the leading millionaires' club of America. The number of millionaires in the upper branch of congress has been decimated, and the time may not be far distant when the senate will become known as the poor man's club.

The death of Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia carried $15,000,000 out of the senate. The retirement of Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, carried $10,000,000 away. Four million went with Eugene Hale of Maine, when he made way for Senator Johnson, elected by the Democratic legislature.

Chauncey M. Depew of New York, director in 32 different railroads, walked off with $7,000,000. It was his own and he had a right to walk off with it, but the senate in the aggregate became just that much poorer.

Then there was John Kean of New Jersey, who while scarcely in the class of Elkins, was worth $5,000,000. When he left, another five-million iron man bit the dust, so far as the senate was concerned.

In the broad, sweet fields of private life wandered Nathan B. Scott of West Virginia, with his $4,000,000. With him, along the rose-bordered byway, went James P. Taliaferro of Florida with $3,000,000. Hughes of Colorado died, removing another $2,000,000.

There was $50,000,000 right at one clip. The men elected to replace these millionaires are virtually poor men, or at least, what the world considers poor in these days of big fortunes.

Watson of West Virginia, who replaced Elkins, is about the only millionaire in the batch of baby members. He is worth $2,000,000.

Uncle Sam May Lose Valuable Lands

JUST as the government is sitting in for the biggest legal game it ever played the discovery is made that it is bound to lose and the Southern Pacific railroad to win $500,000,000 if the play goes on.

The stakes are a great area of California's richest oil lands. They were granted to the railroad with a clause in the grant expressly excepting all mineral lands save those containing coal and iron. Most of these lands were patented to the grantee more than six years ago.

The joker in the situation is a special statute of limitations, slipped through congress in an act of March 3, 1891, and perfected by another act of March 2, 1896.

The effects of these acts, as construed by the United States Supreme court, is absolutely to bar proceedings by the government to annul a patent of land to a land-grant railroad after six years from the issuance of the patent. Until these acts are repealed, the government has not a chance on earth to get back its lands.

Announcement has been made that within a few weeks the government will file suit as to these lands with Special Assistant Attorney General Townsend in charge. The oil men of California are thoroughly aroused and alarmed by the discovery of the joker.

They are advised by some of the ablest lawyers that the suits can result only in confirming the railroad's title and so they are appealing to Washington with all the force they can command to hold off the litigation until the "joker" act can be repealed. This they believe congress will not hesitate to do, once it knows the inwardness and gravity of the situation.

Many Leave Treasury for Other Lines

THE unofficial function of the treasury department as a training school for business life outside has been demonstrated with striking force within the last two or three months. No less than five of the most useful employees of the treasury have recently been graduated into business life.

The recent selection of Charles P. Montgomery, chief of customs, to take charge of the customs affairs of the American Sugar Refining company, is a case in point. Mr. Montgomery is an older man than others to be mentioned, and had been longer in the service, but his prize in the business world appears to be none the less substantial.

Only a few weeks ago George K. Leete, a clerk in the office of Assistant Secretary A. Piatt Andrew, was made private secretary to Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the executive committee of the United States Steel corporation. A week or two ago Lawrence O. Murray, controller of the currency, received an offer of the presidency of the First National bank of Pittsburg, and, declining that position because of his desire to complete a series of reforms he had instituted, the place was given to O. L. Telling, chief of the national bank examiners. S. Hazen Bond, who, appropriately enough, had charge of the bonding of government employees in the department, has left that position to go with one of the great surety companies. Edward P. Currier, until within a month private secretary to Assistant Secretary of the Treasury James F. Curtis, is now second secretary to Vice-President Frank A. Vanderlip of the National City bank of New York.

UNBUSINESSLIKE - BUSINESS.

The New York state employers' liability commission has submitted a carefully prepared report showing a fearful waste of human life in industrial pursuits. Some loss of life in modern industry may be reckoned unavoidable, but its far greater proportion of the loss which is sustained is the result of unnecessary conditions. It is the direct result of a lack of safety appliances and of overwork; log employes to the point of physical exhaustion. It is a result of unjust liability laws and legislative negligence, says the Kansas City Times. If sentiment has no place in business—an untenable proposition in itself—at least business ought to be businesslike. It is demonstrably not good business to permit avoidable killing of industrial workers and then spend vast sums in caring for families bereft of natural support. It is not good business, even though the children are not neglected, with the chances in favor of their becoming vicious or idle citizens. Stricter employers' liability, an automatically applied workmen's compensation for injury or death, and direct industrial insurance are all insurance measures. They provide funds for the support of injured workmen or of their wives and children. They also encourage safety provisions. Such insurance costs would be diffused among all the people—as taxes and fire insurance or diffused—by being added to the cost of the business. That diffused cost would be a practical imparjable burden upon society.

Birds have an excellent time in Japan and our own agriculturists would do well to emulate the treatment meted out by their eastern confreres to such birds as the robin, and martin, are the Wide World. With a skilled appreciation of the part these feathered friends play in relation to their crops by keeping down the insect pests, they exert every effort to protect them and to encourage them to propagate their kind. Is it to be wondered at that the sentimental but withal eminently practical nation reverences the swallows as messengers to the gods and invites them to build their nests not only under eaves and rafters, but to every and any room of the house? In the hotel dining room were saveral nests, where the happy parents reared their families in complete safety.

There has been much talk regarding the selection of a national flower. Has it all been wasted? The Brooklyn Eagle remarks upon the indisputable fact that there is no authority in the Constitution for the selection of a national flower. However, a great many things have come to be in this country without specific constitutional authority. There is, for instance, a national bird, the American eagle. There is "Uncle Sam" and there is "Miss Columbia," with no authority for either, except the self-assured authority of the cartoonists. But these are things upon which everybody is agreed. There is not likely to be a national flower until everybody is agreed upon it. In the meantime, fortunately, the country can afford to wait.

Scientists report that Halley's comet is 500,000,000 miles distant from the sun, and if it were really the cause of the recent heat waves, nobody cares if it gets 500,000,000 more miles away, or even if it gets lost in the outermost bounds of the solar system.

One of the doctors connected with the health department says that 60 per cent of the dogs that bite people are afflicted with acute rabies. This is a good time to remind pp the dogs that are permitted to run about unmuzzled.

Edison's latest invention consists of moving pictures that talk. If this keeps up our actors will be forced to go to work. However, chorus girls are not half so alluring when shown on a screen.

The doctors report that the poisonous sensation in the glands of toads is a powerful heart stimulant. A good many people will want some other kind of a stimulant when their hearts get sluggish.

With the stocking mills of New England now up prices or diminish the output on the excuse that the advent of postal savings banks has cut off the demand for their goods as coin depositories?

WILL HE GET THERE IN TIME?

TO CONTROL TRUSTS

NEWLANDS ASKS FOR FEDERAL BOARD TO REGULATE INDUSTRIAL CORPORATIONS.

PUBLICITY TO BE REQUIRED

Would Compel All Concerns Doing Business of $5,000,000 or More Annually to Register and Comply With Law.

Washington.—Senator Newlands of Nevada in a speech in the senate advocated an interstate trade commission of five members to control industrial corporations, as the interstate commerce body regulates the railroads.

He contended that the Standard Oil and Tobacco decisions and the recent government report on the steel industry demonstrate the need of "an independent, quasi-judicial and administrative tribunal of great character and dignity, as far removed from partisan control as are the courts." The plan is to apply only to industrial corporations engaged in interstate trade whose annual receipts exceed $5,000,000.

Mr. Newlands' speech was in advocacy of a bill he introduced providing for such a commission. His measure would separate the bureau of corporations from the department of commerce and labor and merge the bureau into a commission of interstate trade.

This commission would require all industrial corporations having receipts exceeding $5,000,000 to make satisfactory statements as to capitalization, finances and operations, such corporations to be known as "United States registered" companies. It proposes to make lack of such registration an "indication of something wrong."

Mr. Newlands declared that if such legislation had replaced or aided the Sherman anti-trust act over twenty years ago this country would have advanced as far in the regulation of industrial organizations as it has in railroad regulation. He referred to recent expressions by Mr. Gary of the Steel corporation and others as indicating that the great corporation managers realize that public regulation is inevitable.

Mr. Newlands said his plan proposes that frequent reports be required from the corporations, information of public interest to be published from time to time, the commission to be non-partisan, not more than three members to be of one party, and the term of office to be ten years. He said that his plan makes no attempt to give too many powers of correction or punishment, nor the power of fixing prices, but his powers may be enlarged as experience shall indicate.

The measure proposed includes these provisions: The commission may cancel at any time the registration of any corporation for improper financial organization, oppressive or unfair methods of competition, acceptance of railroad rebates, refusal to allow access to records or non-compliance with any judicial decree rendered under the Sherman act. In extreme cases it may debar the offending corporations from engaging in interstate commerce and it may require correction of overcapitalization.

PERJURY HUNT IS ON

PROSECUTION FOR FALSE TESTIMONY IN LORIMER CASE.

Inquiry Is Adjourned, but Committee Will Make Effort to Verify Truth of Statements.

Washington.—Prosecution for perjury before the next meeting of the Lorimer investigating committee on July 13 is regarded here as the probable next development in the case of the junior senator from Illinois.

The committee had been in session but a few days when the testimony which it was hearing began to show startling discrepancies.

Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester company, testified that Edward Hines, millionaire lumberman of Chicago, approached him in May in the Union League club, Chicago, and asked him to contribute $10,000 to the $100,000 Lorimer fund. Funk said there were no other persons present at the conversation.

Wirth Cook of Duluth, Minn., a lumberman, testified that Edward Hines had told him of "putting Lorimer over." He testified also that he heard Mr. Hines talking over the long distance telephone to someone in Springfield, the day of Mr. Lorimer's election, and swore that Mr. Hines said he "would be down on the next train" and all the money that is required." Mr. Cook thought Mr. Hines was talking to Governor Deneen.

Testimony obtained before the investigating committee of the Illinois general assembly was introduced to the end substantiated by the sworn affidavits of three men, one to the effect that Shelley B. Jones of Marquette, Mich., had admitted several times that Mr. Hines had boasted to him of "putting Lorimer over" at a cost of $100,000.

That is the evidence obtained on the one hand. On the other, the testimony was just as positive—but different.

Mr. Hines swore that Mr. Funk approached him in the Union League club, and asked for an opportunity to contribute money to Mr. Lorimer's campaign expenses.

Mr. Hines said that three other men —all lumbermen, and two of them in his own employ—were present and heard part of the conversation. The one man who was not in Hines' employ was trying to sell him $200,000 worth of lumber at the time.

Two of these three men have already testified. They told of the incident just as Mr. Hines recounted it —but of cross-examination they admitted that their memories had been refreshed by Mr. Hines, as recently as three weeks ago.

Concerning Wirth Cook's testimony, Mr. Hines denied that he had spoken of "putting Lorimer over." Further, he said that he was talking to Senator Deneen in the famous long distance conversation, and the dialogue, as he gave it, was unimportant.

To a great extent, the Lorimer case has narrowed down to a question of the veracity of witnesses.

RENEWS COAL FIGHT

GOVERNMENT WILL ENDEAVOR TO VITALIZE COMMODITIES CLAUSE OF COMMERCE ACT.

LEHIGH VALLEY DEFENDANT

That Case Is Filed in Attempt to Separate Great Carriers From Control of Mines—Profit-Fixing Is Alleged.

Washington.—The government has started a new campaign to "bust the coal trust." A test case was filed in the federal court at Philadelphia, opening another fight to dissociate the anthracite-carrying railroads from their virtual control of mines and thus vitalize the commodities clause of the interstate commerce law.

That the Lehigh Valley Coal company, Coxe Bros., inc., the New York & Middlefield Railroad and Coal company and the Locust Mountain Coal and Iron company are not bona fide coal companies, but merely adjuncts to the Lehigh Valley railroad, and are "devices for avoiding the commodity clause" is the government's principal complaint.

It is also alleged that the Lehigh Valley railroad, with the object of removing competition, has caused the Lehigh Valley Coal company to contract a loss for the output of other anthracite operators, bee transported the coal over its own lines and through the coal companies fixed the price in New York and other markets.

The government charges that although the buying of coal from other operators has been done at a loss to the Lehigh Valley company it has enabled the Lehigh Valley railroad to transport the coal over its lines and profit from the freight charges.

To support its claim that the coal company is merely the "dummy" through which the railroad engaged in mining, transporting and selling coal in violation of the commodities clause, the government cites that the officers of the railroad and the coal company in the main are the same and that certain members of the directorate and the executive committee of the railroad are members of the directorate and executive committee of the coal company. Among these named are: Frank Thomas, George F. Baker, E. T. Stotesbury and James A. Middleton.

Each of them, it is alleged, has been named to his position in the coal company because of his position with the railroad.

It is set forth that the coal company uses the railroad company's offices and that the business over the railroad company's desks.

As a further allegation that the Lehigh Valley railroad, the government's complaint says in an adjunct of the Lehigh Valley railroad, the government's complaint says that the capital stock of the coal company has been owned by the railroad it has paid no dividends, that the entire profits have been advanced by the railroad to the coal company which bears no interest upon the advances and the coal company's bonds, being compensated, the government claims, by the cheap transportation of coal over its lines.

TAFT ATTACKED BY GRONNA

North Dakota Senator Accuses President of Breach of Power in Framing Reciprocity Bill.

Washington.—Charging President Taft with attempting to override the Constitution by assuming the position of executive and legislator, Senator Gronna of North Dakota made a sensational attack on the reciprocity bill on the floor of the senate.

During his speech he clashed frequently with advocates of the measures and was forced to give up, exhausted.

"In having the bill framed and trying to force it through congress," declared Senator Gronna, "the president exceeded his constitutional power and decidedly serious violation," he added, "because it was in accordance with a pledge given to a foreign nation.

"The president has apparently come to the conclusion that he represents the people of this country both in executive and legislator and that the two houses of congress are only what he terms 'rubber stamps' provided for by the Constitution, which he can, unfortunately, not get rid of, but which are to be ignored and coerced whenever he deems it necessary or expedient."

He denounced the trade agreement with Canada as a cloak to hide the adoption of a new economic and international policy out of harmony with Republicanism, a policy which, he said, the rank and file of the party would repudiate, and he condemned the policy of placing food products and raw materials on the free list and retaining a protective duty on manufactures.

WOLGAST IS VICTOR

KNOCKS OUT OWEN MORAN IN THIRTEENTH ROUND.

Champion Lightweight Fighter Wears Down His English Opponent by Heavy Slugging.

San Francisco.—The mesmerized swing of Referee Welsh's arm, telling off the fatal ten seconds over the writhing and unconscious body of Owen Moran of England, brought victory to Ad Wolgast in the thirteenth round of the international battle for the lightweight championship. The decisive victory was clearly earned by the terrific punishing power of the champion.

It was palpable from the moment they looked up in the first mauling match at close quarters that Wolgast was the more rugged of the pair. He may have been tired once or twice during the contest, owing to the gruelling pace, but there was a doubt about it, whereas there was never an atom of doubt as to the way things were going with Moran.

He looked distressed during each resting spell after the fifth round, while across the ring Wolgast, snappy-eyed and nimble, was chatting to friends in sound of his voice.

Wolgast simply wore Moran down in the close fighting, doing his best work with a punch which is known to the fighting man as "loop the loop." It is a right-hander which curls around extended arms and lands on the face. Wolgast used this punch with such force that Moran's lips were puffed, and blood dripped from his nose and mouth.

When Wolgast was not working the "loop the loop" he was hammering Moran's body with forceful rights. It seemed that the closer they got the harder were Wolgast's punches.

Moran caught Wolgast quite a number of snapping right-banders in between clinches and punched him with straight lefts. While Wolgast was working the "loop the loop" Moran used a left uppercut and did a fair amount of damage with it. But neither in infighting or outfighting did Moran's blows carry a tithe of the punishing force that did Wolgast's, and "there wee not a real chance for the wounded Moran to chortle at any time during the fight.

Wolgast went after Moran with blood in his eye in the thirteenth round. A couple of well-placed right uppercuts failed to stop Wolgast, who was on top of his men like a terrier tackling a rat. Moran was battered along the ropes. His court was demoralized with right body punches, and he was sent down open-mouthed by a couple of left swings on the jaw. The fight ended right there. The knockout came then and Wolgast's victory most decisive.

TAFT DEFENDS RECIPROCITY

President in Speech Assails Critics of Policy Which He Declares Is Republican Doctrine.

Indianapolis.—President Taft in a speech at the banquet of the Marion club declared that reciprocity is genuine Republican doctrine and that the Canadian agreement now before congress is less radical than proposals by Blaine and McKinley. He referred to the last Republican platform stand for duties equaling the cost of production abroad and declared that the Canadian proposal covered exactly with the platform plank. He admitted that the cost of living would be reduced by the adoption of the agreement. He said it would bring prosperity to Canada by increasing its population and its capacity for consumption, thereby helping America. He said that while the president's reciprocity speech was a climax to his part in Indianapolis' Sane Fourth celebration.

PLAN A WORLD-WIDE TRUST

International Congress Approves Gary's Plan of Eliminating All Competition in Steel Trade.

Brucecle.—Judge Elbert H. Gary's plan for the practical elimination of competition in the manufacture of steel was unanimously approved by representatives of the leading steel companies of the world at the conference here. A committee was appointed to consider a plan of organization and report later.

In explaining his proposition for a world-wide combination along the lines of the American Iron and Steel institute, Judge Gary said the object was "to form the destructive feeling of action of steel prices," and "maintain a business equilibrium in the world's steel industry."

Discussing the question whether such a world-wide combination could be formed without violation of any of the existing laws, particularly in the United States, some of the representatives agreed that being an international organization no action could declare it to be illegal.

Maternal Instinct.

Mrs. Rattle—I am sure that is my baby with the pink ribbon over there.

Mr. Cynic—How can you tell it so readily?

Mr. Rattle—I can recognize it by my pet poodle the nurse has with her.

A Catastrophe.

A cat was taking chessi along the roof o New York building. It lost its balance and fell on a boy who was standing on a balcony on the second floor. The startled boy fell in his turn, landing on a baby carriege, fortunately empty, which another boy was wheeling in the street. The first boy dislocated his wrist; the cat was killed.

The Girl's Handicap.

In her pretty new frock sister Mabel felt quite proud as she sat on the front step and watched some boys playing on the sidewalk.

After a time one little boy came up to talk to her and to admire, in his rough little way, her bright shiny, shoes and pink sash.

"She my nice square-cut waist," exclaimed the girlie, "and my nice coral beads! Don't you wish you was a girl?"

"No sir-ee," replied the boy. "I wouldn't want to be any girl at all, because lookie how much more neck you hat to wash."

WRONG SORT

Perhaps Plain Old Meat, Potatoes and Bread May Be Against You for a Time.

A change to the right kind of food can lift one from a sick bed. A lady in Weldon, Ill., says:

"Last spring I become bed-fast with stomach troubles accompanied by sick headache. I got worse and worse until I became so low I could scarcely retain any food at all, although I tried about every kind.

"We had become completely discouraged, and given up all hope, and thought I was doomed to starve to death, until one day my husband, trying to find something I could retain, brought home some Grape-Nuts.

"To my surprise the food agreed with me, digested perfectly and without distress. I began to gain strength at once. My flesh (which had been flabby), grew firmer, my health improved in every way and every day, and in a very few weeks I gained 20 pounds in weight.

"I liked Grape-Nuts so well that for several months I ate no other food, and always felt as well satisfied after eating as if I had eat down to a fine banquet.

"I had no return of the miserable sick stomach nor of the headaches, that I used to have when I ate other food. I am now a well woman, doing all my own work again, and feel that life is worth living.

"Grape-Nuts food has been a God-send to my family. It surely saved my life; and my two little boys have thriven on it wonderfully." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Peanut-Brittle

By DONALD ALLEN

The gentleman who had a seat about the middle of the drawing room car had been reading a book for the last hour, and had become so interested that he was hardly conscious when some one sat down beside him. If a stranger, it was a piece of impertinence; if an acquaintance— But he had just returned from a three years' trip abroad.

The intruder was a little girl four years old. She had found her way in from the car ahead.

"Hello!" saluted the man as he turned on her.

"I thought you looked lonesome," she replied, as she smiled at him.

"And so you ran away from your mamma to come and sit with me for a while. That is good of you, but aren't you pretty small to be wandering about on the train by yourself?"

"Oh, there's no danger. Mamma and I have traveled a good big lot together. I've been all through the train, but I didn't see any gentleman I liked 'till I came to you. Then I just took a seat."

"That flatters me. I'll lay aside my book and talk with you."

"But I went to ask you a question first," she said, as her face sobered up. "Do you—do you like peanut-brittle?"

"Why, I don't think I really know what it is."

"It's peanut meats stuck into candy, and you can break it up."

"It's peanut meats stuck into candy, and you can break it up the same as glass. When you get to eating it you want a whole pound. Now you know."

"And I'll surely buy you some the first chance I get. If you'd give me your name perhaps I might send a box."

"I haven't a card with me," she said soberly, as she drew away a little. "I'm not old enough to be introduced to folks, you know. Then you haven't got any peanut-brittle in your grip?"

"Sorry to say I haven't. I didn't expect to meet you, you see. I'm wondering if we haven't met before?"

"How could we?"

"That's so, I've been gone a long time."

"If we did meet anywhere I was only a baby, and that don't count, does it? Oh, dear, if the newsboy on the train only had some peanut-brittle! All he's got is congh-drops, and I've no cough. I'll have to get along some way. Why are you traveling alone? Haven't you got any wife or children?"

"When you sat down here," he said, after a moment's hesitation, "you said I looked lonesome? Well, I feel lonesome. I'm all alone in the world."

"So is mother. She cries over it sometimes, but of course you don't. I never saw a man cry. Do they ever?"

"Perhaps, but I never saw one do it either. We have to get along without tears. I suppose, being a young lady, you have a crying spell now and then?"

"Why, I have to cry when mamma does, of course. I ought to, shouldn't I?"

"Surely. Going away now?"

"Yes. Mamma may be anxious. Next time you must have some peanut-brittle with you. You never can tell when some little girl or boy will ask for some. Well, good-by. I've had a real nice time."

The man held her hand for a moment and looked into her blue eyes, and there was a sigh on his lips as he let her go. He picked up the book and tried to resume his reading, but the interest of the story was gone. He simply looked out on the landscape without seeing it and thought and wondered. Four hours later he was a guest at a hotel in the mountains, and almost the first man he met after registering slapped him on the back and exclaimed:

"Well, if here isn't Tom Throop! Why, old man, I thought you were friends of mine sure. Glad to see you looking fairly well."

Next day as Throop sat on one of the verandas smoking, some one crowded between the chairs and leaned over his knee with a merry chuckle. It was the little girl of the train.

"Got that peanut-brittle yet?" she asked.

"Gracious, no! I didn't think I'd ever meet you again, and I haven't seen any candy stores around here."

"Oh, but they have it. There's a place back of the hotel called the grotto. I found it the first thing this morning. Lots of peanut-brittle there. Just made yesterday."

"Then come right along and you shall have your pound."

"Yes, but let me whisper to you first. They charge double price. Will that make any difference to you?"

She was told with a laugh that it wouldn't, and hand in hand they tripped away. As a child wise beyond her years she asked no impertinent questions; as a gentleman, Throop asked none. Her mother, and perhaps her father as well, were staying at the same hotel.

The next day it was not peanut-brittle, but a long walk. The next day it was some more of the sweet stuff and a "visit" on the veranda. On the next, as the child had not appeared up to mid-afternoon, the lonesome man went wandering on the grounds in search of her. He was told by one of the caretakers of the grounds that she had taken a certain path an hour before, but she could come to no harm.

The man followed the path for almost half a mile up the mountain, and then he got a sight of the child. She had scrambled up the rugged face of a cliff thirty feet high, and stood cowering there. He saw at once that she was in fear, and he called out to her to stand still until he reached her side. In two minutes of climbing he was within ten feet of her. Then she said in a voice that quivered just a trifle:

"Lonesome Man, it isn't that I'm afraid to come down, but there's a big snake here!"

"What kind of a snake?"

"I don't know, but every time I move he goes huz-z-z-z with his tail!"

"Then don't move—on your life don't move. I will come up another way."

And scrambling down, he made his escalade at a point fifty feet away, and in a few minutes was above the girl. Within three feet of her, and called to neither and keeping up a constant rattling, was a deadly snake. When the man recognized the species his heart came into his throat and choked him for a moment. Then he called in a voice hardly above a whisper:

"Don't move, and don't try to answer me! Keep just as still as you possibly can. There's a lady down below beckoning to you, but never mind her. I'm going to drop a big stone on the snake. Don't be scared, dearie, now it's coming!"

The stone hit the serpent fairly and crushed out its life in a second. Half a minute later Throop was down beside the child. She was swaying and tottering as his hands reached out. She was unconscious as he reached the path with her to find a lady holding out her arms in mute appeal, but unable to utter a sound. She had somehow understood the peril of the child.

"Tom!"

"Gracie!"

He laid down the burden and stepped back and looked at the woman.

"Tom—husband—you were all wrong to go away," she sobbed.

"That's our Gracie, named after me. She was only a year old when you—you—"

And he opened his arms and she sobbed on his breast. They were still clinging to each other when they heard a voice saying:

"Men do cry sometimes—so there! And, Gracie, if you and the Lonesome Man will only get married I can have heaps of peanut-brittle every day as long as I live!"

Swallow Is a Traveler.

From Germany to the West Indies and back again was the recent holiday trip of a house swallow whose favorite resting quarters are at Walsenhausen, near Mulhausen. Last autumn the bird was caught by a householder. The captor wrote a note on very thin paper and fastened it under a feather of the bird's wing before letting the captive go free. The note ran: "I nested at A. R.'s house at Walsenheim, and I am instructed to take this information to him with whom I stay in the winter." The swallow lately returned to his old nesting place and was noticed to have a different letter attached to its wing feather. When netted again a little note was found which read: "I wintered at a shoemaker's house, the office of Joseph Brady, at Martinique, West Indies, who sends greetings to my protector at Waltenheim, Germany."

The Panama Hat

THE Panama hat of today is woven in sizes and shapes to suit the mode and yet retain something of its old characteristics. An insistent American demand finally persuaded the native South American weavers to vary the shapes they had woven for so long and to make brother brimmed and larger crowned hats. The two models shown in the pictures represent new, ideas combined with the old in an entirely harmonious manner. This exquisite straw fabric, the most beautiful of street or cutting hats, will perhaps come to be made for all sorts of millinery, but at present we associate it with that for which it seems to have the greatest fitness—the utility millinery, and we like it best with the simplest trimming. A panama of this description holds the same position as that of the first-class strictly tailored gown. It cannot be outclassed.

The problem confronting the milliner is the conversion of the small panama of other days into an acceptable hat of today. She has met this difficulty in a number of ways. By turning down the brim and banking wings and chiffon about the crown. Or by the addition of a border of silk or ribbon to the edge of the brim and fancy feather bands of generous proportion about the crown. The flexibility of the crown makes it possible to turn it up or down anywhere. It may be considerably stretched also. Extra width is sometimes let in the brim in another straw or fabric and concealed by a silk facing on the under brim and a soft scarf or sash on the upper brim.

If the shape seems to be passable without piecing there is no other trimming better than a drapery of light silk or chiffon. The rule is that the drapery should be light and durable like the hat, and in spite of its fragile appearance chiffon may be repeatedly washed.

The owner of a panama hat should not use hetpins to fasten it on with. Hat fasteners should be sewed to the head band and thrust into the hair to secure the hat to the head. It is almost a crime to thrust pins through the beautiful, painstaking weave of which the hat is made. The evidence of carelessness shows a lack of appreciation. When one sees a fine panama punctured with holes it is a mark of inelegance in the wearer.

HANDBAGS OF EVERY STRIPE

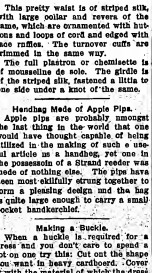
Good Point About the Newest Is That They Can Be Made to Match the Costume.

The separate handbag is flat, suspended on a cord and of fabric that is delightful in its newness and in the possibility of matching costumes with which it is worn at small cost. That is the hopeful message of fashion's mandate. You can make most of the fabric handbags.

There's a tapestry bag with a pointed flap that is called an "envelope bag." Its edges are bound with linen tape or gilt galloon, and it fastens either by a button and loop or by a patent clasp that can be bought at any notion counter.

Linen bags can be made of odd scraps of goods left from your frocks. There is no reason why you should not have a little handbag to match every summer street dress. The shapes can be oblong, square, circular, oval. Drawing-strings of cotton cord are easily run through casings or crocheted rings on the outside. Heavy embroidery can be added to the top surface of a bag. Soutache braiding is another effective way.

The fabric bags can be finished with metal tops if you wish, but the other method is just as good and a little easier for the maker.



Expensive Accessories.

Fashionable gowns of the more useful description depend almost entirely upon little accessories in the way of collars, cuffs, vests and undersleeves for their success. Without such ornamental addition the average serge or cloth gown of the moment becomes a curiously severe looking affair, distinctly lacking in attractiveness. It is just these charming' oddments which make such heavy raids upon one's "pin money," and the women who is able to reproduce expensive creations in her own sitting room has an enormous advantage over her less skilful sister.

A Trunk Rug.

A trunk rug for the guest room will protect a pretty carpet or matting from the disfiguring marks often made by a visitor's trunk. The rug may be of the same material as the floor covering and cut a little larger than a good-sized trunk. Take care to see that an incoming trunk is set squarely on the rug.

IN STRIPED SILK

This pretty waist is of striped silk, with large collar and revers of the striped silk, ornamented with buttons and loops of cord and edged with lace ruffles. The turnover cuffs are trimmed in the same way.

The full plastron or chemisette is of mousseline de sole. The girdle is of the striped silk, fastened a little to one side under a knot of the same.

Handbag Made of Apple Pips.

Apple pips are probably amongst the last thing in the world that one would have thought capable of being utilized in the making of such a useful article as a handbag, yet one in the possession of a friend recently was made of nothing else. The pips have been most skilfully strung together to form a pleasing design and the bag is quite large enough to carry a small pocket handkerchief.

Making a Buckle.

When a buckle is required for a dress and you don't care to spend a lot on one try this: Cut out the shape you want in heavy cardboard. Cover it with the material of which the dress is made and then trim it with whatever trimming is being used. A pretty one was made of row after row of beads to match a dress trimmed with bead fringe. Cover one with lace, gold lizons or anything.

COW STALL IS COMFORTABLE

Distinguishing Feature of Bidwell Type Is Movable Manger and Rack—Chain Across Rear.

By GEORGE P. GROUT, Minnesota Unlversity Farm.)

The "Bidwell" style of stall affords the greatest degree of comfort to the cow. The distinguishing features of this stall are the movable manger and rack, whereby the length of the standing room fore and aft may be veried to suit the individual cow, and the fastening for the cow, which consists of a rope or chain across the rear end of the stall, to keep the cow from backing out. The stall should be three feet wide on centers. The entire stall, from A to B (see cut), is seven feet in length. The gates (which should all swing one way), are about four feet long. The rear posts, if used, should slant as shown in the cut, to allow the milker a little more room. In some stables these rear posts have been done away with entirely, the gates simply being chained or roped together. As usually built, the front rack or panel is made of a 2x4 framework, with 7-16 rods; and this framework is fastened solidly in the manger; but the manger and framework are not attached to the sides of the stall, but left loose, so as to be adjusted to the length of the cow. In some cases, however, the rack is hinged at the top and the bottom allowed to swing in the manger, so that it may be swung toward the front several inches. This allows the cow a little more freedom in getting up any lying down.

ATTENTION TO BULL'S FEET

Where Animal is Rather Closely Confined His Feet Will Need Considerable Trimming.

The feet of a bull demand more or less attention, especially if he is rather closely confined and getting a liberal supply of grain. The feet should be trimmed so that the animal always has the proper use of the same. Some bulls are so easily handled as a gentle horse, and their feet can be trimmed without the slightest difficulty. However, this is rather the exception than the rule. The most satisfactory way is to put the animal in stocks and raise it off its feet. Then, by strapping the foot to be trimmed solid to a beam, so that the sole will be facing upward, the operation can be executed with a knife and chisel in a few minutes. Care should be taken to avoid cutting too deep or into the sensitive part of the foot, as this would be very likely to cause bleeding and lameness

Modified Milk.

Modified milk, so called, is a combination of milk, cream and sugar, varied or modified to suit each particular case. It is prepared especially for bottle-fed babies, all is mixed in accordance with physicians' prescriptions to meet each individual case, some requiring more cream, some less cream and more sugar. Of course the foundation is supposed to be fine, pure milk. It commands fancy prices among the city families and ranges from 20 to 30 cents per quart, delivered usually in small packages, frequently in refrigerator cases.

Good Care of Calves.

DAIRY COWS DURING SUMMER

Method of Handling Animals on Washington Farm—Owner Prefers Fall or Winter Calves.

The following is the method of handling dairy cows in summer on the dairy farm of L. H. Blanchard of Jefferson county, Wash. This dairy farm has been such a success that it has received national renown.

The dairy cows on this farm are given a small feed of hay early in the morning. About eight o'clock the cows are turned out to pasture. At noon they are stalled and given a feed of green forage. Another such feed is given at 3:30 p. m., and still another at 6:00 p. m., after which they are turned out to pasture for the night. The quantity given at each of these feeding periods is governed by the amount the cows will clean up. In feeding soiling crops it is important not to put too much feed before the cows at a time. After they have stanched over a portion of it for a while they refuse to eat it and call for fresh material. They should be given only what they will eat before they have fouled it too much to relish.

When the hay is of the best quality no grain is fed during the soiling period except when rye is fed, even to fresh cows, but if the hay is not of the best a small quantity of grain is fed fresh cows at the morning feed.

The owner of this farm prefers to raise fall and winter calves for the dairy. It is more convenient under his conditions to give them the attention they need than in the case of those born at other seasons. The calves are allowed to nurse their dams only once. After this they are fed their mothers' milk for two weeks. The first week they are given two quarts of milk in the morning, one quart at noon, and two quarts in the evening. The second week they are given three quarts twice a day, morning and evening. During the next two weeks the feed of the calf consists of half whole and half skim milk, with a pinch of flax seed meal added to it, about once at a feed. The quantity of milk fed during this period (the second two weeks) is about three quarts twice a day.

After a calf is a month old it is given four quarts of skim milk twice a day, with an ounce of flax seed meal and a handful of mixed corn meal and ground oats. The calf is taught to eat this by putting the meal into the milk a few times. Then the grain is fed dry, after the skim milk. Feeding the dry material after the skim milk is finished prevents the calves from sucking each other when they are let out of the stalls from which they are fed. The quantity of grain is gradually increased until at two months of age the calf is receiving a quart of the mixture a day. About this time the feeding of a small quantity of roots and silage begins and the calves are given all the hay they will eat. Milk is fed until the calves are three months old, sometimes longer. They have access to fresh water at all times.

DAIRY NOTES

The best churn for home use is a small barrel churn.

Dairy farming makes better farms, better homes, better citizens.

Warm water will not have nor pay to let the milk flow run short.

The words Holstein and Holstein-Friesian designate the same breed.

When cows are on good pasture they do not require very much grain.

Churn the cream as soon as it is ripe. Do not let it stand for another day.

It is better to feed after the cows go on pasture than it is to stop too early.

Millet is a fairly good feed for dairy cows, but there are other crops much better.

The full-blooded dairy cow will never become profitable in the hands of a scrub owner.

Good milk and cream can only be produced when the cow is fed a liberal supply of clean and nutritious feeds.

When preparing butter for market always bear in mind that an attractive package will more quickly win a buyer.

The dairyman who keeps more than half dozen cows and expects to increase his herd can afford to own a good dairy bull.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

It is surprising how concerned some of the Democratic papers are getting for fear the Republican party will make a mistake, and not nominate Taft

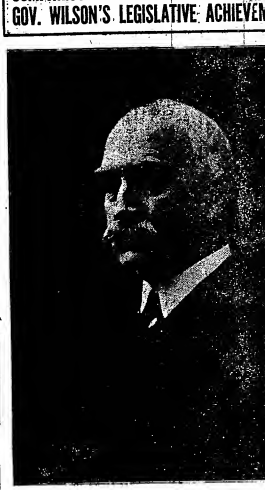
We are a North western farmer, publishing a Republican paper, but if that Canadian treaty is ratified we want no more to do with the Taft brand of Republicanism.

Dan Lawler has launched his U. S. Senatorial campaign rather early, as we would advise him to look out for the bird that has short chin whiskers, who will be not looking for earley worms.

Congressman and Mrs. Steenson returned home from Washington last week. The lower house of congress is ahead of the senate, who are keeping reciprocity warmer than the weather, which we wish would get hot enough to roast them out.

By next year that Reciprocity treaty will get to smoking just about right. The producer will see a big reduction in the prise of what he has to sell, and the consumer will have to pay a little more for what he buys. Then ok out for a house cleaning.

Cardis free trade on all farm produce had ought to make a big saveing in the Republican speakers expense account next year, as they will not have one single inducement to hold out to a farmer to vote the Republican ticket, so they might just as well stay at home.



About a year ago hogs sold at about eleven dollars per hundred in Chicago. To day with the price of hogs cut in two the Swift and Armore brand of bacon is about the same price. That is the way Reciprocity will work. The producer and consumer will get it in the neck at both ends.

Do you consumers notice that the poor butcher who is selling you 18 cent bacon is not saying anything about the high price of hogs in Chicago. The hogs are wearering silk dresses and pushing Reciprocity at the present time, but we will see if we can't not raise their brussels a little next year.

To those of our readers who have read "Cezars Colum" we want to say don't get excited, and kill poor Cezar, who has been working for the interest of the common people for years, but retain the the crown on his head, and not let his head drop in the basket, when the day of reckoning comes.

Should Taft again run for president he would be the worst defeated man that ever ran, not excepting Horace Greeley. We do not believe that he could get as many votes to day for president as Greeley got. Where oh where could he get them? He has sold out the party that elected him, and betrayed the farmers of the North West who trusted him. The Democrats are only useing him for a tool to rake their chestnuts out of the fire, and would ask for nothing easier than for the Republican party to again put him up as their nominee for president, for he would not only be defeated, but "skun and Nor he could not carry one

COMPARISON OF GOVERNOR HARMON'S AND GOV. WILSON'S LEGISLATIVE ACHIEVEMENTS

HON. JUDSON HARMON, GOVERNOR OF OHIO

Columbus, O., June.—Governor Judson Harmon, of Ohio, and Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, both considered Democratic presidential timber from coast to coast, have impressive programs of legislation to their credit.

Both met with opposition in their party ranks when they championed pending measures and both made fights to obtain legislation they believed the people wanted and needed. Governor Harmon won out over greater obstacles, for an investigation resulted in bribery charges being filed against several legislators, who had been opposing his bills. Most of the important legislation in Ohio came after the bribery charges were filed. By persistent pounding and hammering, Governor Wilson succeeded in pulling his reform bills through the New Jersey legislature.

Governor Wilson's legislative achievements are better known outside his native state than are Governor Harmon's, for the reason the latter has been tied down in Columbus by a long session which ended only last Wednesday. The New Jersey law-makers finished their work two months ago, and their accomplishments have been advertised throughout the United States.

Under the guidance of Governor Harmon the general assembly enacted 17 important bills that the enlightened citizens had been pleading for in vain for several decades. Governor Wilson's legislative program, as widely advertised, includes bills.

The Harmon Bills.

The big bills on the Harmon program are:

The Oregon plan of nominating and electing United States senators by direct vote of the people.

Placing the Ohio judiciary beyond the clutches of party bosses by electing all judges on non-partisan ballots.

An employers' liability act making provisions for all injured workmen from a fund made up by contributions by employers and employes.

A public utility commission with authority to regulate issues of stock rates, mergers and service.

A corrupt practices act that will make vote buying in primaries and elections a dangerous undertaking.

A limited initiative and referendum for Ohio cities.

A central board of control for 18 state institutions to take the place of 19 separate boards of trustees with their corps of employes. This bill places subordinate employes in the institutions under civil service.

A shorter ballot by abolishing boards of infirmery directors of three members each, in every county of the state and turning their duties over to the county commissioners making a three saving. A reform of Ohio election laws to prevent corruption and fraud, also a strict system of registration to prevent fosters voting.

To have delegates to the 1912 Ohio constitutional convention nominated by petition only and elected on non-partisan ballots.

A back-to-the-farm movement by requiring agriculture to be taught in all Ohio village and country schools.

Ratification of the proposed income tax amendment to the federal constitution.

Memorializing congress to call a convention to provide for the direct election of United States senators.

Insuring the honest handling of all state money by depositing in banks under the competitive bidding plan.

A complete reformation of tax laws that will put tax dodgers out of business and will compel corporations and owners of intangible property that have been dodging taxes to place their holdings on the duplicate the same as small property owners. Limited to this is a maximum tax per cent tax levy, municipal

The Wilson Bills.

The big bills in the legislative program of Governor Wilson, as set forth by one close to that executive include:

A corrupt practices act.

Public utilities bill.

Employers' liability bill.

The commission form of government in cities desiring it by a 30 per cent majority vote, including the initiative, referendum and recall.

An election reform bill providing for personal registration and an identification system in addition to the non-partisan blanket ballot of the Massachusetts type.

Civil service for election of officers.

A primary bill providing for direct nomination and election of all officials, including delegates to the national convention and United States senators—a more drastic measure than the Oregon plan.

A law placing New Jersey on record as ready to aid in building a ship canal that will serve as a connecting link between the two most populous districts of the American seaboard.

A law that will protect the New Jersey public from the abuses of the cold storage companies.

A set of laws that will reorganize the schools of the state along economic and progressive lines.

When Democratic legislators jumped the party traces and refused to stand for any of these bills, both Governor Wilson and Governor Harmon disregarded party ties and went over to the Republican side and got sufficient votes to have them enacted.

In his message to the Ohio general assembly demanding the enactment of pending measures, Governor Harmon, in addition to the bills in his legislative program enumerated above, advocated the abolition of the party emblem in purely municipal elections; smaller city councils, with a large part of whom elected at large; the nomination by state wide primary elections of all who are in any way to act for or represent the state officially or politically and the non-partisan no limition of judges. The general assembly, however, disregarded Governor Harmon's suggestion with respect to the last four bills.

A Record of Progressiveness.

Judson Harmon has been called a conservative and this is true if conservatism means one who does not suddenly rip up governmental machinery without first constructing a new and better driving power to succeed the old. If progressive Democracy means constructive Democracy then Mr. Harmon is a progressive. In Ohio the people are claiming that the reform measure Judson Harmon put through the Ohio general assembly are as progressive as any legislative program of any executive in the United States. Mr. Harmon is a strong, sober, sensible, well-balanced and well-equipped man, of the real Jackson and Jeffersonian school—the constructive Democracy. In discharging his duties, he selects his course with great care and then proceeds with constitutional exactness. To one hand he has held the support and confidence of the man who works, and in the other he has maintained the approval of what are generally called the business interests.

A non-partisan judiciary bill which will place all judges beyond the domain of politics, a working men's compensation act and a public utilities bill are among the big measures on the Harmon legislative program that Ohioans claim are far in advance of any such legislation in the United States.

After the Ohio general assembly adjourned Lieutenant Governor Nichols issued a statement in which he said: "It is an undeniable fact that the present general assembly has a legislative record to its credit

Origin of a Soup.

The grumbling of a negro groom led to the composition of the immortal "Old Folks at Home." While waiting for a change of horses at a Kentucky hostelry the composer, Stephen Foster, author of so many beloved darky melodies, heard a melancholy negro murmur as he threw a set of harness to the ground: "I'a sick an' tired o' dis life. I wisht I was back wif de ole folks at home."

"Where may that be, Sam?" asked Foster.

"Oh," answered the darky, "way down on de Suwannee river."

The result was the song as we have it today.

Counter Diplomacy.

"I thinks you will like this goods, madam," urged a salesman in a Euclid avenue shop. "It is just the thing for a stout, middle aged lady."

"Sir!" splendied the customer in a rage. The clerk saw his faux pas and recovered himself quickly.

"Pardon me," he smiled, "I mistook you for the young lady who was in here yesterday looking for something for her grandmother. Now that I look at you again, I see that this was an older person. Now, if you are buying for yourself, we have something over here that"—

Wondrous Tact.

As an example of graciousness and tact Matthew White tells in Munsey's Magazine of a London clergyman who was called on to address an audience of actors. Alluding to the better social status of the players, the clergyman said that in former days it was sometimes customary to brand them as vagabonds and bore a hole in their ears with an awl, that the citizens might thus be forewarned. "And who knows," the clergyman added, "but that it is a survival of an endeavor to hide this mark of indignity that causes some of the actors even today to wear their hair long?"

Bottles and Rags.

"Bottles and rags, bottles and rags!" called out a rag and bone man as he plied his calling.

"Why do you always put these words together?" asked a passerby.

"Because, madam," replied the man, courteously touching his hat, "whenever you find bottles you find rags!"—London Family Herald.

Beaconsfield the Dandy.

The dandyism Benjamin Disraeli affected in his dress is the subject of many pen pictures in Monypenny's "Life of Beaconsfield." At the age of nineteen he is described as wearing a black velvet suit with ruffles and black stockings with red clocks. A later portrait, in 1830, comes from a friend's diary, which has the following entry:

"March 29.—B. D. to dine with me. He came up Regent street when it was crowded in his little surtout, a pair of military light blue trousers, black stockings with red stripes and shoes. The people, he said, 'quite made way for me as I passed. It was like the opening of the Red sea,' which I now perfectly believe from experience. Even well dressed people stopped to look at me."

"Coming down one morning, I found Bunch pacing up and down the passage before her master's door in a state of great perturbation.

"'What is the matter, Bunch?'

"'Oh, ma'am, I can't get no peace or quiet till I've got master shaved, and he's so late this morning!'

"This 'getting master shaved' consisted in making ready for him with a large painter's brush a thick lather in a large wooden bowl as big as Marlebone's helmet, which she always considered as the most important avocation of the morning."

When the Danes Were Skinned.

In former times the Danes used to pull up the mouths of the English rivers to pillage the churches. When they were caught they were skinned and their skins nailed to the door of the church they attacked. In course of time all the exposed portions would peel off, but that covered by the nail would be protected and thus bear testimony to the cruelty of the ancient Englishmen. In the London College of Surgeons may be seen three specimens of human skin bearing labels such as this: "Portion of human skin said to be that of a Dane from the door of a church at Hadstock, in Essex." A second specimen is from Copford, in Essex, and a third from the north door of Worcester cathedral. Such fragments of carelessly flayed Danish hide have been found on doors in Westminster abbey.

A Cleveland young woman has a married brother who is wise, beyond his years and he likely to crop out in new places at the most unexpected times. The other night the anxious suitor called on his inamorata, arriving at her domicile a little before he was expected. She was not ready to make her appearance, and the duty of entertaining the caller devolved upon the little brother.

"Well, Bobby," began the young man in an effort to make conversation and at the same time to put his inferiority host at his ease, "does your sister think that I am calling at this house often?"

The child looked keenly at the caller. "Nothing doing," he said. "Do you think I'm one of these fresh kids you read about in the funny papers? There ain't going to be no embarrassing answer this time." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Missionary a Puzzle.

To the untutored Chinamen the presence of the missionary is a puzzle. They simply cannot imagine human beings exiling themselves from their native land for the love of men on the other side of the globe. So they frame sundry theories to explain the thing to themselves. One theory is that the missionaries are secret political agents bent on gaining an influence over the Chinese and then swaying them to the advantage of their respective governments. Only of late have the natives come to realize that the strangers are not sent by their governments, but by religious groups. According to another theory, China is so excellent and renowned that the red haired barbarians come to live there for the mere pleasure of it. As for their self denying works of benevolence, these are supposed to be prompted by the desire to acquire merit.—Century.

Doctors Said He Would Die

A Friend's Advice Saves Life

I wish to speak of the wonderful cure that I have received from your noted Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder cure. Last summer I was taken with severe pains in my back and sides. I could not breathe without difficulty and was nearly wild with the desire to urinate. Was compelled to do so every ten minutes with the passage of pure blood with the urine. I tried all the different doctors from far and near, but they said it was no use to doctor as I would die anyway. I was at the end of my rope and was so miserable with pain and the thought that I must die that words cannot tell how I felt. One day a friend told me of the wonderful help she had received from Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. She gave me one of your pamphlets which I read and determined to try Swamp-Root. After taking half a bottle I felt better. Have now taken ten bottles and am well as I ever was, thanks to Swamp-Root. I wish to tell all suffering people that have kidney, liver or bladder trouble, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the best medicine on the market.

All persons doubting this statement can write to me and I will answer them directly.

Yours very truly,

Settled Town.

"I've a sight o' sons—thirteen altogether," remarked a prosperous old farmer, "and all of 'em's done me credit save the three eldest, who served wild oats at a pretty rapid rate, and then came home and saddled my shoulders with the harvest.

"Well, I owe I was glad to see 'em back, and I feasted 'em, and petted 'em, and set 'em on their legs again, only to see 'em skedaddle off afresh only to see 'em skedaddle off afresh when things had slowed down. With all the cash they could lay hands on.

"That thereabouts, sickened me, so I called the rest of 'em together and

"There's ten of you left, and if any of you 'ud like to follow t'other three I won't try to stop you. But, understand this, though there may be a few more prodigal sons, there'll be no more fatted calves. I've killed the last of 'em!"

"And," continued the old man, triumphantly, "I've had trouble wi' none of 'em since!"

A Busy Place.

"Where is that spot you call the 'lovers' lane'?" diffidently asks the young man while the young lady waits on the hotel piazza.

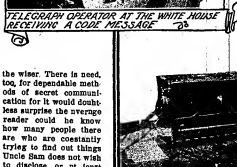
UNCLE SAM'S SECRET METHODS OF COMMUNICATION

RESIDENTS of foreign countries who visit the United States almost invariably marvel at the open and above-board manner in which our government does business—this one, latest, for instance, to which the public is taken into the confidence of the republic's highest officials, through the medium of the newspapers and public addresses. And no wonder, for such a state of things is assuredly in sharp contrast to the practices that prevail in many foreign countries, where it seems to be the policy of high officials to never tell the people anything until they have to or until there is grave danger that they will learn it from some other source and where letters and telegrams are cossored in a manner unheard of in this land of the free.



But for all that it is not the policy of our government to have many secrets from the sovereign American people whose servant it is. Uncle Sam is capable of keeping his own counsel when occasion demands it and what is equally important he has the ways and means for transmitting and receiving communications without anybody being the wiser. There is need, too, for dependable methods of secret communication for it would doubtless surprise the average reader could he know how many people there are who are constantly trying to find out things Uncle Sam does not wish to disclose or at least are trying to find them out before he is ready to make announcements on the subject.

STENOGRAPHER TAKING DICTATION FROM THE DICTAGRAPH

A BATTLESHIP'S WIRELESS OPERATOR AND HIS OFFICE

Special attention is made of eavesdroppers of this kind one naturally thinks of the spies which every foreign power is supposed to maintain in the United States for the purpose of keeping tab on the government's moves and of those even more active volunteer spies who though not in the pay of any foreign government are always scooping around trying to find out something that will be of value to the foreign country to which they are attached by ties of one kind or another. However, these comprise only a portion of the busybodies upon whom a watch must be kept. Even more dangerous, in a way, are the agents of speculators and Wall street gamblers who are constantly seeking advance information as to court decisions and government reports, etc. Our readers may remember that a few years ago there was a big scandal when it was discovered that speculators on the cotton and grain market had corrupted a government official who allowed them to secure advance "tips" as to the government crop reports that were, whenever they are issued, an important influence upon prices in all the produce exchanges and cotton exchanges in the land. Similarly there were camped in Washington during the past winter a number of scouts for the speculators any one of whom would probably have paid many thousands of dollars for advance information as to the findings of the United States Supreme court in the cases of the tobacco combine and other trusts.

But, after all, the gravest responsibilities that are imposed upon Uncle Sam's secret methods of communication come in connection with international complications of any kind—especially in the event of a crisis that threatens war. One of the best illustrations of record of how close-mouthed Uncle Sam can be on occasion was given when a large portion of the regular army was mobilized on the Mexican frontier. That movement required much planning and preparation on the part of the president and the high officials of the army and navy and yet so quietly did the preparations go forward that one-third of our standing army was hurrying to the Rio Grande ere the public had a hint what was happening.

This performance proved that the White house is, as it indeed ought to be, the nerve center of a very effective system for secret communication. The president has his own special telegraph and telephone operators stationed at the executive offices, but for long distance work they must be dependent upon the regular commercial lines, and for all that a direct line to anywhere can be set aside for the exclusive use of the White house almost at a moment's notice; there is, of course, some danger that outsiders somewhere along the line might overhear the messages that are clicked over it. To get around this difficulty the White house telegraphers send most of the highly confidential messages in a secret code or cipher—which means that a message is translated into a jumble of words that would have no meaning whatever to the average individual, but which stand for clearly intelligible expressions to a person who has the "key" to the disguise. In case it is desirable the president could use the regular codes of the United States army or navy, but he has a special private code of his own, which is probably the most secret of all the vehicles of communication used by the government.

Now whereas outsiders might tap in on long-distance telegraph wires carrying the president's messages (although the code or cipher would baffle them at this point) the chief magistrate has one medium for absolutely secret communication. This is an exclusive telephone system that centers at the executive offices, and wherein its radius does not extend beyond the limits of the national capital it is of immense service in keeping the nation's rules in close touch with every government official. This special system has no "belle girl" and by means of it the president may, upon taking his place in his specially constructed sound-proof telephone booth, feel free to speak his mind to any member of his cabinet or any high official of the army or navy in absolute surety that no third person has had an inkling of what he has said. Similarly the president can command at any time an executive line to the capitol building at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue and can hold a confidential confab with any senator or representative without anybody being the wiser as to what has passed between them.

Uncle Sam's secret methods of communication have been improved within the past few years through the introduction of several important new inventions. One of these is the dictograph, which has been hailed as the successor of the telephone and which consists of a master station in the private office of an official and a sub-station installed in a separate room. The advantages of this invention is found in the fact that the dictograph will transmit all conversation spoken in an ordinary tone in the room in which the instrument is located instead of it being necessary for the best results to speak directly into a transmitter as in the case of the telephone. Furthermore the receiving terminal is an ordinary-looking little box, which as it stands on a desk would never arouse a visitor's suspicions as to its character. These qualifications give a hint as to the manner in which it has proven valuable to certain government officials, as for instance the officials of the secret service. A criminal supposedly lurking in private may find that not only has his confession been overheard, but that it has been taken down word for word by a stenographer seated at her desk in a room some distance away.

Another ingenious newcomer among the secret solutions, however, is the invention known as the telautograph, which transmits handwriting via electrical wires to any reasonable distance, reproducing it like by line just as it is written at the point of origin. This device is being employed at United States forts and at other spots of governmental activity. It has many advantages that might not at first occur to the reader. For instance, its ability to reproduce handwriting and autograph signatures supplies a safeguard against tampering with military orders. If a battery commander sees an order written out before his eyes in the well-known handwriting of the officer in command of the artillery district wherein he is located he could not have any misgivings as to whether or not he has received bona fide instructions from headquarters.

One of the chief aims of Uncle Sam's experts just now is to devise means for insuring the secrecy of messages transmitted by wireless telegraph. Wireless telegraphy and its kindred

One of the chief aims of Uncle Sam's experts just now is to devise means for insuring the secrecy of messages transmitted by wireless telegraph. Wireless telegraphy and its kindred invention, wireless telephony, have proven one of the greatest boons of the age, but, from the standpoint of our public officials, and particularly our army and navy officers, their value will be tremendously enhanced if a way can be found to transmit messages with surety that they will reach nobody save the individual for whom they are intended. Under present conditions many military and naval wireless messages are "picked up" by private operators and of course this would not do at all in time of war. It is believed, however, that a solution will be provided when there is completed the trio of monster wireless towers, 450 feet in height soon to be constructed by the navy department at Washington, D. C. The equipment at the new station will be capable of transmitting wireless messages a distance of 3,000 miles or more and it is believed that it will be so powerful that it will be readily practicable to send and receive messages that cannot be fished by any wireless station of less capacity.

JEWS MAY YET COLONIZE

Another attempt will be made to establish a colony of Jews near the Holy Land. In 1903 the late Dr. Herzel, after having failed to obtain any satisfactory concession from the sultan of Turkey in respect to Zionist effort in Palestine, approached the Egyptian government with the object of getting a grant of land for Jewish settlement in El Arisch district, between Egypt and the Holy Land, the Jewish Chronicle says. The territory between these two points includes the Palestine plain, which at one time was extremely fertile and the original habitat of the Hittites.

A tentative offer was made to the Egyptian government of a tract of land situated within an irregular triangle, one side extending from the east of the Suez canal to Akabah, the other going from west of Gaza to Akabah, the coast forming the base. It was rejected.

Now once again Jewish eyes have been turned to this district. The plan offered by the General Jewish Colonization Organization is far less ambitious than that which animated the Zionist leader. Instead of attempting to colonize the large territory which Herzel had in view, attention has been concentrated upon Rapha, which is situated near to Gaza.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

All Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo. — "For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I cramped and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone come in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to tone me at these times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do my own housework, hoe my garden, and milk a cow. I can entertain company and enjoy them. I can visit when I choose, and walk as far as any ordinary woman any day in the month. I wish I could tell every suffering woman about it."—Mrs. Dema Bethune, Sikeston, Mo.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It is more widely and successfully used than any other remedy. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed. Why don't you try it?

Burglar Befriended Him!

A burglar was arrested for robbing a home up the country some time since, and the next morning the victim rushed wildly into the magistrate's office. As soon as he could get his breath to workieg again he told the official that he had come to see about the prisoner.

"Glad you came down," was the affable response of the magistrate. "I suppose you want to get some money from him."

"Well, I guess not!" exclaimed the victim with a glad smile. "I want to kiss him on the brow and give him $10 extra, because of that he stole from the house was a package of love letters that I wrote to my wife before we were married."

3C R. R. FARE AGAIN

PASSENGER RATE ADVANCE GOES INTO EFFECT THRU-OUT STATE.

FOLLOWS SANBORN'S DECISION

Tariffs Go Back to Amount Charged Prior to 1907.—Lower Rates For Special Occasions.

Minneapolis. — All steam railroads operating in Minnesota, beginning with July 1, must charge passengers one the basis of three cents a mile, the rate that was charged prior to May 28, 1907, when the two-cent fare law went into effect. This is mendatory, by order of Judge Walter H. Sanborn, of the United States circuit court in his decision declaring the two-cent fare law void. Even if the roads were satisfied with a two-cent rate, they must now base their tariffs on three, or lay themselves liable to contempt of court.

Judge Sanborn, it has been explained, is not partial to the three-cent rate. His order to go back to the three-cent basis is really automatic. On the merits of the case he decided that the two-cent law is void, and necessarily it would be illegal for the roads to keep on doing business under the provisions of that law. Therefore, he merely ordered that everything having to do with the workings of that void law be wiped out and that the roads go back to the old order of things.

Rate Clerks Are Busy.

Large forces of clerks in all the general offices of the roads operating in Minnesota have been busy revising the passenger tariffs on the old three-cent basis ever since Judge Sanborn handed down his decision. A passenger tariff is a complicated thing. Experts are required to change old ones or to make new ones. A change at one station affects nearly every other station on the system and the joint rates on other systems. In the present case, the passenger rates between every station in Minnesota and every other station in Minnesota had to be revised.

Mileage Books Unchanged.

Mileage books will be affected little by the change. Two thousand mile books have been selling for $50 while a rebate of $9.50 on return of the cover. Hereafter the books will be sold for $40 straight, but with a wider interchange value.

It is probable that under the higher rate the passenger associations will be quicker to grant reduced rates for conventions and other events which attract large numbers of travelers. While the basis for passenger fares is three cents a mile, that does not prevent the roads or any road from making lower rates for special occasions, if done under interstate commerce regulations.

ANGLERS FLOCK TO MINNESOTA.

State Treasury Will Get About $,000 From Non-Residents.

According to H. A. Rider executive agent for the state game and fish commission, all of the 7,500 non-resident license blanks ordered by the commission for 1911 probably will be used up before the end of the season, and at least 1,000 more will be needed to supply non-resident anglers who desire to fish in Minnesota this year.

"Some magazine has published the announcement that in Martin County eighty such licenses were issued and in Polk County eight have been disposed of. As a matter of fact Clay county alone has disposed of more than that number and in Cass and Wis. more than 150 licenses have been sold to residents of that city."

Mr. Rider is of the opinion that the state will gain approximately $8,000 through the passage of the non-resident fish license law, which provides for a $1 tax for fishing in Minnesota, 90 cents to go to the state and 10 cents to the county auditor who issues the license. All of the game wardens sell the licenses and in this way the entire $1 then goes to the state.

WINS CHEESE COMPETITION.

J. J. Roth of Pine Island Captures the Highest Score.

Names of winners in the state's monthly cheese competition were announced by J. B. Cannon of New London and A. W. Paulson of Pine Island, judges selected by the state dairy and food department. J. J. Roth of Pine Island ranks first, with a score of 97½, but as Mr. Roth won the last six months' contest, he is barred from the present six months' series. Other contestants are ranged as follows: Gabriel Bernon, Gentilly, 94; C. O. Fournier, Red Lake Falls, 93.4; W. W. McMicking, Underwood, 92.5; Chris. Mantig, West Concord, 92.5; C. B. Hubbard, Underwood, 89.2.

Mrs. Schaefer arrived for the funeral from Larchmont, N. Y., with Mrs. Frank R. White, her daughter, whom she was visiting. Saintly City Council No. 1,000, U. C. T., of which Mr. Schaefer was a member, had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Mr. Schaefer succumbed to heart trouble after stopping a runaway in front of the Willard hotel.

RECORD POSTAL RECEIPTS.

Gain of $25,000 and Two Million Mark Almost Reached.

Minneapolis postoffice receipts for the government's fiscal year ending June 30 are the greatest yearly receipts in the history of the office according to figures compiled by Postmaster W. D. Hele. The gross receipts for the year were $1,975,111.18, and still Mr. Hele is disappointed because the $2,000,000 mark was not overtopped. The increase over the previous year is $91,173.56.

"We had confidently expected that the gross receipts of the office would exceed $2,000,000," said Major Hele in explaining why he is disappointed, but a check in business in February and March reduced the receipts just about enough to keep the totals below the figure we hoped to attain. Still, the increase of more than $91,000 for a year and the fact that we came within $25,000 of the $2,000,000 mark satisfied is gratifying."

June's totals are the largest of any corresponding month since Minneapolis had a postoffice. The gross receipts were $156,430.34, as compared with $143,185.02 for June, 1910. The increase for the month is $13,234.62, or 9.24 per cent.

REEVE IS MADE GENERAL.

Colonel of First Regiment, M. N. G. is Honored by Officers.

C. McC. Reeve, for twenty years colonel of the First Regiment, M. N. G., was made brigadier general of Minnesota national guard. The choice was made by field and staff officers who met at the armory. Colonel Reeve's resignation from the First regiment was announced last week and he will retire from the national guard Aug. 3.

Colonel Reeve was made a brigadier general of United States Volunteers after the battle of Manila, but after the war returned to active duty as colonel of the First Regiment. His retirement precipitated a fight for the colonelcy with Lieutenant Colonel Frank T. Corriston and Major Erle D. Loer of Minneapolis as opposing candidates.

Credits Tax is Pushed.

Fergus Falls.—The board of equalization is at work in this city and has decided to make a determined effort to secure the listing of credits which have heretofore escaped taxation. Under the new law which makes the tax amount to only $2 a $1,000, the assessors have listed $170,000 as compared with a total of only $6,000 last year. The equalization board believes that a great deal more can be brought in, has made a large number of assessments and has sent notices to those affected to appear and show cause why they should not pay a fair share of credits.

The state railroad commission announced the appointment of Charles C. Neale of Minneapolis as head of the new department of weights and measures, which is being established under the direction of the commission by virtue of a law of the recent legislature. Neale's appointment will date from July 10 and he will have a salary of $2,500.

Knife River Hotel Burned.

Knife River.—The Knife River hotel was completely destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of about $6,000. The hotel was owned by John Pepper. An ice house and a harness shop, the latter belonging to the Alger Smith Lumber company, were also burned. The fire started in the garret of the hotel and is believed to have been caused from overheated stovepipes from the kitchen. The Two Harbors fire department was summoned, but until the arrival of the engine the flames had gained such headway that the building was doomed.

WHITTIER PROBE ON BOARD OF CONTROL TAKES UP CHARGES AGAINST TRAINING SCHOOL HEAD.

FOR WHIPPING UNRULY BOYS

First Witness, a Former Inmate, Says He Was Whipped in Machine—Counsel Clash Over Scope of Inquiry.

Minneapolis.—Discussion of technicalities took up most of the time at the first session of the hearing before the board of control of the charges preferred against Frank A. Whittier, superintendent of the Red Wing training school, by Ralph W. Wheelock, private secretary to Governor Eberhart. The room was filled with witnesses and interested spectators. Mrs. C. G. Higbee, president of the State Federation of Woman's clubs, Senator Edward Rustad were there.

P. M. Riegdal, chairman of the board of control, presided. On either side of him sat the other two members of the board, Charles Vasaly and P. J. Swenson. C. Louis Weeks, assistant attorney general, was present to advise the board.

Mr. Whittier appeared in person. His attorney was Frank M. Wilson of Red Wing. E. P. Sanborn of St. Paul represented Mr. Wheelock, who also was present.

Only one witness was examined during the session. He was Harry Goldsmith of St. Paul, who again related his story of alleged abuses at the Red Wing school.

Scope of Inquiry Questioned.

Mr. Sanborn asked whether this was to be the investigation Governor Eberhart had requested or whether it simply was a hearing of charges preferred by Mr. Wheelock. Chairman Riegdal read the opinion of Assistant Attorney General Weeks, which declared the hearing of the charges would be a hearing of the board of control, and that the investigation requested by the governor was a matter which would be brought up subsequently.

Mr. Sanborn rose to read the letter written by Governor Eberhart in which he asked for a complete investigation of the charges relating to the Red Wing institution. Before Mr. Sanborn could read the letter, Judge Wilson objected.

"I most decidedly protest against that letter," said Judge Wilson. "If such a thing were attempted in court I would ask that the counsel be cited for contempt. The law states clearly what procedure shall be followed. Am I to understand that the governor of the state can come before this board and dictate what to do when a complaint has been made and answer filed and the issue clear?"

Judge Wilson asked that his objection be entered on the minutes. Mr. Sanborn then read the governor's letter. Mr. Sanborn again asked an answer to his question. Mr. Wilson finally decided the present hearing was in part compliance with the governor's request. Chairman Riegdal ruled that the hearing on the charges preferred by Mr. Wheelock would proceed. An effort was made by Judge Wilson to have all witnesses not testifying excluded from the room. The board ruled that they need not be excluded.

Witness Says He Was Spanked.

Herry Goldsmith, the first witness, is 18 years old. He has a confectionery store in St. Paul. He testified he was sent to the training school in 1909 and remained there about six years. He said, in part:

"I was often punished with a strap about an inch wide and five feet long. I was whipped the first night after I arrived. I was later put on the spanking machine and officers named Scott, George and Mann took turns beating me. I counted a hundred blows that were given me while I was down so that I could not move. I was unable to count the blows given after that. My back was swollen afterwards and my skin thickened so I felt as if I had a board up my shoulders. I had to lay on my stomach when I went to bed and could not sit down for three days. I know of other boys who got similar beatings; one was Pat Larkin of St. Paul. I saw a lot of boys beat up so their bodies were black and blue."

In cross-examination Goldsmith said that he had been sent to the training school on an incorrigible on complaint of his mother. He admitted that he had run away from the school four or five times.

Little Falls.—Theodore Martin, who on June 18 shot and killed his wife at their home nine miles northeast of Little Falls, was given a hearing before a justice of the peace and bound over to the grand jury. It is said Martin has already written a confession. After he is indicted by the grand jury and will stand trial. The crime resulted over a dispute as to whether Mrs. Martin would give her son his supper, the boy stand not wishing the boy to eat in the house.

Lumber Secretary Gives Bond.

St. Paul. — Willard G. Hollt of Minneapolis, secretary of the North western Retail Lumbermen's Association, who with 13 other secretaries of retail lumbermen's associations, was indicted by the special federal grand jury in Chicago June 28, appeared before United States Commissioner Sheridan, in St. Paul G., and gave the defendants writ of habeas corpus proceedings, which were instituted by the lumbermen's associations, a bond in the sum of $1,000.

PITIFUL SIGHT WITH ECZEMA

"A few days after birth we noticed an inflamed spot on our baby's hip which soon began spreading until baby was completely covered even in his eyes, ears and scalp. For eight weeks he was bandaged from head to foot. He could not have a stitch of clothing on. Our regular physician pronounced it chronic eczema. He is a very able physician and ranks with the best in this locality, nevertheless the disease began spreading until baby was completely covered. He was losing flesh so rapidly that we became alarmed and decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"Not until I commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment could we tell what he looked like, as we never did not wash him, and I had been putting one application after another on him. On removing the cloths from his head the hair came off, and left him entirely bald, but since we have been using Cuticura Soap and Ointment he has as much hair as ever. Four weeks after we began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment he was entirely cured. I don't believe anyone could have eczema worse than our baby.

"Before we used the Cuticura Remedies we could hardly look at him, he was such a pitiful sight. He would fuss until I would treat him, they seemed to relieve him so much. Cuticura Soap and Ointment stand by themselves and the result they quickly and surely bring is their own recommendation." (Signed) Mrs. T. B. Reaser, Mill Hall, Pa., Feb. 20, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 29 K, Boston.

Would Try Another.

There was going to be a picnic that morning, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The little boy prayed before he retired at night that it might be a fine day. And when he looked out of the window at the peep of dawn, it was raining.

In the evening, the little boy wouldn't say his prayers. "Mamma," he asked, as he was going to bed, "where do they sell idols? I want to get one to worship."

ASTHMA CURED AT HOME TO STAY HAY-FEVER CURED

Outguessing The Pitcher

by EDDIE COLLINS of the WORLD'S CHAMPIONS

RUMORS had been circulated by the "underground" routes of baseball during the season of 1909 that signals were being tipped off in New York and Detroit. About this time, I noticed Ira Thomas and "Eddie" Plank working together in a game against the substitutes one day in morning practice. Thomas's signals were so ridiculously plain that I yelled to him from my position at second base.

"For heaven's sake, Ira," I called, "what are you trying to do? A blind man in center field could get those signals."

"All right, Eddie," he answered. "That's what they're for. It's a stall. We open a series in New York Monday, and they may be tipping signals there."

Instead of covering up his signs with his legs as any good catcher will, when he crouches behind the batter, Thomas was displaying his signals so that coachers at both first and third base could see them. I learned in due time that the pitchers were giving the real signs, and that Thomas had devised this scheme to throw any observers with spy glasses or other artificial aids off their guards. I might add that, as a result, in the following series four of the New York batters were hit with pitched balls and badly hurt.

All this means that, every time a batter faces a pitcher in a game of baseball in the big leagues, there is a duel of wits. In fact, the batter is pitted against both the pitcher and the catcher, as the incident related above will show. The acuteness of the duel depends on the amount of wits enlisted on each side. Some are not very keen.

But, although in the vernacular of baseball, it is called "outguessing the pitcher," it is really outwitting the catcher, for the receivers almost universally decide what kind of a dish shall be served to the batter. Occasionally a pitcher disagrees and shakes his head. Successful men behind the bat in the big leagues have made a careful study of batters, their "grooves" and mannerisms, and it is on this knowledge that a pitcher depends. Therefore, in the majority of cases, it is the batter outguessing the catcher. In only a few instances does the pitcher give the signals.

So much faith have some pitchers in certain catchers that they pitch altogether a different brand of baseball to other men. This is particularly true of Krause, the Philadelphia left hander, who pitched such sensational ball in the season of 1909, and of Ford, of the New York American league club, who was the thrill of the league last season with his double breaking spitball. Krause had no confidence in any catcher except Ira Thomas, and Ford could not work harmoniously without "Ed" Sweeney. These catchers did all the thinking for the two great twirlers, and their work in the box was purely mechanical.

Cobb.

Krause ranged ten straight victories in a row before he fell, in a ten-inning game with the St. Louis team, then, as usual, in last place. The secret is this. Thomas was catching him for the ten he put on the shelf. Lapp was behind the bat for the eleventh, and it fell off and smashed. Krause pitched without confidence in his catcher's judgment to outguess the batters, and he lost.

The same thing was true of Ford in the post-season series with the Giants. In the early innings of the first game, Sweeney had his hand split open with one of Ford's eccentric spitters. The Highlander was never the same again. He did not pitch the wonderful ball he is capable of in that series. He had no confidence in the lumbering Mitchell to handle his "spitters," to think fast; in short, to outguess the batters.

Plank.

Some catchers have a very busy habit of talking all the time to annoy a batter in an effort to distract his attention from his work. John Kling, of the Chicago Cubs, known in baseball as a bad man with a batter, "chewed" incessantly during the world's series in which we won the championship from the Cubs. He seemed to want to distract attention from the pitcher. A favorite line of his was:

"Now, let's try him on a fast one."

It is sort of an unwritten law of baseball to let the first one go by to get a look at the style. Kling would say:

"He liked the looks of that. Let's try him on another." Then up would come a curve.

A favorite trick of his is to get the batter into an argument, and have his pitcher shoot over a fast one. He tried this on me in the first world's series.

"So they say that you are the best base runner in the American league," was his opening line. "Well, you are not up against American league catchers now, young fellow. Let's see you steal a base if you get down."

I paid no attention to him, although he evidently hoped that I would turn around and reply, so that I would be caught off my guard. And not in conceit, but, as a historian, I relate the sequel. I did get down to first base, and by pretending I was going to steal, made him signal to Overall to waste two balls. Then, when he had to put a strike over, I went down.

Ford.

Sometimes a catcher will overplay his part in this respect, and a remark dropped by him will give a batter the key to the situation which will enable him to outguess the pitcher. A thing of this sort happened to me in Chicago one day last season, with Walsh pitching and Payne catching.

Payne dropped a remark which set my mind working and which led me to forecast what was coming. This cue and the resultant conclusion I drew, based on the hasty hypothesis of Payne's remark, resulted in a timely base hit. The conditions and circumstances of the hit are not likely to occur often in a game with Walsh pitching. He is a spit ball pitcher entirely. He uses his "spitter" and a fast ball with no curves. On this occasion, Payne signalled for either a spit ball or a fast one, I don't know which. Walsh shook his head in reply, and Payne gave him another signal to which he again shook his head.

"You don't want this one?" Payne mumbled in his mask, but loudly enough for me to hear as he gave another signal. Walsh nodded assent.

Now here is what passed through my mind, after listening to the hint carelessly dropped by Payne. Two were out at the time, a man was on third base, who, if he scored, would put us ahead, and the count on me was two strikes and no balls. My flash of thought must have been instantaneous. I try never to pay any attention to the monologue of a catcher, but Payne is naturally a reticent man, and his remark surprised me.

Walsh had refused to pitch until he had received a certain sign. This made me think that it was not going to be a "spitter" or a fast one, evidently the first two signals given by Payne. He can't intend to waste a ball, I reasoned, because the man is on third, and he doesn't think he is going to try to steal. Then it struck me.

"Can it be a curve?" I asked myself surprised. "But he never throws one," I argued in my mind.

Then I remembered the surprise betrayed in Payne's "You don't want this one." The remark, mumbled in his mask, had supplied the key. I took a chance. It was a curve, and I called the turn. It was the first and last one Walsh ever threw me, and probably he would have slipped it over, had it not been for Payne's poorly suppressed surprise. That cost Walsh the game. It must be remembered by the reader that all this giving of signals and reasoning took place in about a minute's time. A ball player must think fast.

Old "Cy" Young, one of the Solons of baseball, crossed me once in almost the same way with reverse English on it. It was a case of him outguessing me. The veteran Cleveland pitcher is as different from Walsh, in his style, as white is from black. "Cy" relies on a curve and a fast ball, never using a "spitter." Young had two strikes and one ball on me in a game in Cleveland. He walked out of the box and part way to the catcher to receive the ball. Easterly, catching, signed for an offering that did not coincide with "Cy's" idea of the exigencies of the situation. The old fellow shook his head twice, which immediately forced me to conclude that it would be neither a curve nor a fast one.

Oldring was on first base at the time, and I guessed that "Cy" must want to waste one, thinking he was going to try to steal. When the ball came to me about chin high, I at once concluded that my diagnosis was the correct one, and I let it go. But, when about two feet in front of me, it broke across my letters, a beautiful strike, and I had not even taken my hat off my shoulder. "Cy" had dished up a spitter from somewhere in his assortment, and I didn't even know that he could throw one. He simply outguessed me and caught me in the arms of Morpheus. He had wet the ball, while walking away from the plate with his back to me, after getting it from Easterly, thus giving no hint that he was going to throw a "spitter."

Young invented this trick and applies it occasionally to great advantage, I have learned since, catching a batter off his guard. But he depends for the most part on a curve and a high, fast ball, relying on his wonderful control to put the ball where he wants it. That "whisker" trimmer of his, which is a high, fast one in the vicinity of the neck, is a villainous ball. A pitcher of Young's type would just as soon tell the batter where he is going to try to throw the ball, because it is generally known that he is pitching at a batter's weakness.

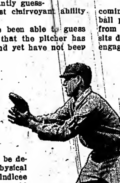
Lajoie.

So batting in the big leagues is largely a game of thought. The men who outguess the pitchers accumulate the most hits and the largest batting average. Lajoie is the only exception to this that I can recall. Of course, self-confidence is an absolute necessity to any successful hitter, but the Cleveland second baseman is more chock full of reliance in his own batting ability than any other player I know. It is not conceit, just faith in his eye. He shuffles out to the plate, almost carelessly, and bangs his bat down two or three times as if to say to the pitcher:

"Toss one up here and hurry up about it. I'm not particular."

He seldom lets the first one go past him. He gets his poise, takes a couple of short steps, wades into the ball, and bang!

"You can't get one by me," his manner appears to challenge. He is simply bulging with confidence. He is the one hitter and the only successful one I ever saw who apparently doesn't try to guess what the pitcher is going to throw and really doesn't care. Pitchers have never been able to discover any "groove" that he is concealing. He simply wades in and hits at any kind of a ball. He is one batter in a thousand.



White.

Tyrus Cobb, the Detroit star, is the exactly opposite type of hitter. He is thinking all the time he is at the bat, figuring, planning, to outguess the pitcher and the fielders, in baseball parlance "to cross" his opponents, a legitimate procedure. If he thinks that the third baseman expects a bunt, he will hit it out. He never chases a bad ball, and he makes a pitcher work to the last notch. He worries many of the men in the box by his restlessness, and because he is constantly guessing right. He has almost clairvoyant ability to outguess a pitcher.

In some games, I have been able to guess right almost every time that the pitcher has thrown the ball to me and yet have not been able to get a hit.

There is a great difference in pitchers. Some are easy to outguess, and others are as bad as a jig-saw puzzle, and I never worked out one of those in my life. I know some men who have mannerisms in the box which betray definitely the sort of a ball to be delivered. These little physical eccentricities are true indices and often cost men, who would otherwise be successful pitchers, many games. It may be the twist of the wrist in throwing a curve ball, or some motion of the foot peculiar to a "spitter" that divulges the essential secret. This tell-tale sign is fatal to a pitcher, when players get on to it, and it usually does not take his opponents long to discover and associate it with a certain kind of ball.

Chase.

Working in combination to outguess the batters, a catcher will often help a pitcher out by talking incessantly, hoping in this way to distract a hitter's attention from his business. Street of the Washington club is one of the worst talkers in the business, and is called in some strata of baseball "Gabby." From the time that a catcher throws the ball back to the pitcher until he delivers it again, a batter should never take his eyes off the pitcher.

All of the "grooves" of batters are carefully catalogued. Every hitter in baseball, with the possible exception of Lajoie and Wagner, is supposed to have what is known to the profession as a "groove," a certain real or imagined weakness. Some pitchers work to fool a batter, and others aim at his "groove." Young and Powell are of the second type, and it is this style of pitcher that I always try to make pitch to the limit, as they have to depend absolutely on their control.

The catcher is obviously included in the guessing match which always results when a batter faces a pitcher. I recall a funny instance of "Hal" Chase making Ira Thomas look like six nickels in a game last summer. Thomas formerly played on the Yankees, and, at the time, Chase's sign for the squeeze play was given by putting his right hand to his nose. Ira had seen him give this many times when they were team mates.

But on this occasion, Chase was playing on the New York club, and Thomas was catching on the Philadelphia team. It was in the eighth inning with the score tied, and a New York runner on third base, champing on his spikes to get home when Chase stepped to the bat. One was out. "Hal" went through the usual preliminaries of knocking the dirt out of his spikes, fixing his hat the firmer, as if he expected to take a long run and didn't want to be called back to get the cap, and spitting on his hands. Then he put the first digit of his right hand to the side of his nose.

"What are you going to do, Hal," asked Ira, "frame up something here?"

Thomas did not expect to find out anything by the question, but wanted to drag Chase into conversation to get his mind off his work.

"Sure I am," replied Chase, and he repeated the old sign very deliberately.

"What," exclaimed Ira, "you're not giving me that sign, thinking I'm not jerry to it?"

"That's right, Ira," answered Chase carelessly. "I had forgotten you knew, but it goes anyway."

This conversation was carried on while Plank was pawing around in the box and preparing to pitch. As the tall southpaw wound up, Daniels started in from third base. Plank delivered a perfect strike, and Chase half bunted and half hit the ball, which allowed Daniels to score. "Hal" had beaten Thomas at his own game. He had given a sign that Thomas knew, and which the latter did not for a moment think had been passed out seriously. Therefore Ira did not signal for a pitchout as he would have done if he had guessed the play was coming. Thus Chase double-crossed Ira. A ball player is trying to outguess the pitcher from the time he leaves the bench until he sits down again. He doesn't terminate his engagement at the plate. As soon as a batsman becomes a base runner, his object is advancement.

Every ball player knows exactly how much of a lead he can take off first base on a certain pitcher and not get caught. There are recognized standards in the big leagues. For instance, I know that I can go fifteen feet away from the bag and get safely back with "Doc" White of Chicago pitching, but if I go a step over ten feet on Walsh of the same club I will probably get nipped. I can't exactly explain what I mean, but when I once get accustomed to a pitcher's delivery, I know how far to venture.

In base running, I believe that the secret of success is the start, absolutely. Speed is a great asset, but the start is everything.

Outguessing the pitcher and catcher is a sort of instinct which some players have and others never attain. A man seems to do it by intuition and often cannot tell just what concrete hypothesis leads him to reach a certain conclusion. But believe me, it is a great art for a ball player to have, a great art, and one to be cultivated.

IS DESCENDANT OF ROYALTY

Beautiful New York Girl Who Belongs to the Extinct Dynasty of Hawaii.

New York.—Of the few descendants who remain of the royal house of Hawaii there are at least two who are residents of this country. These are Miss Anna Douglass Graham, of New York, and her mother, who is the wife of the famous Dutch painter, Hubert Vos. Mrs. Vos before her first marriage to Mr. Graham was the Princess Kaikilani. Miss Graham is one of the most beautiful young ladies in the metropolis and was one of the six bridesmaids of Vivien Gould at her recent marriage to Lord Decies. It is now reported that she is to become the bride of Jay Gould, the youngest son of George Gould.

The former Queen of Hawaii, Liliuokalani, whose name is rarely mentioned now in the newspapers, is living at Honolulu, where she still keeps a little court. For years she made periodical visits to Washington to press her claims against the government for the value of the old crown lands which formerly were invested in her and which now form the public domain. But Washington would not be convinced that she had any rights in this particular and apparently she has given up the fight and will probably never again leave her island home.

The native Hawaiians are still deeply attached to their former queen. On her birthday all Hawaii flocks to the ex-Queen's home in Washington place and pays court to her in that pretty home in the old, old way, with the aliis, or nobles, wearing the ahuulas about their shoulders and the kahilis standing solemnly in the corner in token of royal dignity.

Liliuokalani was dethroned in the revolution of 1893, when a provisional government was declared, with Sanford B. Dole at its president. Annexation to the United States was then sought, but upon the refusal of President Cleveland to sanction it the republic of Hawaii was proclaimed an independent state in 1894. In 1898 during the administration of President McKinley Hawaii was annexed to the United States.

HOUSE BUILT IN A TREE TOP

Two Ravenswood, Ill., Boys Construct a Comfortable Domicile in a Big Willow.

Ravenswood, Ill.—A tree house "that's different" is now being built in this Chicago suburb, by two boys, Robert Broadhent and Charlie Brandus. In the first place it takes two big willow trees to hold up this house and it is substantially stayed by a third.

Then there is more pretention about this house than most tree structures, for it has an L, there are to be two rooms, and on top there will be a roof garden. Ever hear of a roof garden on top of a tree house?

The house will be illuminated by electricity and it will be substantially furnished for both summer and winter use. The squirrels as a rule make use of tree houses in Chicago in winter, but Mr. Fluffy Tail, his gray coated wife and his family will have to keep out of this one, for it's going to be occupied even when the wind blows cold, and snows cover the garden overhead to the depth of a foot or more.

Gets $125,000 Pipe Organ.

New York.—A $125,000 pipe organ, the largest and finest chamber organ in the world, has been installed in the $10,000,000 Fifth avenue residence of ex-Senator W. A. Clark of Montana. It occupies one end of the senator's main picture gallery. The organ was built in Los Angeles and contains 4,600 pipes. Its owner has has engaged as his organist Arthur Scott Brook, who was organist of the giant organ at the Chicago world's fair.

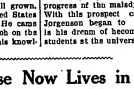
HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

State to Aid Man Maimed in Service

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.—Out of his misfortune good fortune has at last come to Herbert Jorgenson, formerly employed at the dairy in the agricultural department of Illinois university. Because he contracted a tubercular affection while working for the state, the state legislature has appropriated $5,000 for his care.

There is every probability that the disease will be completely eradicated, and, although the man will be partly disabled for life, he will be cared for in comfort, which he realizes his dearest ambition—to be a student in the state university.

In 1901, when scarcely full grown, Jorgenson came to the United States from his native Denmark. He came to Illinois and finally got a job on the state farm here because of his knowledge of dairying methods.



At that time university professors were experimenting upon the danger of transmission of tuberculosis from cattle to human beings. Tests were being made and cows were inoculated with the deadly germs. The Dane took a great interest in these experiments, but he developed a horror of tuberculosis.

One day five years ago he cut a wart off his right hand. Before the scratch had healed he was giving a treatment to a calf. A short while later the hand became inflamed. The disease spread up into the arm and shoulder and along the right side.

The surgeons at the university gave him the best possible treatment. In cutting away diseased portions they were compelled to remove lymphatic glands, and his right side began to dwindle.

For years he has been an invalid, constantly expecting death. Then the progress of the malady was checked. With this prospect came hope and Jorgenson began to indulge again in his favorite pastime, becoming one of the students at the university.

Kansas Recluse Now Lives in Luxury

GREAT BEND, KAN.—When "Uncle Jimmie" Cox, a little weasened Irishman, who lived up in the Gallila neighborhood in the northwest part of the county, came to Great Bend the other day and purchased a ticket for a little town in Ohio, Barton county lost one of its quaintest characters. For 35 years he had lived by himself on the "claim" he homesteaded in 1876. In all that time he never took a meal off his farm. The inside of his house was never seen by more than one man.

The house stood desolate, without a tree or shrub of any sort around it and the door was always locked. Visitors always met "Jimmie" in the yard, and, though Jimmie was garrulous and liked company outside his house he never invited anybody inside.

Although he raised fairly good crops it was always somewhat of a mystery as to how he got them planted or tended. It was seldom that any of his neighbors saw him in the field. When anybody called Jimmie would walk out of the back door of the house (the only one he ever used) look it carefully behind him and meet the visitor in the yard. Only one man, living in this country is known to have entered the place—J. M. Colver, formerly employed in the office as register of deeds, who went to the place on legal business.

"Uncle Jimmie" came to America from Ireland when he was twelve years old. In 1876 he came to Barton county and took up a homestead and timber claim. He proved up on both of these and owned them until recently. He had many friends throughout the neighborhood, and his life as a recluse did not make him an unsociable man. He has sold his farm, saying he has more money now than he can use during the balance of his life and has decided to retire.

Find Gotham Horse 4,000 Years Old

NEW YORK.—The skull of a hipparion gracile, a fossil horse somewhat smaller than the Asiatic ass, which lived in the pliocene period, 4,000 years ago, and which geologists say was the ancestor of the modern horse, was unearthed at Park and Duane streets by workmen excavating for the new Brooklyn-New York subway loop. The bones were found at sea level, 22 feet down, and were buried in a stratum of solidified black swamp mud. The discovery is regarded as unusual, since never before has the skeleton of an entire member of the horse family been found so far north as this state.

Father L. J. Rivers, pastor of St. Andrew's church, who formerly was an instructor in zoology and geology in Notre Dame university, in Indiana, identified the bones, fitted them together and proved they belonged to the framework of a hipperion which roamed Manhattan island long before the day of man.

When the skull had been fitted together it was seen that the animal had two full sets of teeth. One set was at the mouth opening, made up of sharp incisors, which the modern horse does not have, and the other set was farther back in the mouth, consisting of more than twenty-two big, flat molars in each jaw. In the front set there are about nine teeth to each jaw, upper and lower. Between the two sets is an open space in the mouth, about five inches long. The skull, from lips to crown, measures 23 inches, whereas the average length of the skull of a full grown member of the breed is longer. The teeth and body framework of the skull were almost perfectly preserved.

Office Primping Plan Is a Big Asset

CHICAGO.—"Primping," a feature established by the corporation counsel's office for the benefit of its girl employes, promises to spread to many other offices and institutions throughout the country. Requests for information on the success of the idea are being received daily by A. J. Callaghan, chief clerk. To all Mr. Callaghan replies that it is the greatest thing he ever saw to make girls pleased with their work and to increase their proficiency.

"We thought it a good plan to give the girls 15 minutes in the morning and in the afternoon to rearrange their hair," said the chief clerk.

"The idea was suggested by the fact that girls stop now and then during their work to adjust their hair or look at their nails or other points of neatness. They use up that much time anyway so why not make it a regular custom.

"We had no idea the matter would attract so much attention. It became the object of inquiry just as soon as it got into the newspapers and ever since we have been besieged with questions from firms and corporations interested in the proposition."

"Our girls are all normal and not different from other girls," said Miss Katherine Ryan, who is in charge of the stenographers. "We never discuss the merits or demerits of the plan. We always aim to look neat and, if it requires time to primp a little, why, we take it like any other woman would."

Efforts of fellow employes and other more men to treat the movement in a spirit of levity have been promptly rebuked. The girls are credited with being the happiest and most efficient of any similar number of employes in the city since a progressive system has given them time to put the finishing touches on.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

WOULD CURB SILENT ORATORS

Representative Mann, the minority leader of the house, is on the trail of those who obtain "leave to print" their remarks in the Congressional Record and who then intersperse these remarks with "applause," "loud applause," "tumultuous applause," and other complimentary annotations indicating that the house was in a state of rapture while "the distinguished gentleman" was speaking.

Representative Mann has been gleaning over the records containing the debate on the Free List Bill and the Arizona-New Mexico statehood resolution. He is understood to have picked out one oratorical gem, in particular, that has been made the subject of a little satirical comment on the part of the minority leader. This speech seems to have met a most wonderful reception.

The orator, according to the Record, started off smoothly, but was interrupted by the plaudits of his colleagues almost before he left the post. As the member warmed up, the house warmed with him, and objectives had to be called into play to describe that where the reception received by the gentlemen. The applause, it appears, was "loud," "prolonged," "insistent," "tumultuous," "on both sides" and "inaugural."

A scrutiny of the official reporter's notes does not indicate that the house was in a state of frenzied approval while the modern Demosthenes let flow his burning eloquence.

CHURCH HEAD AS A WITNESS

Recently President Smith, head of the Mormon church, gave testimony before the congressional committee investigating the sugar trust relative to the formation of the Utah-Idaho Sugar company. For the head of a strong church society, he has found time to devote to affairs of purely secular character.

President Smith has reached his present high stage of efficiency by sedulous attention to business. At 8 years old he walked a good, level road on a farm when this great exodus of the Mormon sect from Illinois began. He worked at manual labor in Utah; he was a missionary to the Sandwich Islands; in 1858 he was ordained high priest and member of the high council. Off and on from 1860 to 1877 he was a missionary of the faith in Great Britain. In 1866 he was ordained an apostle. He has been president of the church since the death of Lorenzo Snow, in 1901.

The numerous and varied duties he had discharged before he was called to the headship of the church had rendered him familiar with every detail of its administration. Besides, he came to the headship by prescriptive right. He was the Mormon royal line, so to speak. He was a nephew of the great Joseph Smith, revealer of the Book of Mormon.

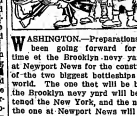
CONSUL ACCUSED IN SCANDAL

William H. Michael, United States consul at Calcutta, whose dismissal as a result of the recent investigation of the Dy portrait voucher was recommended in a report of the subcommittee of the house committee on expenditures, was formerly chief clerk of the state department.

The alleged misappropriation of the state department funds occurred in connection with the purchase of a portrait of Assistant Justice Day of the supreme court, former secretary of state, and amounted to $1,500. Only $850 was paid to Albert Rosenthal, the artist who painted the picture. The committee during its investigations traced to a single voucher the sum of $2,450. On this voucher, was written "for portrait and frame of ex-Secretary Day."

The testimony having showed that the $1,600 unaccounted for was in the hands of Morrison as disbursing clerk and of Michael as chief clerk, the committee holds that the money was misappropriated either by Michael or Morrison jointly, or by Michael alone.

EX-SENATOR 83 YEARS OLD



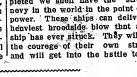
Recently George Franklin Edmunds, one of the famous constitutional lawyers of the United States and for a quarter of a century a leader in the senate, until his retirement in 1891, celebrated the 83d anniversary of his birth. Although a Vermonter during the active days of his public life, he now divides his time between Philadelphia and Pasadena, Cal.

Fifty-seven years ago Mr. Edmunds entered the Vermont legislature and after a service extending until 1883 resigned to resume the practice of law. In 1866 he was elected to the United States senate, serving continuously until 1891. His name will best be remembered by the Edmunds act, which provided for the suppression of polygamy in Utah and the disfranchisement of those practicing it. He was also the author of an anti-trust law and was the head of the committee on judiciary.

He was one of those who drafted the bill creating the electoral commission of 1877 and was a member of that body. Twice he homed up largely as a presidential candidate and in 1880 and 1884 his name was presented to the Republican national conventions.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

United States to Have Biggest Ships



WASHINGTON.—Preparations have been going forward for some time at the Brooklyn navy yard and at Newport News for the construction of the two biggest battleships in the world. The one that will be built at the Brooklyn navy yard will be christened the New York, and the name of the one at Newport News will be the Texas. These ships each will have a displacement of about 28,000 tons and will be equipped with 14-inch guns. They are the greatest terrors that any country ever has planned as yet. They are super-Dreadnoughts, mighty engines of war upon which, perhaps, the destiny of the nation may some day turn. The construction of these two huge battleships was authorized at the regular session of congress last year. They will cost about $11,000,000 each by the time they are ready for service.

The new ships, the New York and the Texas, will be nearly 600 feet long. Their speed will be more than 21 knots, they will carry at least 2,000 tons of coal and have a complement of 75 officers and 1,500 men. No armor that is carried by any warship in the world would be able to withstand the impact of one of these projectiles.

A mile and a half away a 14-inch shell would go through 18 inches of the hardest armor plate ever made, and do it as much as an ordinary bullet would pass through a piece of blotting paper. The ten 14-inch guns on either the New York or the Texas will deliver 80 shells in five minutes, or 112,000 pounds of projectiles. A 14-inch gun leaves the muzzle of the gun at the rate of a mile in two seconds and will travel 25 miles.

When these two new ships are completed we shall have the strongest navy in the world in the point of gun power. These ships can deliver the heaviest broadside blow that a warship has ever struck. They will have the courage of their strength, and will get into the battle to stay,

Uncle Sam Planning to Make Millions

WITH the beginning of the present century Uncle Sam had an awakening, and he began to assume the position of a father to his American children. Already he has become a great creative force, working for the betterment and protection of all the people. He is a real patriarch, devoting himself to the personal welfare of each of his subjects and developing the family estate for all it is worth.

These new movements are along a hundred different lines, and they embrace every part of our country. They affect every branch of business, every grade of society, and every man, woman and child. The plans involve an expenditure of hundreds of millions, and will add billions of dollars to our national wealth. There is also idea of making golden crops spring up on the soil of our waste lands, one feature of which was the building of the Roosevelt dam, recently completed. Uncle Sam has $80,000,000 in hand to water the deserts, and his reclamation fund for our arid lands is fast approximating a hundred millions or more. He is tunneling the mountains, damming the streams and carrying the water in flumes over the canyons. He has more than 2,500 miles of canals already dug.

Another big scheme is draining the swamps. We have millions of acres of wet lands that can be turned into farms.

A part of this same scheme is the development of our rivers. We have 295 of them in the United States, with navigable waters long enough to encircle the globe. The Great Lakes are the busiest freight routes upon earth, and boats can go on the Mississippi for 2,000 miles. Already we have built 4,000 miles of canals, and we have schemes which propose the joining of the Great Lakes with the Mississippi, and also with the sea.

Washington to Be a "City Beautiful"

THE question of park improvement in Washington is by no means local. The capital will eventually become the most beautiful of cities. It now has more trees planted in its streets than Paris boasts. It will never have the grime of either Paris or London. It has park possibilities unsurpassed by those of any city in the world. With wood and water, hill and valley, its reservations now existing and its areas that should be reserved, and may be reserved at cost much below their future value, its system of minor and major parks, bridle paths and boulevards, leaves nothing to be desired but a little comparatively economical legislation to link some of its units.

The "City of Magnificent Distances" now already becomes a realized dream, it is, indeed, something of a boom town, and its real estate dealers are driving states and hamlets out in the woods for beyond the boundaries Washington knew a dozen years ago.

Washington is growing in importance as a city of handsome homes. Even its Faubourg St. Germain, Georgetown, admits that the city proper has acquired a society of its own that is not made up wholly of public magnates and department clerks. The former gaps in its street plans are now worth a dollar a sum per front foot, and Pierre L'Enfant's estimate of the Washington of the future has been proven none too liberal.

Going After Crooked Seed Companies

FOLLOWING the instructions of congress in the agricultural appropriation bill, the secretary of agriculture this year continued the purchase of seed in the open market to determine whether or not much adulteration was practiced by seed dealers. These samples were analyzed and the names of the offending seed men have been published.

The leaflet with the names of the dealers from whom adulterated samples were purchased shows that when a dealer has once been published it is seldom that he is again caught in the list. When the department has been analyzing a certain line of seed the adulteration in this also stops. In new lines of seed, however, there are more offenders caught.

Some of the samples analyzed this year showed the merest trace of seed. The general showing was better, however, than in previous years.

There were 1,214 samples of seed purchased, some of them in bulk and some by mail order. Of these 204 were found to be adulterated. There was some improvement in the line of orchard grass seed examined. There were 317 samples analyzed and of these twelve were found adulterated, compared with fifty-five adulterated samples the previous year. In the worst samples found there was 27 per cent. of orchard grass seed and 27 per cent. of dirt and chaff, while the remainder was made up of rye grass, meadow fescue and other seed.

MUSHROOMS AS FOOD.

Professor F. E. Clements, the state botanist of Minnesota, has attracted attention by his estimate in a recent bulletin that the annual waste of mushrooms in the United States equals in value the entire agricultural product of the country, says the Manchester Union. It is easy for an enthusiast in any line of thought or endeavor to lose the sense of just proportion, and it may perhaps be taken for granted that Professor Clements has permitted himself to be carried away by the contemplation of the waste of a natural food product which is more or less abundant everywhere and which has an unquestioned food value. Beginning with early summer and continuing until late fall, the production of mushrooms in woods, pastures and waste places is something enormous, and a large proportion of them are not only edible, but unrelishing. In so far as they are not made use of—and a small proportion of them is ever gathered—they of course, represent a loss of possible food supply, but some account must be taken of the cost of collecting and distributing them to consumers, as well as of the danger from some species which are harmful and of at least two which may be classed as deadly. These are easily distinguished, to be sure, by any one who has made a study of the mushroom tribe, but until Americans, as a rule, are much more familiar with the subject than at present, a great proportion of the edible varieties will continue to go to waste.

Basing calculations on the estimate that the number of American tourists in Europe in a season is 250,000 and that the average individual expenditure by these tourists is $750, some one has easily figured that about $225,000,000 of American money is spent abroad in the course of a season; and this does not include the cost of steamship tickets. Bankers who handle the letters of credit for wealthy American tourists are quoted to the effect that $2,000 is a fair average for the value of these letters, says the Manchester Union. Among tourists of the wealthy class, says the report, it is common to place from $20,000 to $50,000 in the hands of the bankers, and, as a rule, fully two-thirds of this amount is drawn. Possibly the major portion of this sum properly credited has been overdrawn; possibly the minor promises; possibly both—and possibly neither. In any event, it must be admitted that $225,000,000 is a tremendous sum of American money to be taken to Europe and left there in a single season.

An appeal for American-made rubber tires is made by the United States consuls in Germany, who say that in rich market is being overlooked by the people at home. These advance agents of trade point out that in some of the cities on the high road of tourist travel there are for sale but two makes of automobile tires, and those of French and German brands. The use of the bicycle as a means of transportation is reported on the increase, and, as if to add to the field for exploitation, many of the smaller cities are just beginning to awake to the advantage of rubber tires as a part of the fitting of general vehicles.

An ungallant New Jersey farmer dressed up his scarecrows in bobbin skirts and basket hats, and declares that the crows are too punic-stricken by the fashionable frights to come near his fields. Many men will think more of the intelligence of birds after this display of the crows' antipathy to bobbin skirts.

A Chicago teamster has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary for stabbing a horse to death because the animal would not stand quietly beside a hitching post. No doubt he deserved what he got, but if he had merely killed a man he might be out on small bail.

BURNING FORESTS TRAP HUNDREDS OF MINERS IN NORTH ONTARIO DISTRICTS.

WHOLE TOWNS WIPED OUT

Flames Fought Back in Michigan as Relief is Provided Au Sable and Oscoda Survivors—Village of Waters in Peril.

Toronto, Ont.—Several hundred lives and millions of dollars' worth of property have been wiped out as the result of the forest fires raging in the Porcupine district in northern Ontario.

Only three of the eighty-four employes of the West Dome mine have been accounted for and 200 miners, muckers and other workers in the Dome mine have been suffocated.

Among the dead are Robert Weles, manager of the West Dome mine, and his wife and child.

The Philadelphia mine's loss is about $50,000; the United Porcupine's, $20,000; the Standard's, about $40,000; the Imperial's, about $25,000, and the West mine's about $75,000. All the buildings of the Eldorado, Porcupine and the Success were destroyed.

All reports give but a vague idea of the loss of life and property in Porcupine camp, which probably will total hundreds of lives and millions of dollars.

In just four hours the fire swept from the Standard mines through to the shores of Porcupine lake, where it ate up the towns of South Porcupine and Pottsville and part of Golden City, as well as many small buildings along the lake front.

While some loss of life occurred in the vicinity of Porcupine lake, the greatest havoc was wrought around the principal mines, notably West Dome and Big Dome.

There the entrapped miners, cut off from escape, were forced to take to the shafts for safety, and, penned in by flames, perished.

The streets of South Porcupine are strewn with dead persons, horses, dogs and cattle. Along the mine roads are the charred bodies of those overcome while trying to escape.

Of the staff of 300 at the Dome, but a few are saved, and at the West Dome but three out of eight-four employes are known to be alive. Along the highway between West Dome and South Porcupine, over a considerable open section, were found six charred bodies.

Many miners lost their lives in efforts to save others, and some were drowned.

Detroit.—With food at their disposal and tents provided for their shelter, the thousand or more homeless survivors of the fire-swept villages of Ausable and Oscoda are today breathing easier than at any time since the flames destroyed their homes Tuesday.

The known dead remain three in number, with Samuel Rosenthal, a tailor, the only one yet identified.

The village of Waters, 107 miles north of Bay City on the Michigan Central, is reported to be burning, together with the Stephenson Lumber company's mill and lumber yards, valued at about $400,000. The village has about 700 permanent residents and a large floating population of lumber jacks.

It is believed loss of life will result from the outbreak of the flames about Waters, as there are many lumbermen in the woods. Reports come from camps near by that the men fled for their lives and little is known of what became of many of them.

THREE LOSE LIVES

STEAMER JOHN MITCHELL SINKS IN SUPERIOR AFTER CRASH.

Is Hit by the W. H. Mack—Boats Come Together During Dense Fog.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.—Three lives were lost and thirty-one persons, including six women and a little boy, experienced a thrilling midnight rescue, when the steamer John Mitchell of the Elphicke fleet of Chicago went to the bottom of Lake Superior in collision with the steamer William H. Mack of the Jenkins Steamship company, Cleveland, in a heavy fog off Vermillion point.

While the two vessels were steaming through a dense fog off Vermillion point, which is about sixty miles northwest of the Soo passage, they crashed without a moment's warning. The Mitchell began to sink immediately, and soon the lake, which was rolling heavily, was strewn with wreckage. The Mack, however, succeeded in lowering its life boat and in rescuing seven of the passengers from drowning in the water, with the exception of three of the crew of the Mitchell, who were drowned.

The dead:

Archie Cousely, Detroit; second mate of the Mitchell.

Al Clemans, steward of the Mitchell, Rochester, Ind.

George Austin, watchman of the Mitchell, Cleveland, O.

Mrs Clemens of Rochester, Ind., wife of the steward of the Mitchell suffered a broken leg in the crash.

Shortly after the captains of the two vessels had ordered the life boats and rafts lowered, the Mitchell plunged to the bottom. The damage to the Mack was not so great, but it filled rapidly. Those aboard the latter vessel were safely landed on the million point. Steamers were sent to the rescue of the survivors from Sault Ste. Marie.

INDICT LEWIS FOR FRAUD

Former Publisher of St. Louis Accused of Illegally Using U. S. Mails in Debenture Scheme.

St. Louis.—E. G. Lewis, until recently publisher of a number of magazines and promoter of large enterprises, was indicted by a special grand jury in the United States district court on charges of fraudulent use of the mails.

The indictment, containing twelve counts, covers four propositions laid before the public by Lewis, which he is alleged to have obtained several million dollars by misleading statements circulated through the mails.

It is charged that through misrepresentations with intent to defraud Lewis sold unsecured notes of the Woman's Magazine building and the Women's National Daily building in University City, of which Lewis is mayor, sold unsecured notes of the University Heights Realty and Development company, operated a "debenture scheme" and misrepresented the condition of the Lewis Publishing company in selling stock in that concern.

TELLS OF JACKPOTS

GOVERNOR DENEEN IS WITNESS IN LORIMER CASE AT WASHINGTON.

GIVES OUT LIST OF DONORS

Illinois Executive on Stand Names Alleged List of Contributors to Legislative Fund—Refutes Hines' Testimony About Telephone Talk.

Washington.—Gov. Charles S. Deneen of Illinois, who appeared before the senate Lorimer committee as a witness, told how "jack-pots" had flourished in the state since 1897, and gave out a purported list of corporation contributors to the funds.

He also told how he had suggested to Senator Lorimer that he (Lorimer) become a candidate when the latter wanted to elect Stanford senator. A mild sensation was caused when the governor pulled from his pocket the notes of a speech delivered at Taylorville, August, 1910, which he said contained the former speaker with being responsible for the "jack-pot."

"The 'jack-pot' fund has been to extortionate since 1897," said Governor Deneen. He sketched how the legislature is organized, the committees named and how things dragged slowly until the rush of the final few days when everything went through or was killed in a rush.

"The 'regulator' bills are disposed of then," he said. "Some are killed outright. Others are sent again to committees on the theory that they cannot stand an extended coroner's investigation. The theory that the money is paid, accumulates in the hands of several men and finally distributed."

"Who contributes?" asked Senator Jones.

"I don't know."

"Have you ever heard?"

"Oh, yes; the railroads to protect themselves, the gas companies of Chicago, the electric light companies, the liquor interests, the Union Stock yards company, the grain elevator companies, the Pullman company and possibly others."

Governor Deneen told of a meeting of railroad presidents he had been asked to attend in Chicago during the Forty-sixth general assembly. He mentioned Messrs. Hersben, Darling, Miller, Hughitt, Winchell and Felton as being there.

"They said the demands of the legislature meant confiscation," he asserted. "They declared the governor was not sufficiently friendly that they could not set aside money in that way. I told them to come to Springfield and protest. They came, 1,000 strong, and defeated the legislation."

Governor Deneen denied the charge made by former Governor Yates that he had "double-crossed" him. He said that he had not promised Yates he would support him for United States senator.

Concerning the famous Hines-Deneen long-distance telephone conversation, the morning of Lorimer's election, Governor Deneen said:

"Mr. Hines called me up and asked me if I had received a message from President Taft in support Lorimer. I said I had not received it. Hines said his train was late, and he had promised Lorimer that he would have come down to Springfield.

"I said, 'that's rather a remarkable message for Taft to send.' Later Mr. Hines said that President Taft was to send the message through Senator Aldrich and George Reynolds, when the Continental Commercial National bank was to call me up and tell me about it.

Governor Deneen said he never heard from President Taft, and that Hines he would support Lorimer, and there was no discussion about recognizing Lorimer's voice, as Hines had previously testified.

"I doubted if it was Hines. I just accepted it as one of those anonymous communications."

The governor said that he did not know Senator Aldrich, and had had no communication from him. He said there was no talk of money in the conversation with Hines.

12 KILLED IN WRECK

TRAIN ON NEW HAVEN ROAD FALLS OVER EMBANKMENT.

Fire Starts in Wreckage, but is Controlled—St. Louis Ball Team Escapes Injury.

Bridgeport, Conn.—Twelve persons were killed and 44 badly injured in the wreck of the Federal express, one of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad's fastest trains, carrying passengers without change from Washington to Boston. The engine plunged down a 20-foot embankment while running 60 miles an hour.

Fire started in the wreckage, but the Bridgeport department put this out and the men helped in rescuing the injured persons.

The engineer took a "crossover" switch at a speed of 60 miles an hour, violating a rule limiting the rate to 15 miles. He died at his post.

Of 100 passengers that went down with the first six cars only four escaped death or injury. Twelve bodies were taken out of the twisted wreckage and four injured are in the hospital at the end a score more received injuries not severe enough to prevent them from continuing their journey.

The passengers on the train included the members of the St. Louis National league ball team, who were wars on their way to Boston for a series of games. The ball players were in the last Pullmen car and escaped injury.

Without waiting to dress completely the players hurried from the car, descended the viaduct and davoted two hours to helping relived men, policemen and surgeons at their work in the wreckage.

A new "cross-over" installed on the Burr road viaduct end embankment on the western outskirts of Bridgeport was indirectly responsible for the accident The train was late and the engineer was driving to make up lost time. When the heavy west-bound train of nine cars struck the switch at full speed the locomotive leaped, rocked and swayed over the ties for nearly 150 yards, and then fell to the street below, dragging six cars down the bank. The coupling broke between the sixth eud seventh cars and three sleepers upright on the embankment.

GRAIN MAN SHOT MILLION

F. H. Peavey Company Officials Declare Dead President Did Not Personally Profit.

St. Paul, Minn.—James Pettit, president and general manager of the Peevey Grain company of Chicago whose death occurred by drowning at Chicago on July 5, was short approximately $1,000,000, according to a statement issued from the offices of F. H. Peavey & Co., the parent of a dozen subsidiaries, which is the owner of the stock of the Peavey Grain company.

The statement was issued from the Minneapolis office after a conference with representatives of the Minneapolis and Chicago banks and commercial paper houses of Coffin & Burr, which floated by Mr. Pettit in the name of the Peavey Grain company. The statement says in part:

"On Saturday afternoon, July 8, following the death of James Pettit, a representative of F. H. Peavey & Co., who had been sent to Chicago, to assist to the office of the Peavey Grain company for the month of July, discovered that certain unauthorized and concealed speculations had been going on by the business, which subsequent investigation proved will result in a shortage of approximately $1,000,000.

"Mr. Pettit has apparently in no way profited by these speculations, and they were carried on absolutely contrary to the instructions and without knowledge of F. H. Peavey & Co., and in direct violation of the well known policy of the Peavey company."

ST. LOUIS IV. WINS AIR RACE

Balloon Lands at La Psa. Ind., 525 Miles From Kansas City—Million Population Second.

Chicago.—Two worn and tired St. Louis balloonists—Lieut. Frank P. Lahm and Lieut. J. P. Hart, pilot and co-respectively—the crew of the Ivy bog, the St. Louis IV., dropped in—not literally—on Chicago, and told of thrilling experiences. Their craft landed at La Psa. Ind., near South Bend, and declared to be one of the winners of the James Gordon Bennett cup elimination flight that started Monday from Kansas City. The balloon represented the aeronautic corps of the Missouri National Guard.

According to a dispatch from Kansas City, the St. Louis IV. won the race with an estimated distance of 525 miles, with the Million Population club balloon second, with 485 miles. The Miss Sofia, which lend at near Chicago, is declared to be third.

50,000 NEEDED TO HARVEST WESTERN CANADA'S CROP

Will Take 160,000 Altogether to Take Care of Yield of Prairie Provinces.

One hundred and sixty-two thousand farm hands will be required this year to harvest the grain crops of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Of this number tha local help will provide about 112,000, which will leave about 50,000 extra farm hands, there is, therefore, a great demand for this class of laborers in all parts of Western Canada. In order to meet the requirements it has been arranged to grant very low railway rates from all boundary points reached by Canadian railways. In order to secura these rates it will be necessary for you to call on one of the following authorized agents of the Canadian government: M. V. McInnes, 176 Jefferson Avenue, Detroit, Michigan; C. A. Lanrier, Marquette, Michigan; J. S. Crawford, Syracuse, N. Y.; Thos. Hetherington, Room 202, 73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.; H. M. Williams, 413 Gardner Bldg., Toledo, Ohio; Geo. Aird, 216 Traction Terminal Building, Indianapolis, Indiana; C. J. Broughton, Room 412 Merchants' Loan & Trust Bldg., Chicago, Ill.; Geo. A. Hall, 2nd Floor, 125 Second Street, Milwaukee, Wis.; E. T. Holmes, 315 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.; Chas. Pilling, Pilling Block, Grand Forks, N. D.; J. M. MacLachlan, Box 197, Watertown, S. D.; W. V. Bennett, Room 4, Bee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.; W. H. Rogers, 125 West 9th Street, Kansas City, Mo.; Benj. Davies, Room 6, Union Depot, Great Falls, Montana; J. B. Carbonneau, Jr., 217 Main Street, Biddeford, Me.; F. W. Grieve, Antifonte Building, Spokane, Wash.

This will give to intending harvest laborers a splendid opportunity to look over the magnificent wheat fields of Western Canada, and will give them the best evidence that can be secured of the splendid character of that country from the farmer's standpoint. There will be at least 200,000,000 bushels of wheat harvested within the area of the three provinces above named this year and it is expected that the yield will run from 15 to 25 bushels per acre. Many farmers, this year, will net, as a result of their labors, as much as $8 to $10 per acre and many of them will expend on profits as much as $8,000 to $10,000.

The wide publicity that has been given to the excellent crop that is being raised in central Alberta and southern Alberta, central Saskatchewan and southern Saskatchewan, and also in Manitoba, will increase the price of lands to these three provinces from $3 to $5 per acre, and the man who was fortunate enough to secure lands at from $12 to $20 per acre will have reason for gratification that he exercised sufficient forethought in harvest, while the man who was fortunate enough to secure a homestead of 160 acres free will also have a greater reason to feel pleased.

Notwithstanding the great addition to the acreage this year over lost and a larger crop than will be ready for harvest there is no reason to become alarmed that the harvest will not be reaped/cared/ and threshed and be a great demand for these low rates during the next couple of months; he advises to make your application to any of the agents above mentioned that may be in your territory at as early a date as possible. Harvesting will commence about the 25th of July and continue for five or six weeks, when threshing with high wages will be plenty of work until November.

PROLOGUE

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY BEFORE.

The Storm Within.

The storm was one of the worst that had ever burst from the mountains and swept across the plains. The wind came in wild bursts of tremendous speed. Even in the lulls, which were only comparatively such, it blew perhaps 20 miles an hour. The fierce blasts were laden with fine snow—frozen spindrift from a white ocean of cold! Needles of ice sharper than their prototypes of steel cut the bare flesh of those whom evil fortune kept abroad on such a night, bringing the blood to the freezing skin. The onslaught of the screaming tempest drove the hapless cattle mad with pain and terror. The thick snow compelled them to huddle together at last, and shelterless to suffer, freeze, and die in the pitiless hurricane.

Just where the foothills lose themselves in the prairie lay huddled a little town or camp. Every door and window was shut and barricaded against the searching storm.

In one of the poorest and most miserable shanties on the outskirts of the town a woman waited alone. A common kerosene lamp stood on a table before the window, set there as if in signal.

The house, a mere shack which shook and quivered under the tremendous assaults of the storm, and might have been blown down if it had not been buttressed and protected by heaps of snow yet threatening to overwhelm it, contained but one room. In the corner farthest from the door stood a tumbled, frowzy bed. A rickety chest of drawers, a kitchen table, a rusty cook stove, a few uncertain chairs of the plainest and cheapest quality, were all the rest of the furniture. A few clothes hung from pegs driven in the boarded wall. A saddle in one corner, a pickax and shovel, a heavy quirt, and a rifle hanging from pegs beneath a shelf sufficiently pointed out the avocations of the owner.

Yet she was a woman who, whatever her outward circumstances, showed no poverty of spirit. She raged up and down the room as a prisoned tiger paces the narrow confines of his cage. Sometimes she paused and stopped by the window, to rest her head beneath her hand on the sash and peer eagerly, passionately, out into the falling snow. She could see nothing, and after having stared with increased disappointment and further mutterings of angry words, she would resume her restless backward and forward march.

Had there been any spectator when she assumed that picturesque position at the window, where the light, however it failed to illuminate the snow, threw her own face and person in high relief, the observer would have been surprised at the coarse and yet not unattractive beauty of her face and figure. She was full lipped and deep bosomed, tall, lithe, strong. Her cheeks were full of color, her hair black and coarsely crisp and curly. Her hands, which she clasped and unclasped nervously, were large and reddened by toil, but they were shapely nevertheless. But there was neither refinement nor goodness in her face. There were great possibilities of evil which experience could have detected. Hers had been a hard life, and it had made her a hard woman. She was perhaps twenty-five years old, but looked older.

For hours the woman had waited in that hut alone. It had been storming badly when she began her vigil, and the violence of the tempest had increased until she feared that no human soul could brave it. That she very much wanted some one to attempt it, that she very keenly, ardently, longed for that, was quite evident.

Great is the power of love. Even its counterfeit—that which passes for it in the eyes of the ignorant and inexperienced—may stir men and women to mighty deeds. This woman waited the arrival of one who fancied himself a modern Perseus about to release another bound and helpless Andromeda from a devouring monster.

Whether the man who fatuously filled that role—or the boy, rather, for he had not reached man's years or estate—would arrive before her husband, was the problem that filled the woman's mind. In view of the blizzard raging, she might have wondered whether, in case either of them sought the house, they could find it or reach it alive. If she had stopped to consider that phase of the possibilities, she would have been profoundly glad had both ventured and had both wandered on in the night until beaten down and mastered by the spirit of the storm, so that the searchers, after its violence had abated, might find them frozen to death as many another poor fellow was found frozen thereafter. For while the woman loathed and hated her drunken brute of a husband, yet she had no affection for the foolish young tenderfoot who had wandered out west to spend a summer holiday and had lingered on through the winter, fascinated by her exuberant attractiveness, and flattered by her bold and artful pursuit of him.

She had thought to amuse herself in her dreary, wretched, sordid life by his fresh, frank, open admiration. The woman's drunken husband had cared little at first; but lately, under the jibes, sneers, and innuendos of his companions, he had become fiercely jealous. Then in maudlin fury he had forbidden the boy the house, and had sworn that he would kill him on sight.

The woman thereupon swiftly made up her mind to break the thraldom of her matrimonial bond, and in the young stranger's company or by his agency to leave the country. She neither desired nor intended to be tied to the boy a half dozen years younger than she.

Once in civilization it would be easy to break away from him, she knew. Thereafter she had no fear but with her beauty, her wit, and her courage, with her utter unscrupulousness, she could make her way in the east which she had never seen. And this was the night on which they had agreed to take their departure.

Since her husband's wild outbreak of jealousy, she had seen the boy only once. In that surreptitious interview they had concocted their plans. Her husband spent the greater part of the nights, whenever he had any money, in gambling and drinking at the saloon. By a lucky chance a short time before in an all night trial with Fortune he had won something over $1,000. The bulk of it in hard cash still reposed in the chest of drawers. That, with what the boy could contribute, would provide for the expenses of the journey. She had got it out and tied it up in a little canvas bag. It lay on the table near the lamp.

Fifteen miles south the Union Pacific railroad ran across the continent. It had been her plan to ride thither and take the first train eastward, losing themselves in Chicago, and thence by whatsoever route pleased them making their way to New York. Whether her husband would pursue her or not, she could not tell. He would be without the money, since she meant to take all with her. He would hardly be able to follow her very soon. But if he did, that was a risk she must take.

Engrossed in the present, the boy thought nothing at all about the future. The woman's predicament bulked so large to his immature imagination that there was nothing else on the horizon. There was no other horizon than she, in fact. And his one desire was to get her away to free her.

And now this storm bade fair to render the whole plan impossible. Misunderstanding his temper she feared that the boy would be frightened by the blizzard. Yet there was more in the boy than she imagined; for when she had about made up her mind finally that he would not come, the door was thrown open and he staggered into the room. The woman screamed slightly and stepped toward the snow-covered, ice-incrusted figure. The young man forced the door shut, turned and faced her. He tore off his fur cap and threw it on the floor. He stretched out his icy gauntletted hands toward her. To reach the cabin he had been compelled to face the blizzard. His face was white yet bleeding. The woman shrank back from him.

"Is this my welcome?" he said in a voice manly enough in spite of his youthful aspect.

"You're so wet and so cold," said the woman. "The horses?"

"They're outside," returned the boy. "But you didn't think of venturing in this blizzard? Why, it's like hell itself, or would be if hell was cold!"

"I'd risk anything," said the woman fiercely, "to get away from him! You won't fail me now?"

"But, my God, girl!" answered the boy with that assumption of superior age which so satisfied his pride, "we'll die in this blizzard."

"No," persisted the woman. "See, the storm comes straight from the north. Our way is due south; we've only to keep it at our backs."

"All right," said the boy cheerily. He turned and stared out of the window. "You've no idea how terrible it is, though."

"I don't care."

"Get ready, then."

"I'm ready," she replied. "See!" She lifted the skirt of her dress and showed him a pair of horseman's boots with a pair of her husband's trousers tucked tightly in them. "It's a good thing he has a small foot," she sneered.

"Curse him!" said the boy. "I'd like to settle with him before we go."

"You'll settle with him enough," said the woman cynically, "when you take me away from him."

She turned and took down from one of the pegs a heavy fur overcoat. The boy assisted her to put it on. From a holster hanging on the wall she drew a small silver-mounted 32-calibered revolver.

"I'm ready," she said again.

"Let us start, then," cried the boy, stepping forward.

On the instant a whirl of wind disclosed to them that the door had suddenly opened. They turned to face a drunken, infuriated, leering figure. He had on a short, thick fur jacket, which left his hips completely uncovered. A heavy revolver had dangled in his holster. He dragged it out as he spoke and trained it on the boy.

"You Are Going on a Longer Journey Than You Planned," He Panted.

"You're going for a longer journey than you planned!" he panted thickly, as he strove to steady the weapon and cover the other.

The boy was fumbling at the fastenings of his coat. His own revolver was not get-at-able instantly, as it should have been and would have been had he been a native to the west.

"Fumble at 'em, you fool!" cried the man. "Before you get 'em open, I'll shoot you dead. I don't do it now, 'cause I want you to taste death and hell as long as possible before you go into 'em. You thought you'd make a fool out of me, did you, and you, too, you—"

He flung a frightful, mordant word at his wife which stung not less because it was in large measure undeserved, at least so far as the boy was concerned.

"I'll settle with you when I get through with him. Your time's up!" he continued, as the boy at last succeeded in reaching his weapon.

He was game, that boy, although his face under its blood was whiter than it had been when he entered the cabin, while the other man's, similarly snow wounded, was red with rage; and, though he was covered and even a drunken man could scarcely miss at such range, he nevertheless drew his own weapon. But before he could raise it there was a sudden movement back of him. The man in the doorway turned sharply.

"What!" he cried to his wife. "You would, you—"

At that instant the boy was conscious of a sudden flash of light and a sharp detonation. The room was filled with noise, a little cloud of smoke blew down on him. Standing with his own pistol butt clasped tight in his hand, he saw the man in the doorway reel. The arm that held his weapon dropped to his side. With a convulsive movement he pulled the trigger. The bullet buried itself in the floor, while the man sank down on his knees, swayed a moment, a frightful look in his eyes, and then pitched forward on his face and lay still.

"Good God!" whispered the boy turning to his companion, "you've shot him!"

He stared at the woman, who still clasped the little silver-mounted weapon she had used with such terrible effect.

"It was his life, or your life or mine," was the answer. "I did it for you," she said quickly, seeing a look of horror and repulsion spreading over the face of her companion.

"Yes—yes! I know," he replied; "but—"

"Come, we must get out of here immediately."

"Of course, of course," whispered the boy nervously, "we can't stay here now."

"Drag him into the room and shut the door!"

The lad hesitated.

"Are you afraid?" sneered the woman, making as if to do so herself.

"Certainly not," was the answer; but the boy nevertheless was afraid—afraid of death, with more fear than he had ever felt for any one living. Yet something had to be done and at once.

Forcing himself to the task at last, he stooped down, seized the man by the shoulders, turned him over on his face, and dragged him farther into the room. Then he shut the door. The two stared a moment at the prostrate figure.

"He's not dead yet," said the boy slowly.

"No; but he soon will be." The woman stooped over and unbuttoned the man's coat and waistcoat. "There!" she said, pointing to a ghastly hole. "I struck him fair in the breast. Would to God it'd been in his black heart!" she added. "Don't you see that we must go now and quick? Come, we can't delay any longer."

"I'll take the blame on myself if we're caught," said the boy. "It was my fault and you saved my life."

"That's noble of you," returned the woman indifferently; "but we won't be caught."

"Well, then, I'll save your reputation before I go," continued the other quixotically.

There were a few tattered books on the shelf. He took one down, tore out the flyleaf, drew a pencil from his pocket, scribbled on it a few words, signed it, held it to the woman to read, laid the leaf down on the body of the dying man, and then turned to the door. He opened it, and the woman followed him out into the night.

The room was very still. Except for the long, slow, faint, and fainter breathing of the man, there was not a sound within the hovel.

Death hovered over him the long night through. The morning found him still alive, yet barely breathing. He was trembling on the eternal verge later in the day when men seeking him burst into the room. They found the letter of confession still lying where it had been placed. They revived the man sufficiently by stimulants to enable him to speak a pregnant word or two before his lips closed forever.

The confession, the bullet that had killed him, the empty revolver, and the man's last words, solemnly attested by those present, were carefully preserved by the leader of them all. They might be useful some day; who knew? For the rest it was evident what had happened. The boy and the woman were gone from the camp. No search was made for them; none was possible. The blizzard had spent itself by that time; but the prairie was covered deep with drifted snow. A period of intense cold supervened. It was hardly within human possibility that the two fugitives could have got safely away. They must be buried somewhere to the southward in the vast drifts. Spring might reveal their fate, it might remain forever a secret. So far as the denizens of the country were concerned, the tragedy—one of the numberless ones of the frontier—was over. In a day or two it was forgotten.

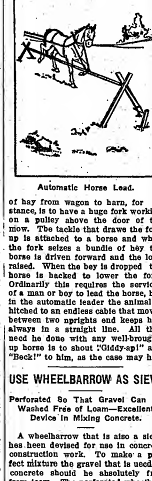
Slightly Modified.

Little Viola had developed the habit of holding her thumb in her mouth, even while eating. Mother had resorted to all sorts of methods to correct the child and finally in desperation said:

"Viola, the first thing you know you will swallow your thumb, and then what will you do?"

"Well, mother, I should hate to swallow it because I'd have a heaven of a time without it."

"Why, Viola," said the astonished mother, "where did you hear an expression like that?"



"Well, well," hesitated the little girl, "I didn't hear it exactly like that, mother, but I thought it would [illegible]"

AUTOMATIC LEAD FOR HORSE

Guides Animal in Moving Backward and Forward Alone and Does Away With Services of Boy.

A device that will lead or back a horse automatically has been invented by a Colorado man and will save the trouble and expense of having a boy to guide the animal under circumstances when it is needed. The advanced method of transferring a load of hay from wagon to barn, for instance, is to have a huge fork working on a pulley above the door of the mow. The tackle that draws the fork up is attached to a horse and when the fork seizes a bundle of hay the horse is driven forward and the load raised. When the hay is dropped the horse is backed to lower the fork. Ordinarily this requires the services of a man or boy to lead the horse, but in the automatic leader the animal is hitched to an endless cable that moves between two uprights and keeps him always in a straight line. All that need be done with any well-brought-up horse is to shout "Giddy-ap!" and "Back!" to him, as the case may be.

USE WHEELBARROW AS SIEVE

Perforated So That Gravel Can Be Washed Free of Loam—Excellent Device In Mixing Concrete.

A wheelbarrow that is also a sieve has been devised for use in concrete construction work. To make a perfect mixture the gravel that is used in concrete should be absolutely free from loam. The perforated wheelbarrow provides a means of washing this gravel with the least extra trouble. The perforations in the barrow are small enough to prevent the gravel from escaping, and the load is trundled to a hydrant equipped with a spray head. The water is turned on, and as it filters through the stones, it carries with it the dirt mingled with them. By speeding up the gravel during this washing process the water gets a chance to permeate through the entire load and purify it. The gravel is then wheeled to the concrete mixer and dumped in, with the assurance that it is free of any matter that will spoil the building material.

Alfalfa Cuttings Necessary.

A remarkable thing about alfalfa is its perennial youth. When one growth is removed, another one comes on immediately to take its place, and so on continually as long as moisture and temperature conditions are favorable.

But if the first growth remains while the second one starts, then, evidently, the second suffers, when the first and second growths are developing at the same time. At any rate, says a North Dakota substation report, the alfalfa crop does not remain thrifty unless it is cut at proper intervals. If the first cutting is made too late, then the new shoots of the second growth are cut off and the plants are injured.

Good Roads.

Bad roads rob the farm because city people who are used to good streets dread the country mud and dirt. The best agricultural country in the world is France, which has the best roads.

Laziness Expensive.

The machinery men just naturally love a lazy farmer who houses his binder in a fence corner and leaves his plow standing in the ground.

TONSORIAL ART.

Fudge—Well, a close shave wouldn't hurt any of those Russian whiskerinoes!

IN AGONY WITH ITCHING

"About four years ago I broke out with sores on my arms like boils. After two months they were all over my body, some coming, and some going away. In about six months the boils quit, but my arms, neck, and body broke out with an itching, burning rash. It would burn and itch, and come out in pimples like grains of wheat. I was in a terrible condition; I could not sleep or rest. Parts of my flesh were raw, and I could scarcely bear my clothes on. I could not lie in bed in any position and rest. In about a year the sores extended down to my feet. Then I suffered agony with the burning, itching sores. I could hardly walk and for a long time I could not put on socks.

"All this time I was trying everything I could hear of, and had the skill of three doctors. They said it was eczema. I got no benefit from all this. I was nearly worn out, and had given up in despair of ever being cured when I was advised by a friend to try Cuticura Remedies. I purchased Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Resolvent, and used exactly as directed. I used the Cuticura Remedies constantly for four months, and nothing else, and was perfectly cured. It is now a year, and I have not had the least bit since. I am ready to praise the Cuticura Remedies at any time. (Signed) E. L. Cote, Exile, Ky., Nov. 10, 1910."

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 21, K, Boston.

OTTUMWA WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ottumwa, Iowa.—"For years I was almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its dreadful forms; shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors. I feel it my duty to tell you these facts. My heart is full of gratitude to you for my cure."—Mrs. HARRIET E. WAMPLER, 524 S. Ransom Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous medicine, made only from roots and herbs, has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, confidential, and always helpful.

Old Taft is likely to say some fine day," I traded off my second term as president for free trade with Canada." Of course he will make a good trade from a financial standpoint, as the trusts and railroads will take care of his old carcass as long as he lives, but he will go out of office with about as much hooor as Andy Johnson.

We are badly annoyed by having express sent to Okiee, instead of Plummer. We have no express connections with Okiee and express sent there is about as handy for us to get as it would be from Chicago. Our last order of plate was shipped there by the American Precss Association, and how they came to shue her around, until they discovered Okiee to be our express station is something we can not understand, in view of the fact that we have delt with them for years and always had Plummer as our Express Office. It leaves us in a bad position to get out our paper this week, but we assure our readers that it will not occur again, as we shall do business with a house that will not side track us at Okiee.

The Fire Bag.

Every whaler and sealer that sailed the seas in the days of wooden ships carried a fire bag. This was a receptacle big about a foot long and six inches wide lined with waterproof material, with interlinings of oilcloth and thick flannel. Into this was placed the flint and tinder box for kindling fire, and the bag was then securely fastened with double flaps and tied to keep its contents dry. It was the special duty of the second mate to look after the fire bag and in case of shipwreck to attack it at once to his person by means of stout simps provided for the purpose. Then if officers and crew were cast away on some deserted shore in the desolate arctic circle the means of obtaining a fire to warm themselves by and to heat food and drink would not be wanting as long as the precious fire bag was safe.

The steam whalers and sealers of the present day still carry a fire bag stowed in the lifeboat with the tinder and lucifer, but now it is of rubber and contains half a dozen tin boxes of matches.—New York Press.

Hanged the Clever Forger.

Of copious petitions against the death penalty belug enforced one recalls the eighteenth century case of William Lyland, who was sentenced for forging a bill for £7,114 on the East India House. The forgery was a work of art. No less than thirty signatures were imitated, and at the trial not one of the victims could swear that the signature was not his own. However, with the help of the paper manufacturers Ryland's guilt was brought home. Then came the petition of his friends. So clever a man ought never to be hanged, they pleaded. His craftsmanship should save him. It gained him a respite. He was allowed to finish a fine engraving he had begun, but nothing more. Though the engraver was a favorite of George III., that king quite failed to see how a forgery could be excused, on the ground that it was a clever forgery.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Soap and Water Cure.

The traveler in the Himalayas must be prepared for surprises. Two days after the Hon. C. G. Bruce had reached Mana he received a message from Old "Then" Would Work.

"Then" is the word which has been suggested for use as an English pronoun of common gender, a luxury which the English language has thus far had the fortitude to forego. It was considered suitable for English because in some cases on the Greek. Its use may be illustrated as follows:

If a parent desires to spank then's child or her, as the case may be child then he or she should take then (him, her or it) across then's knee. Then third should remove then's slipper, and after explaining to the child the reprehensibility of then's conduct then should apply the slipper to that portion of then's anatomy which from time immemorial has been dedicated to that purpose.

It may easily be seen from the above that the whole sorrie great clanfoolishness of the Greek pronoun can be avoided.

DIDN'T WASTE WORDS.

The Stoical Mountaineer Simply Answered the Question.

"For stoical indifference and inclurosity," said a young man from Knoxville, Tenn., who was visiting in Louisville a few days ago, "I never saw any one that could equal the Kentucky mountaineer.

"Two years ago I was camping during the summer with a party of young men and women in the mountains, during our stay there we became acquainted with an old mountaineer whom we called Sam. He always referred in his wife as Marfa and we fell into the same habit.

"Last year we returned to the same place to camp. As we were going up the mountain path on our first day out we met Sam walking along sparingly in a deep study.

"'Hello, Sam!' we all called, 'Where's Marfa?'

"She's comin' back there," he said, directing his thumb backward over his shoulder.

"We went on up the mountain path and a short distance farther came upon a party of mountaineers transporting a dead body in a rickety wagon. It was a funeral party. Imagine our surprise when we were informed that the deceased was Marfa. Sam had not thought it worth his pains to inform us that Marfa was dead when he stated she was 'comin' back there.'"—Louisville Times.

THE ENGAGEMENT RING.

Advice the Jeweler Gave the Young Man Who Was Investing.

"Some of these jewelers are an accommodating lot," remarked the young man in the light suit. "I went in the other day to buy a diamond ring.

"'For a lady?' the clerk asked me I told him it was.

"'An engagement ring?' he asked me further.

"'Yes,' I told him, getting a little bit peeved, 'but I don't see what business it is of yours what I intend to do with the ring after I've paid for it out of my own private funds.'

"'Don't be offended,' says the clerk in a conciliatory tone. 'I was just going to suggest that if it was simply a present, with no engagement going with it, you go in for size rather than for quality, and when the girl comes in to inquire about the value we'll be $50 or $75 worth for you. But if it's an engagement ring I would advise you to get the best quality you can find, even if it does mean a smaller stone. Just as a matter of sentiment you'll want to know that it is right, and then if you ever get in hard luck you can pawn the good ring for two-thirds of its value.'—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Toad's Tongue.

The skillful manner in which a per toad used its wonderfully formed tongue entitled it to be ranked as an expert. For one thing, it showed wonderful skill in judging distances. The tongue was never darted out until the insect came within a certain range. The accuracy of the creature's aim was another matter for surprise. The insects were generally in motion when the tongue was darted out against them, but the arrow never failed to hit. The rapidity with which the tongue was shot forth excited much wonder. The operation is a complex one. The tongue is doubled or folded up when in the mouth. Therefore a twofold action is required, an unfolding of the weapon and then the darting of it forth. The withdrawing of the tongue with the captured insect on the tip was not less remarkable. Notwithstanding the rapid motion, the fineness of the tongue tip and the struggles of the prey the victim was never dropped.—Exchange.

Whistler's Ways.

It was Whistler's custom when drowsy to go deliberately to sleep, no matter where or what the circumstances might be. At one dinner party his gentle snore suddenly aroused his neighbor, who nudged him violently with his elbow. "I say, Whistler," he protested excitedly, "you must not sleep here!"

"Leave me alone!" snapped Whistler. "I've said all I wanted to. I've no interest at all in what you and your friends have to say."

One evening he was my guest at dinner and when Mrs. A. Ludwig was also there. Right after dinner Whistler went calmly to sleep. On the way to the theater he enjoyed another nap in the cab, and he slumbered peacefully through the greater part of the play. The next morning he blandly asked me: "What did Abbey say to me last night? Anything worth while?"—Century.

"Charms" in Cornwall.

Cornwall, England, is a county of "charms." The passing of children through holes in the earth, rocks or trees, once an established rite, is still practiced in various parts of Cornwall," wrote Thomas Q. Couch about fifty years ago. "Sick boys are advised by creeping on the hands and knees beneath a bramble which has grown into the soil at both ends. Children afflicted with hernia are still passed through a slit in an ash sapling before sunrise, fasting, after which the slit portions are bound up, and as they unite so the malady is cured. The ash is indeed a tree of many virtues. Venomous reptiles are never known to rest under its shadow, and a single blow from the ash stick is instant death to an adder. Struck by a bough of any other tree, the reptile is apt to recover."

JAPANESE HEROISM.

The Brave Record of the Loss of a Submarine Vessel.

Buhjoined is the translation of a message written by Lieutenant Tsurumi Sakuma, who was in command of the Japanese submarine No. 6, which foundered while maneuvering in Port Arthur bay. The message was found in the conning tower of the submarine after she had been brought to the surface:

"It is with the deepest regret that I write this message to describe the loss of this boat with my fellow officers and men, due to no own fault. I would here specially mention the all steps have been taken to relse her, my comrades and men working get ready and calmly till the end. I ordered the ship to dive with the engine ranging, but as I found she went down too far I tried to stop the valves which admit the sea water to the ballast tank, but unexpectedly the chain working these valves broke, and I was left helpless, unable to control the boat. Meanwhile the tanks filled with water and the boat went down at an incline of about twenty-five degrees. After striking the bottom the water began rushing in, the switchboard was presented in water, all electric lights went out, the fuses burnt away and the boat was filled with poisonous gases, so that we experienced the greatest difficulty in breathing.

"Under these conditions we worked our very utmost with the hand pumps to empty the main ballast tank, which, I believe, we succeeded in doing, although we could not read the gauges owing to darkness. No electric current was available, as I mentioned before, and our last hope of rising to the surface lay in working the hand pumps unity.

"I write this by the dim light coming from the conning tower—11:45 a. m.

"I earnestly beseech his majesty to grant me forgiveness and to succor the families of my comrades and men who have lost their lives in this perishing boat. This is my only wish. 12:20 p. m.

"It is with the utmost difficulty that I can breathe, though I am sure we must have blown out the gasoline directly from the tanks. I cannot continue my work. 12:40 p. m."—London Tribune.

Pottery and Secrecy.

In the royal manufactory of pottery at Meissen, Saxony, the work was formerly carried on with the utmost secrecy to prevent the processes from becoming known elsewhere. The establishment was a complete fortress, the porcelain of which was not raised day or night. No stranger being permitted to enter for any purpose whatever. Every workman, even the chief inspector, was sworn to silence. This injunction was formally repeated every month to the superior officers employed, while the workmen had constantly before their eyes in large letters the warning motto, "Be Secret Unto Death." It was well known that any person divulging the process would be imprisoned for life in the castle of Koenigstein. Even the king himself when he took strangers of distinction to visit the works was enjoined to secrecy. One of the furnaces, however, escaped and assisted in establishing a manufactory in Vienna, from which the secrets spread all over Germany.

Her Diamond Necklace.

Brown is a very careful man. He is superstitiously careful. So careful is he that he has insured his insurance money.

Now, Brown has a wife. Never have to be given birthday presents, and on his wife's first birthday after their marriage he gave her a beautiful diamond necklace. It was not as much as you might think for such stones as the necklace represented cost, but Mrs. Brown's life, and he let every one know that. And he arranged to give Mrs. Brown a new diamond every birthday. And he let the neighbors know that too.

He has just missed giving his wife a birthday present for the ninth successive year.

As he when greed will conquer pride and his wife will ask for another birthday present, we shall have to wait and see.—Observer.

HOME OF FALCONRY.

The Kirghiz Hunt Wolves and Foxes With Great Golden Eagles.

All wanderers are lovers of the chase, but for sheer love of sport and daring exploits the Kirghiz of the pains. Central Asia is the home of falconry, which was not introduced into Europe until the crusaders brought back falcons with them from their eastern wanderings. But imagine the ambition of the man who trains birds at wolves and foxes instead of at quails and partridges. Not content with hunting game birds with small falcons, the Kirghiz capture and train the great golden eagle, which, when they have such game as gazelles, foxes and even wolves.

A well mounted Kirghiz falconer, carrying on his wrist one of these magnificent birds, is a fine sight. The weight of the eagle is such that the keeper requires a support for his wrist, and the hunters are usually to be seen with a little wooden bracket for the purpose the arm against the hip. The eagles are hooded, as all falcons are, but each is used only in winter, when they are hungry and keen. In summer they are fed on marmots and live a restful life, sitting in the sun in front of the tent doors.

When gazelles or wolves are the objects of the chase the eagles are slipped by long, sleek greyhounds of a small breed, the dogs running and pulling down the quarry until the eagle, swooping overhead, is ready to pounce upon it.

Nerve and Liver Pills

Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in these pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson, after trying them wrote:

"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and also your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself with good results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently being troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."

A. L. Wilson, Sparta, Ill.

Mr. Wilson was for a number of years cashier of the First National Bank of Sparta.

Dr. Miles'
Nerve and Liver Pills

are different from others. Many kinds of liver pills are "impossible" after one trial on account of their harshness. Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pill do not act by sheer force but in an easy, natural way, without griping or undue irritation. They are not habit forming.

Didn't Wait the Attack.

At Bonhomme during a royal reception, some years ago a number of English ladies in their anxiety to see everything pressed with such force against the soldiers who were keeping order that the soldiers were forced to give way and generally were as polite as gentlemen and bore a smile in their eyes on the whole. The officer in command, observing the state of affairs, called out: "Use the butt of the drum! If they don't stand back kick them off!" After the first sound of the drum the ladies made a flight.

"If they had been French," said a Parisian journal, "they would have remained as a woman."

Origin of a Song.

The grandniece of a negro preacher lead to the composition of the immortal "Old Folks at Home." While waiting for a change of horses at a Kentucky hostelry the engineer, Stephen Foster, heard a melancholy negro minstrel near as he threw a set of harness to the ground. "It's sick an' tired o' dis life. I'm sick, I am sick an' tired o' dis folks at home."

"Where may that be, Sam?" asked Foster.

"Oh," answered the darky, "way down on de Suwannee river."

The result was the song as we have it today.

Counter Diplomacy.

"I think you will like this goods, Madam," urged a salesman in a Seattle dry goods shop. "It is just the thing for a stout, middle aged lady."

"Sir!" remarked the customer in a huff. The clerk saw his fatal mistake and recovered himself quickly.

"Pardon, madam, he added, "I mistook you for the young lady who was in here yesterday looking for something for her grandmother. Now that I look at you again, I see that this was an older person. Now, if you are buying for yourself you have something over which to rejoice."

Wondrous Tact

As an example of graciousness and tact Matthew White tells in Minne's Magazine of a famous governman who was called on to address an audience of actors. Alluding to the humor so characteristic of the players, the clergyman said that in former days it was sometimes customary to hound down the vagabonds and bore a hole in their ears with an awl, that the citizens might thus be forewarned. "And who knows," the clergyman added, "but that it is a survival at an endeavor to bridle the merriment and levity of the actors even today to wear their hair long?"

Battles and Rags.

"Battles and rags, battles and rags!" called out a rag and bone man, as he piled his calling.

"Why do you always put these words together?" asked a passerby.

"Because, madam," replied the man, courteously touching his hat, "wherever you find battles you find rags!"—London Family Herald.

Leaving a Man Helpless.

"That statement made me think," said a veteran newspaper man to the Cincinnati Times-Star, "of the celebrated row between President Cleveland's private secretary and Secretary Hoke Smith's colored man. The two were exercising their masters' horses out on a country road and got into a dispute as to what is the best thing in the world. Finally they made a bet of a dollar on it.

"Well, what is the best thing in the world?" asked Cleveland's man.

"Time' passun and sweet intercourse," said Hoke Smith's man.

"Whoa!" says Cleveland's man, dragging at the bridle. He jumped to the ground, seized Hoke Smith's man by the leg and dragged him to the dust.

"Take that," says he, handing him on the back, "an subscribe dat's real good. Now, don't let me see dollar to come to time."

Fine weather for haying.

Stephen Singer, the popular handler of Uncle Sams mail at Kratka was attending the post masters convention at Crookston this week.

All who have read about the Aeroplane, would naturally like to see one fly. You can see two flights made each afternoon by a Wright Bros. Aeroplane at the Pennington County Fair, at Thief River Falls, Aug. 2, 3, 4.

$27, Insures you against a loss of five hundred dollars by hail. Of course we don't want to advise you to pay out money for hail insurance, but if you should happen to loose your crop by hail five hundred would come handy.

John Quirk was out yesterday roundup up cattle. He has 130 acres of fine pasture with a fine fence on one side of it and where used to be the Red Lake River on the other side. To inclose this pasture he would have to build over a mile of fence. A fine position for a farmer to be in, in haying and harvest.

We have spent the greater part of our life in a grain growing country, but we never saw a finer crop of wheat and oats grow out of the ground than is now growing on the farm of Walter McAndress. The wheat on the entire field is about 3½ feet tall and as heavy as it can stand, and with favorable weather for filling will go 35 bushells an acre.

A neighborhood picnic was given at the residence of S. L. Holm on last Sunday afternoon, in honor of Miss Sallie and Bell Wattendahl, of East Grand Forks, who have been visiting with their sisters Mrs. John Radneckl and Mrs. Olaf Sundahl. A very plesant afternoon was enjoyed by all who attended. The young ladies returned home on Tuesday.

The sudden shutting off of the water in Red Lake River left a hundred miles of farmers without any fence on one side of their pasture. The trouble is that the river is plagged with logs so no water can get out of the Red Lake. Of course we suppose that a lumber company have a right to dam up a navigable river that is under control of the government, and dry it up, but we are not sure, so we shall take the matter up with the war department and find out for sure. If the logging companys can dam up and shut off the Red Lake River the people living along its banks may as well know it. There is not more than 8 inches of water left in the river now, and it will soon be entirly dry, if that outlet is not opened.

The annual school meeting in District No. 37, Highlanding district, was held at the Highlanding school house on Saturday evening, with a fairly good attendance. It was voted to have eight months school the coming year, with a first grade teacher. W. G. Hunt was unanimously reelected clerk for three years, T. S. Jacobson, as chairman and Walter McAndress as treasurer, holding over. The clerks report showed that 27 scholars were entitled to apportionment for the coming year, as against 15 last year. The total receipts for the year were $1,400. Total number of school orders issued $925.35 It has been rather an expensive year for wood, the district having paid out $32.60 for wood, but will have enough on hand to do most all next winter.

Take one of them fine bundels of eastern Pennington county to the Fair Aug. 2, 3, 4,. Let people see what fine grain we have.

Work is not progressing very rapidly on ditch No. 47, as they dig one hour and tinker the old machine 23 each day. A farmer living near there informs us that he estimates that it would take about ten years to finish the ditch at the rate they are going.

The Pennington County Fair Premium list is out and it is o.k. It shows that the Society have got onto their job, by devoteing attention to a proper exhibition of our stock and farm products, instead of an old plug hoss race. This looks like a farmers fair, and we hope to see them take an active interest in it by taking in grain and stock for exhibition.

We understand that the usal rate for getting an extension of a years time for diging a county ditch was about $25.00 paid by the contractor to the bondsman, who made the Arrangements for the extension. But some of them contractors, who are letting the summer drift away without diging them ditch es will find a devil of raise in rates this fall.

NOTICE- We want the contractors and bondsman on ditch No. 47 to distinctly understand, that any extension of time for completing of said ditch will be fought to the bitter end. The armeis and taxpayers as said ditch are organized and mean business. You contracted to dig that ditch before January 1st, 1912. Now dig it.

A Burning Glass in the Eye.

In the front part of each of our eyes is a convex lens of great power and clearness. It acts exactly like a burning glass. If a person was made to look at the sun, say, for half a minute his eye would actually start to burn up. The lens would focus the rays of the sun on the retina, and that part of the eye would immediately scorch and later would burn up a hole. This can happen, however, only when one looks at the sun directly or in a mirror. If one holds a pin between the sun and the eye and looks at the pin, although the sun is in a direct line with the eye and although its rays are entering the eye, the eye is not hurt, because the rays are not focused inside the eyeball. This is the wonderful property the lens has, that of focusing objects at different distances. The media by which it does this are its power to change its curvature.—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Now, the president of the Fat Mania club was asked, "did you present your name among your applicants for membership? Didn't some one try to get in that weren't up in the standard weight?"

"Yes," the portly officer replied, "but it was no use. Applications had to be presented in person at the Polk building, fifth floor. There was no elevator. The applicant climbed the five flights of stairs.

"At the top he met a man who asked, 'Were you looking for the Fat Man's Club?'

"'Yes.'

"'The main office is on the first floor,' the man said. 'Your application is rejected. We receive no man who can climb five flights of stairs.'"—Youth's Companion.

"Oh," replied Arthur, "we have the servants to pull the chains."—Judge.

Pipes and Chords.

Sometimes he smokes a pipe of peace with the tenants of the house he is trying to rent that he may have a chance to inspect the premises. Sometimes he smokes a pipe of peace with the agent who is trying to rent him a house. And sometimes he smokes a pipe of peace with the man who is trying to collect a bill from him. But he never smokes a pipe of peace with the man who is trying to sell him a piano.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

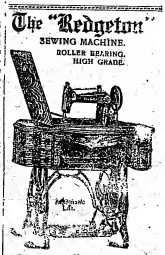
Not in That Class.

A Cleveland young woman has a reverend brother who is wise beyond his years and is likely to crop out in new places at the most unexpected times. The other night the anxious suitor called on his inamorata, arriving at her domicile a little before he was expected. She was not ready to make her appearance, and the duty of entertaining the caller devolved upon the little brother.



"Well, Bobby," began the young man in an effort to make conversation and at the same time to put his involuntary host at his ease, "does your sister think that I am calling at this house oftener than I am welcome?"

The child looked keenly at the caller. "Nothing doing," he said. "Do you think I'm one of them fresh kids you read about in the funny papers? There ain't going to be no embarrassing answer this time."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Missionary a Puzzle.

To the untutored Chinaman the presence of the missionary is a puzzle. They simply cannot imagine human beings exiling themselves from their native land for the love of men on the other side of the globe. So they frame sundry theories to explain the thing to themselves. One theory is that the missionaries are secret political agents sent on politics as influence over the Chinese and then swaying them to the advantage of their respective governments. Only of late have the natives come to realize that the strangers are not sent by their governments, but by religious people. According to another theory, China is so excellent and renowned that the red haired barbarians come to live there for the mere pleasure of it. As for their self denying works of benevolence, these are supposed to be prompted by the desire to acquire merit.—Century.

WILLIAMS, The Picturesque

COPYRIGHT BY W. A. PATTERSON

by EDWARD B. CLARK

WITHIN the last few years progression has been the text of presidential sermons and to a large degree the text of congressional speeches, for most of the members of both great political parties have declared fealty to the cause of advanced legislation, although it is perfectly true that a few of them have preferred reaction to progression as a text, and that some of those who have spoken on behalf of one cause have been suspected of holding in their hearts a feeling of antagonism to the policies for which their lips were asking support.

It has been held that the proceedings of congress during the last eight years have been more interesting from a purely popular point of view than the proceedings of any other congress since the time prior to the great Civil war. During the Roosevelt and Taft administrations there has been an opportunity to watch from the press gallery the actions and the manners of men supposed to be representatives of the American type as it is known to the world.

Congressmen are intensely humm creatures. At the outset of their congressional careere there is npt to be a sort of constraint about them, but this wears off and the proceedings in either hall this wears off and the proceedings in either hall of the capitol, although they have to do ordinarily with matters of great moment to the people, run along very much as do the proceedings in a town along very much as do the proceedings in a town meeting into which partisenship, jealousies, human meeting into which partisenship, jealousies, human interests, selfishness and generosity and in fact the whole collection of human excitencies and the whole collection of human excitencies and human failings enter. The proceedings in congress and even the personal interchanges between the members have perhaps as interest which is like that pertaining to all other American debates that pertaining to all other American debates. liberative bodies because congress in a war is the court of last legislative resort and there the laws are made and unmade and there is at stake the good of the masses.

A few of the men who have figured in the debates of the last few years have died, some of them have been promoted from one house to another and some of them have been demoted to private life, but their names are known to the people.

John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, who has just entered the senate of the United States, was during a part of the Roosevelt administration a house leader of the Democratic and, as some one has called him, the reprover and adviser of the Republicans. Mr. Williams is a picturesque man.

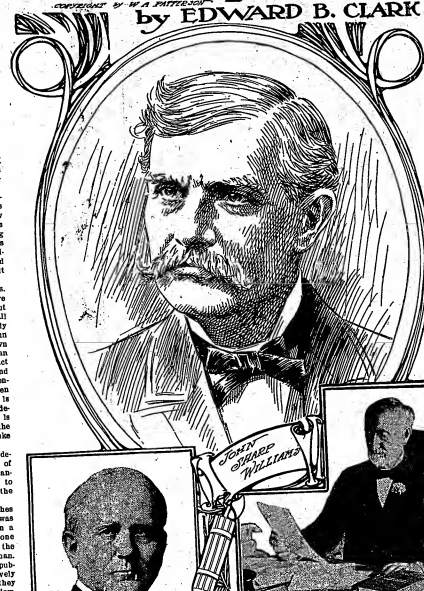
It is perhaps needless to say that the Republicans never followed the gratuitous and gravely given advice of the Yazoo statesman, but they paid passing heed to it because, from their viewpoint, of the very sublimity of the impertinence of the thing. It was a good-natured impertinence, however, ironical in substance and in manner, and it added to the general gladness of the house debates.

Mr. Williams' position as adviser in chief for the party across the aisle reminded one of nothing so much as of the course of a certain great newspaper which for years excoriated Grover Cleveland editorially on Mondays, Wednesdays and and editorially on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, while on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays it gave the sums amount of space to the telling of Mr. Cleveland what he must do to save the country. Sunday was the one day of peace.

If Mr. Williams' name were not written in the record and if it did not appear in the directory and on the framework of his congressional desk, one-third of it speedily would be lost to sight and memory, for Democrats and Republicans alike the Washington populace without the walls of the capitol hall him to his face and speak of him behind his back as John Sharp.

Had it not been for Mr. Williams one year congress would have adjourned before June was treading upon the heels of July, and some of the Republican chieftains in the house muttered things that savored suspiciously of imprecations at the course of the Mississippian, but each Republican chieftain knew in his heart that with the party majority reversed and with legislation circumstances similar, he would have acted as did the Democrat of the Yazoo district.

The statehood bill was in conference and there appeared to be no earthly chance that the conferees would make a report for weeks. The Republican members representing the house on the committee were holding out against the senate members in the hope of getting a concession on the matter of the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as one state. The Democrats of the house desired that the bill should stand as the senate passed it, and they did not approve of what they called "the tiring-out process," which they said was in working progress in the conference committee room.



Democratic Leader Williams therefore, largely upon his own responsibility, decided that he would try to force a report. As a result he raised the point of no quorum in the house upon every possible occasion, and the led to tedious and time-killing roll calls. It was given out flatly that Mr. Williams would cease his obstructive tactics the instant the statehood report was made, but Speaker Cannon and those whose hearts and souls were in the statehood fight as a party matter preferred to toe the time and to listen to the drouling tones of the roll call clerk rather than to surrender.

Day after day Mr. Cannon would mount to his seat, would look over the chamber and noting the absence of a quorum would look anxiously the direction of the Democratic leader. The latter, knowing that Williams would raise his point, and legislation would be blocked. One day when there was a pitiably small attendance the speaker counted a quorum.

"How did you make out?" queried Mr. Williams.

"I counted in forty-one of ten," said Mr. Cannon, and business went on, but the counting game, which was an improvement on the Indiana blocks of five system, was checked the next day by the alert Mississippian.

Leader Williams had an eye to the proprieties. It was he who brought to a melodramatic close a controversy between Mr. Hepburn of Iowa and Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin which apparently was tending toward a tragic finale. Mr. Williams had left his seat on the Democratic side to mingle with the Republicans who had gathered about the aisle forward and the wrathy Wisconsinite he had agreed to use his efforts to exempt the express companies from being classed as common carriers. In fact Mr. Hepburn had impeached the verseity of Mr. Cooper in languages as unparliamentary as it was impolite. Everybody expected to see a fight, but not one of the Republicans in the surging party crowd said a word. The instant that the offensive words were spoken, John Sharp Williams turned like a flash to the speaker's desk and demanded attention.

"The house has its privileges," he thundered; "its dignity has been outraged."

Mr. Hephurn sat down; likewise Mr. Cooper. The Republicans sicis back to their seats. Mr. Williams crossed the aisle to the Democratic domain. A Republican family quarrel had been settled by an emissary of the enemy.

Speaker Cannon and Leader Williams, party enemies, had been personal friends for years. The latter called each other Joe and John and not infrequently they are seen walking through the corridor, each with an arm about the other's shoulder. Mr. Williams did not hesitate while upon the floor and holding the thought that the minority's rights had been invaded, to make a target of the speaker for such shafts as he could form and sharpen out of the material of words.

Mr. Williams has told Mr. Cannon many a time that as a speaker he was an admirer of power. Mr. Williams smiled approval when Mr. De Armond of Missouri in denouncing what he called "the miserably inadequate committee representation of the minority," shook his fist nt the speaker and let loose from his tongue such expressions as "gross injustice" and "malicious unfairness." But this is all a part of the game of politics and it doesn't seem even to scorch the bonds of friendship.

John Sharp Williams of Yazoo, Miss., now senator, makes his education tell in his speeches, and yet he bombs of congress. After going through several primary schools, the Mississippian completed a full course at the Kentucky Military Institute, the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee, the University of Virginia, and the University of Heidelberg, Germany.

Leaving out of consideration the Republican leader, Senator Serano E. Payne, and the Democratic leader, John Sharp Williams, there were erratic leader, John Sharp Williams, there were probably more verbal duels between Champ Clark of Missouri and General Charles H. Grosvenor of Ohio, and between John Dalzell of Pennsylvania and any Democrat on the other side of the aisle who was willing to try issues with the somewhat who was willing to try issues with the somewhat waspish Pennsylvanian. Grosvenor and Clark were as good at retort as any other members of the house. They had encounter after encounter and it would be a difficult thing to decide which of the two came out of the frays the hotter. of the two came out of the frays the hotter. Grosvenor in his retorts was apt to be cutting, while Clark was more likely to be broadly humorous.

Heroes in a Lighthouse

The Paris Figaro prints a letter from a correspondent in Belle Ile, a little island south of the coast of Brittany, which relates the following story:

On April 18 last at 10:60 a. m. the lighthouse keeper of Kerdpnis, on the southeast point of Belle Ile, a mile and a quarter from any habitation, became suddenly ill as he was cleaning the lamp. Thinking that it was only a passing ailment, he continued to work till midday, when he felt that he had to take to his bed. The became so ill that he had to call for help. There was only other persons in the lighthouse were his wife and four young children. Unable to leave her husband and four little children alone, the wife could not seek assistance.

The keeper grew worse. At 7:00 p. m. his death agony began. It was then time to light the lamp. The wife, leaving her children beside her dying husband, mounted into the tower to light the lamp of the lighthouse. When she came down her husband was breathing his last.

While she was performing the sad duties connected with the dead husband the children newly made widow saw that the light did not revolve as it should and so was liable to be mistaken by passing ships for another light.

Once more she mounted into the tower to make the machinery work, but her efforts were useless. The machinery was out of order and she did not know how to fit it. Then she descended and sent the two oldest children up into the tower—one was ten and the other seven—and all night, alone in the little lamp room, up at the top of the lighthouse, from 9:00 p. m. until seven the next morning, the two children kept the machinery in motion, while the mother below with the two smaller children, prepared the body of the father for burial.

The Figaro's correspondent, who is the tax collector of the district, adds: "I have still to pay the $18.83 of the keeper's wages due from April 1 to April 18, the day of his death. The government has been asked for a grant for this courageous family, but when will it come? For the present they are without food and almost without

MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

TRADE MARK

A trial package of Munyon's Paw Paw Pills will be sent free to anyone on request. Address Professor Munyon, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. If you are in need of medical advice, do not fail to write Professor Munyon. Your communication will be treated as strict confidence, and your case will be diagnosed as carefully as though you had a personal interview.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They cure the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour; they do not gripe; they do not weaken, but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most ailments. There are 28 feet of human bowels, and it is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produce rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver ailment can expect to have a clear complexion or enjoy good health. If I had my way I would prohibit the sale of nine-tenths of the cathartics that are now being sold for the reason that they destroy the lining of the stomach, sometimes the lining of the intestines, setting up serious forms of indigestion, and so paralyze the bowels that they refuse to act unless forced by strong purgatives.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they enrich the blood instead of impoverish it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

The 25 pills contain no calomel, no dope; they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic.

Regular size bottle, containing 25 pills, 25 cents. Munyon's Laboratory, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia.

THE MARTYR.

Polly—So Mrs. Highmore's husband has developed bad habits. How did you hear about it?

Dolly—Oh, Mrs. Highmore invited us all to an afternoon tea so she could tell us how she suffered in silence!

Their Native Heath.

Dr. Eugene Fuller, president of the American Urological association, said at a dinner in New York, apropos of Independence Day:

"We must all try to be as truthful as George Washington was. I am afraid we have not, of late years, upheld the reputation for truthfulness that George Washington gave us. I am afraid that we have published to the world, by our yellow press and by other means, a good many tall stories.

"Thus an English teschor once said to a pupil:

"'What is a miracle?'

"'Please, sir,' the little pupil answered, 'it's something that happens in America.'"

An Eight Years' Walk.

Hiram Davis of Newburg went for a walk with his father eight years ago. The father stopped to talk with a friend, and Hiram, then about 10 years old, walked on. He was never seen after that until he walked into his parents' home recently.

The police all over the east were on the lookout for him, the Hudson river was searched and finally he was given up for dead. When he greeted his mother it was some hours before she could be calmed.

Davis has been out west.—New York Sun.

Prudential Reasons.

"So you are going to send your cook off. But isn't her name Arabella Gunn?"

"What's that got to do with our getting rid of her?"

"But, my dear boy, isn't there an ordinance against discharging A. Gunn within the city limits?"

A SPOON SHAKER.
Straight From Coffeedom.

Coffee can marshall a good squadron of enemies and some very hard ones to overcome. A lady in Florida writes:

"I have always been very fond of good coffee, and for years drank it at least three times a day. At last, however, I found that it was injuring me.

"I became bilious, subject to frequent and violent headaches, and so very nervous, that I could not lift a spoon to my mouth without spilling a part of its contents.

"My heart got 'rickety' and beat so fast and so hard that I could scarcely breathe, while my skin got thick and dingy, with yellow blotches on my face, caused by the condition of my liver and blood.

"I made up my mind that all these afflictions came from the coffee, and I determined to experiment and see.

"So I quit coffee and got a package of Postum which furnished my hot morning beverage. After a little time I was rewarded by a complete restoration of my health in every respect.

"I do not suffer from biliousness any more, my headaches have disappeared, my nerves are as steady as could be desired, my heart beats regularly and my complexion has cleared up beautifully—the blotches have been wiped out and it is such a pleasure to be well again." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

POLICEMAN RIGHT

CITY ATTORNEY OF VIRGINIA UPHOLDS PATROLMAN NOW IN TROUBLE.

STOPPED THE GOVERNOR'S AUTO

Bluecoat Is Declared Within Authority In Ordering Car to Stop—Police Chief Refuses to Enforce Suspension Ruling.

City Attorney Poirier of Virginia, declares he fails to see that any difference whatsoever is made in the construction and enforcement of a city ordinance against automobile speeding by the fact that the governor of the state happens to be in the car at the time. Mr. Poirier is, therefore, standing by Patrolman Rickles of the range city, whom the police board of the place has ordered suspended for 10 days because of his action on June 24 in ordering the stopping of a speeding machine containing Governor Eberhart and others, including Mayor Hawkinson of Virginia.

The Virginia city attorney is standing by the patrolman, and so is the police chief, despite the order of the police commissioners. Mayor Hawkinson takes the opposite stand and holds that the patrolman exceeded the niceties of the law and its requirements when he interfered with a conveyance bearing the chief executive of the state, and should be punished for his temerity. The patrolman was still on the job, at last reports, the chief refusing to make effective the mandate of the board. Rickles maintains he is getting "a raw deal."

Meanwhile Governor Eberhart, while acknowledging that the car in which he was riding in the Virginia incident was speeding, refrains from admitting that the patrolman did his duty, or from expressing any sympathy for him in his present predicament.

Governor States Viewpoint.

"The matter is up to the local authorities of Virginia," said the governor. "I fail to see why I should interfere. The suspension action has not been reported to me officially." Asked if he might take some step to intercede with the Virginia authorities for leniency toward the patrolman, the governor said he would not.

Patrolman Rickles declares that he saw a rapidly speeding automobile approaching and, standing in the middle of the street, ordered the chauffer to stop, that the chauffer tooted his horn loudly and put on more speed; that he (Rickles) was compelled to jump to one side and pulled a revolver to enforce his order; that Mayor Hawkinson saw the gun and waved a hand at Rickles, saying, "Never mind that gun, put it where it belongs."

The automobile did not slacken speed, says the patrolman, but kept on at a rapid rate till the party arrived at the iron range depot. The incident took place entirely within the city limits.

Exceeding the speed limit continued nearly two miles through the heart of the city and down the main business thoroughfare. The speeding and pulling of his revolver by the policeman were generally commented upon and the police and fire commission took action.

Mayor Admits Violation.

Mayor Hawkinson admits the automobile was exceeding the speed law. C. L. Lenont, president of the police and fire commission, declares Patrolman Rickles exercised poor judgment and considers the proposed punishment light. City Attorney Poirier says Rickles acted entirely within his authority in pulling the revolver if the party was violating the speed law, and says he believes the policeman was right under the law in using the means his judgment thought best in enforcing order. Chief Walsh says enforcement of the ruling of the police and fire commission would deprive the police of power to enforce the speed law in the city and would establish a precedent encouraging violations of the speed law. Mayor Hawkinson says Patrolman Rickles knew who occupied the speeding automobile and knew residents of Virginia and hence there was no justification for pulling the revolver.

MRS. McCLURE APPOINTED.

Administration of Stillwater Lumberman's Estate Granted.

Stillwater.—The probate court granted administration of the large estate of the late Samuel McClure, a pioneer lumberman, to the widow, Mrs. Lora E. McClure. A corporation has been organized since his death to carry on the extensive lumbering and mining interests. Final distribution was ordered of the large estate of the late lumberman, James Mulvey. The property was apportioned among two sons and two daughters.

DULUTH ENTERTAINS DRUGGISTS

Excursion Up St. Louis River Closes State Meeting.

Duluth.—Druggists from all over the state gathered here for the twenty-seventh annual convention of the Minnesota Pharmaceutical association. The local druggists did everything possible to make the visitors glad they came and the business sessions were interspersed with outings and social functions. The convention ended with an excursion up the St. Louis river.

CONGRESSMAN'S WIFE TO SUE.

CLARENCE B. MILLER.
Congressman from Eighth District of Minnesota.

St. Paul. — Mrs. Louise Miller, wife of Congressman Clarence B. Miller, of Duluth, has retained an attorney to bring suit for divorce. A young stenographer in Washington is said to be in some way concerned in the suit. When asked the cause for the action, Mrs. Miller said: "The reasons cannot be published. Besides, it might hurt Mr. Miller's political ambitions." Mrs. Miller is living in a private boarding house in St. Paul. She is unable to say whether the suit will be brought in St. Paul or Duluth.

BREWERY AGENT FINED.

Fergus Falls Case Concerning Beer Sales to Be Appealed.

Fergus Falls.—George Stockharger, the Minneapolis Brewing Company's agent, who was arrested for selling beer in this city, was found guilty and fined $50 or sixty days in jail. Mr. Stockberger's attorney claimed that the court had no jurisdiction, owing to the fact that the city has just established a municipal court. The state law provides that justice courts shall not have jurisdiction in cities where such courts exist. It was also claimed that the ordinance itself was invalid for the reason that it conflicted with the state law. The ordinance prohibits the sale of any kind of intoxicants, either at wholesale or retail, without a liquor license, while the state law allows the sale in five-gallon quantities. The city attorney maintained that the ordinance was not in conflict with the state law, but supplemental to it, and intended to make its provisions more stringent. The court upheld him in this contention, holding that the case was properly brought and that the ordinance was valid.

The case will be carried to the higher courts, as it is going to be necessary for all breweries selling to saloons or other parties in this city to take out a $1,500 license if its validity is upheld.

FATAL BOLT WITH TORNADO.

Lightning Kills Farmer and Horses Near Warren.

Warren.—A tornado struck this city and vicinity. The storm was accompanied by lightning and rain, and did much damage to buildings and other property, tearing shingles off roofs and uprooting trees. The Spaulding elevator, on the Soo right of way, was lifted, carried about thirty feet away and tipped over on its side. Dixon's sale barn, 45 feet by 125 feet, was moved about a foot off its foundation; the wind set box cars in motion and blew the tops off two cars on the Soo line. The city band-stand was demolished.

A Bohemian farmer, Frank Judowsky, accompanied by a young boy, was driving a team with a load of hay, about five miles southwest of this city, when a bolt of lightning struck them, instantly killing the man and team, setting fire to the hay, but leaving the boy unhurt.

The storm traveled from southwest to northeast and was only fifty feet wide.

SCHEME FOR MODEL FARM.

Plans Announced For Rotation of Crops.

Bemidji.—Thomas Cooper, of the agricultural college of the state university, while here, perfected crop plans for the L. P. Anderson demonstration farm here.

The scheme for farming here is urged by Mr. Cooper as a model for all farmers in Northern Minnesota. It consists of the following schedule: Divide the farm into three fields, as has been done here and follow these divisions, also being placed in operation on the Anderson land:

Field No. 1, wheat and seeded to clover; 1912, clover; 1913, potatoes.

Field No. 2, now in clover; potatoes in 1912, grain and seed in 1913.

Field No. 3, potatoes; 1912, grain and grass; 1913, clover.

Balaton Man, Aged 102, Hoes Corn.

Balaton.—Grandpa Shequin was out hoeing corn the other morning at 6 o'clock. This old man has planted corn for 95 years. Shequin is now past 102 years of age and was not planting corn because of necessity, but because he needed the early morning exercise and to get the morning air, and he was simply taking another chance against cutworms, grasshoppers and dry weather. His wife is still living with him. She is past 92 and they have lived together nearly 75 years.

"RULE OF REASON" DENIED.

Minnesota Supreme Court Decides Against Creamery Co.

Minneapolis. — A decision handed down by the Minnesota supreme court declares the Creamery Package and Manufacturing Company is violating the Minnesota anti-trust laws and forbids it to do business within the state, although it may continue its interstate business. The decision affirms the order of the district court of Steele county.

In the opinion written by Judge George L. Bunn the court refuses to follow the United States supreme court ruling in the Standard Oil and tobacco cases. The Creamery Package Manufacturing Company asked to have the "rule of reason" applied in this case and also asked that it be given time in which to reorganize. The company cited the decision in the Standard Oil and tobacco cases. Judge Bunn said the ruling was not pertinent in this case.

In referring to the "rule of reason," the opinion stated that the Minnesota court is asked that the Minnesota anti-trust statutes could be construed as forbidding only such a monopoly or restraint of trade as was illegal at common law. The court refuses to apply the rule of reason on the ground that the evidence shows that the act of the defendant constitutes undue restraint of trade a monopoly and a restraint of trade that would have been illegal at common law.

The Creamery Package Manufacturing Company was admitted to the state of Minnesota in 1898. It has its central plant at Mankato. Combinations were started about 1899. Attorney General E. T. Young started action against the concern for which the legislature made a special appropriation. In the last legislature Senator S. D. Works, of Mankato, tried to get a bill through which would reinstate the company and permit it to reorganize. This bill passed the senate but was killed in the house.

TIME TO GET COAL.

Head of Lakes Docks Have Big Supply That Should Be Moved West Early.

Duluth.—Coal docks at the Head of the Lakes are loaded almost to their full capacity, and unless the movement of coal to the west begins soon coal shipments will have to cease. Every year there is a cry of the danger of a western coal famine, and in some years it has almost materialized, owing to the delay of western dealers in laying in their winter's supply. The docks at the Head of the Lakes have not sufficient capacity to carry the full stock of coal needed in the Northwest, and unless part of the supply is shipped west early in the fall, there is always a shortage.

This year the docks are filled even earlier than usual, owing to the slack trade on the lakes. Vessels have had little else to carry but coal, and they already have moved a large part of the season's supply.

If the heavy grain movement materializes this fall, and the dealers in coal hold back their winter orders until late, there will be a decided car shortage in the Northwest, local railroad men say, as the grain crop and the winter's coal supply will have to be moved simultaneously.

BEMIDJI CREAMERY OPENS.

Railways Will Aid Co-operative Plant in North Country.

Bemidji. — The new Farmers' Co-operative Creamery association has opened the creamery in the Fitsimmons-Derig plant, and from now on this city will be gradually taking a front rank with the cities of the Northwest that are encouraging and assisting dairymen in making this section of Minnesota equal the communities further south as upholding the record established as the "bread and butter state."

The directors decided that the creamery association will pay the same prices for cream that are paid at Duluth. There will be no limit to the territory which will be covered by the Bemidji creamery.

The officials of the Great Northern, M. & I., Soo and M. R. L. & M. railway companies have agreed to co-operate with the new creamery as far as possible, and it is certain that as rapidly as farmers at any one place ship sufficient cream to warrant such action, cream stations will be established along these roads.

ASSAILANT IS FOUND DEAD.

Body of Man Who Stabbed Hastings Man Is Recovered.

Hastings.—Halve Reisle, who seriously stabbed Fred Gatel and then set fire to Henry Conzemius' stock barn, was found dead by Edward Chamberlain in a ditch in a clump of trees near the roadside about eighty rods south of the scene of the tragedy in Nininger, evidently having killed himself or fractured his skull in the fall into the ditch.

Perjury In Land Case Charged.

Bemidji.—Loxley Culp was arraigned before Court Commissioner H. A. Simons, having been arrested on a charge of perjury, which is alleged to have been committed on January 12 at the hearing of a contest case at the United States land office in Cass Lake. The case in which the alleged crime took place was that of Albert Prieuers against Ellen Scott, involving a homestead in Itasca county. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and gave a bond for his appearance in Duluth at the term of federal court.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands suffer from sick or weakened kidneys without knowing the cause. If you have backache, headache, urinary disorders, look to your kidneys—give the help the kidneys need. Mrs. R. F. Scott, 302 Front St., Baker City, Ore., says: "For twelve years I was a sufferer from kidney trouble. My back ached terribly, the kidney secretions were in awful condition and my bladder badly inflamed. I grew so bad I was bedfast and was so thin I looked like a skeleton. Doctors failed to help me and I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me permanently and I am now as well and strong as anyone."

The Summer Toast.

In all her business life the bit of work she is now completing has been most pleasant, says the free lance stenographer.

"I have been typewriting toasts on paper napkins," she said. "A society of club women who have planned to do a lot of outdoor entertaining this summer expect to use thousands of paper napkins, and I have had the job of typewriting the toast on each napkin. It is a pretty idea, and I tried to meet the charming sentiment of the ladies halfway by using a good non-copying ink, but in spite of that precaution I am afraid that many a guest will leave the lunch table with a purple ink smudge on her face."

Eat for the Fun of It.

According to Mr. Herbert W. Fisher in World's Work food is of no use to us unless we enjoy it. Mr. Fisher does not, however, recommend us to be gluttons. He says the less we eat the more pleasure we shall get. The principle is that if we eat little we shall taste much. And the taste of food, not the amount, is, after all, the lure of it.

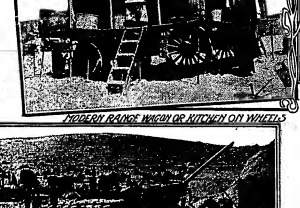
HARVEST TIME ON THE FARM

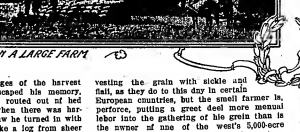
CONVEYING THE SACKED GRAIN TO THE CARS OR ELEVATOR

THE most vivid recollections of every man and woman brought up on a farm must be of the golden harvest time. Even the persons whose farm experience has been limited to protracted visits in the country are likely to retain mental pictures of the gathering of the grain as the most lasting impressions of such intervals—provided, of course, they remained in the rural domain long enough to witness all phases of the harvest-time activity and long enough to contrast the rush and bustle of this busy period with the more placid existence of more normal times "down on the farm."



The average city dweller whose early years were spent on a farm harks back to nothing so fondly as the picturesque annual drama of the bringing in the sheaves. And the city dweller—country-bred or not—indicates the fascination of this phase of farm operations by his longing to "pitch hay" when he invades the agricultural region for his vacation. That is, he is enthusiastic about pitching hay until he tries it. Perhaps he would not deem it quite so much fun if he had to do it for a livelihood and if he could not quit his job whenever he happened to get tired.

So, too, the farmer boy, transformed into a city dweller who looks back so longingly at the good old harvest times on the old homestead, is very probably after the fashion of mankind, remembering the picasant things only and forgetting the disadvantages of the harvest season. It has quite escaped his memory, most likely, how he was routed out of bed at daybreak or earlier when there was harvesting to be done and how he turned in with the chickens and slept like a log from sheer exhaustion. He has lost all recollection of the nerve-racking anxiety, shared by every member of the family, lest it rain before the harvesting was finished, and he passes lightly over the reminiscences of those weary hours under a scorching sun with no protection save a broad-brimmed straw hat, its lofty peak filled with lettuce to help break the force of old Sol's shafts.

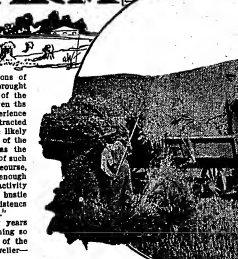


Harvest time on the farm, past and present, marks the climax of the year in hard work and in worry—in short, in nerve and muscular strain generally. Of course, it will be understood that reference is made to the season of the grain harvest. Th he sure, there are what might be termed harvest seasons at intervals all through the summer, from the time the strawberries are ripe in the spring, only the farmer never thinks of dignifying the garnerlog of these crops by the name of harvest. In the eyes of the tiller of the soil harvest time means the crucial juncture for gathering the grain—particularly the wheat—and storing it away in barns and elevators, or maybap loading it direct on the railroad cars that are to carry it in the four mills or to the ship which will carry it overseas to supply the breadeaters of Europe and the Orient.

In the old days practically every farm to the land had its harvest time and it held the secret of the profits of the whole year's work on the farm. That this is true no looger is due simply in that tendency in specieliszatim which has invaded the farmer's occupatim as it has every other field. Nowadays wo have chicken farms nood truck farms and fruit farms and other kinds of farms, where attention is so concentrated upon the one product in hand that the proprietare do not raise enough grain for the needs of their own stock. On such special farms the once universal "harvest time" is unknown. But in make up for them he have vast farms in the west and on the Pacific slope, where wheat is the product specialized, and in consequence we see on these big farms harvesting operations which in magnitude and picturesque features an far overshadow the corresponding operations in the old-fashioned farm east of the Mississippi that there is literally no comparison.

One odd thing about harvesting in that almost all methods are yet in vogue in one section or another nf the country. The explanatim is found, of course, in the fact that the first cost and the operating expense nf the great steam harvesting outfits designed for the bonanza farms of the west are such as to make them impracticable for the farmers controlling small areas. Consequently, these farmers are getting along, and getting along very well, with the old-time equipment, modernized by the introductim of some of the improvemcnts devised especially for the big mower machines. We are not any longer harvesting the grain with sickle and flail, as they do to this day in certain European countries, but the small farmer is, perforce, putting a great deel more mennal labor into the gathering of his grain than is the owner nf one of the west's 5,000-acre wheet fields, where combination harvesters, drawn by tractim engines or 40 or 50 horses, perform autmatically every functim from cuttiog the stalks no they stond in the field to delivering to the waiting wagons the separated, cleaned and sacked wheat, all ready for the market, without the touch of a human hand.

MODERN RANGE WAGON OR KITCHEN ON WHEELS



HARVEST TIME ON A LARGE FARM

Under the old conditions' harvest time on the farm meant hard work for the women folks as well as for the men and this is still the case just in proportion es the old-time-conditions yet prevail. The burden of responsibility that fell upon the farmer's wife and daughters was that of feeding the harvest hands. Th he sure the wife had help, for her neighbors all pitched in and helped even eh their husbande and brothers, on e similar cooperative basis, were assisting the farmer fa getting in his grain—a service that would be repaid in kind an the turn of each cemetim the round of harvesting activities that embraced the whole countryside. Under this plan, when harvest time meant n continual succession of neighborhood gatherings, there were compensations of the farmers' wives in the apportunities for gnasipy gatherings that went the time-honored sewing circles one better, whereas the farmer girls might behold romences grow under their eyes as the lads, fresh from the harvest fields, had most convincing evidance as to the prowess in cookery of the local belles.

As a development nf this system, that was scarcely an improvement from the feminine standpoint, came the plan of harvesting by means of hired hends—possibly through the medium of n "crew" that accompanied a portible steam harvester that made its rounds from farm to farm. Under this plan, which is yet the eprovered one in most sections, the farmer's wife and daughters have to get up three meals a day for a dozen or a score of husky harvest hands and yet they are not so sure nf assistance from the other women of the neighborhood as wen the case when these letter had no similar duties at home through the presence at the mes fnik at the common harvesting rendervous. Worse yet, the young ladies have scarcely the interest that was manifest when the volunteer harvesters to be served were the eligibles of the neighborhood instead nf, as now, nomadic laborers or, at best, college boys working for funds to put them through school.

Latterly there has been some relief from that phase of the harvesting system which has meant so much hard work for the fair sex. It has come through the introduction of cook wagons nr kitchens on wheels which accompany the big threshing outfits from farm to farm and serve food to the harvest hands right at the scene of their work—thereby saving, by the way, the time that was formerly spent in going to and from the farm house. This labor was a considerable item if the farm house was located several miles from the harvest field in which the men happened to be working at noon. These kitchen cars have been in use to some extent for several years past, but great improvements have been made in them nf late. There are now provided for the use of the big traveling harvesting crews "range wagons," with several of the largest size kitchen ranges mounted on a truck, and more wonderful yet is the "steam cooker," which looks very much like a fire engine, but which performs marvels in quick cooking. Why, in the early morning for instence, coffee will be ready for all the members of the largest harvesting force within twelve minutes nf the time the fires are lighted. This plan nf cooking for the harvesting crews has virtually become imperative on the large farms of the west, California and the Pacific northwest, owing to the immense force nf men needed to garner the grain on these heroniel estates of the "wheat empire." On one nf these big farms in Oklahoma, which may be cited as representative, there are in nse twenty-two harvesters and binders, each of which averags a cut of 250 acres of wheet per season. Similarly, on some of the Dakota farms one may see in season anywhere from twenty to forty machines in one far-flung line, charging into the golden sea of undulating grain. Merely the drivere of those machines make a goodly force, to say nothing of the other members nf the harvest crew, and when anywhere from fifty to one hundred horses are employed in harvesting operetions, the care of these animels is in itself something of a chore.

"BUNGING IN THE SHEAVES"

Perhaps the most picturesque feature of harvesting on the big farms beyond the Missouri river comes when the operation is carried on nt night by means of the illumination of torches end locomotive headlights, supplementing the light nf the moon, if the latter be available. Drought and other causes may impel the western farmer to work his harvest crews double time in order to hurry in the sheaves, but on e rule the grain grower in these favored sections of the country is not constantly menaced by thunder storms such es have, from time out of mind, caused anxiety to every eastern farming community until the precious grain is safely in the barn. The assurance nf edequate help in harvest time is one nf the big problems of almost every farmer east or west who raises much grein. The improved harvesting machines thet cut down the number of men required for the task have helped some, of course, but it requires a certain number of men to operate the machines and in times of prosperity when labor is scarce the farmer often finds thet hewest harvested in heen made in his season's prnfits by the fancy prices he ben had to pay for the hired hends to hendle the crop.

WHEN THE SHAH TRAVELED

Each time the shah of Persia went in Europe, where he spent large sums, he procured the money needed for his journey not only by raising a loan generally in Russia, but also by another method, which was both ingenious and businesslike.

"Before leaving his possessions," writes M. Pnoll in McClure's, "he summoned his chief officers of state—ministers, provincial governors and the like—and proposed the following bargain to them: Those who wished to form part of his suite must pay him a sum of money which he fixed in accordance with the importance of their functions. It varied between 500 and 200,000 francs. In return, he authorized them to recoup themselves in any way they pleased.

"Here was 'fnd the explanation of the large number of persons who accompanied the shah on his travels, and the quaint and unexpected duties they bore, such as that of 'minister of the duck yard' (though Persia has never owned a navy), and one still more extraordinary, that of 'attorney in the heir apparent.'

"Although they sometimes had romantic snuls, they invariably had terribly practical minds. Eager to recover their outlay as quickly as possible, they practiced on a huge scale and without scruple or hesitation what 'd may describe as the bonne or commission system. This explained how on each of his trips to France the shah was able to spend from eight to twelve million francs in pocket money.

"He always carried a loaded pistol in his trousers pocket, though he never used it. On one of his journeys in France his eyes took it into his head to make a high court judical walk before him when he left the theater carrying a revolver behind at his peconiale eighteen (when he gathered to ede him come nnt. 'As soon as I see this I run up to the threatening bodyguard . . .

"Put that revolver away,' I said. It is not the custom here.'"

PRISONER OF WEALTH

Her Fortune a Burden to Mrs. Russell Sage.

Beggars Force Her Into Retirement and Changs Her From a Sweet, Kindly Woman to One of Suspicion.

New York.—One of the most pathetic figures in the world today is Mrs. Russell Sage, upon whom the fortune left her by her husband imposes a fearful burden. There is scarcely a day that she does not weep, one of her intimate friends tells us. She sets and cries nt the intolerable burden of having $65,000,000 on her shoulders, at the task of distributing that huge fortune in the way that will do the most good. She is 80 years old and has a New England conscience. She wants to do just the right thing with it all, and it requires an emount of thought and study and imposes a feeling of responsibility that is hard on an old woman who only wents a quiet corner to spend her few remaining years in.

Mrs. Sage has aged very much since her husband's death. She has grown thin, pale, hent and wrinkled. Aside from the noturel grief over Mr. Sage's death, Mrs. Sage was plunged almost instently into a storm of appeels which amounted to a persecution. Her mail for some years before Mr. Sage's death had amounted to between 40 and 50 letters a day. It leaped instently to 600 a day, and the entire surplus was appeals for money. Within two months efter Mr. Sage's death 7,000 letters were carted away from her house unopened. Two secretaries work night and day almost to handle Mrs. Sage's private mail. If she attempted to read 10 per cent of it personelly she would he ehle to do nothing else.

At first she tried conscientiously to look it over herself. She was astonished end disgusted et some of it. Before Mr. Sage's body was cold in its coffin she received a letter from a New York nen whom she never had seen asking her to send him a check for $5,000 by return mail, and he was kind enough to inclose a stamped envelope for reply. She never asked for advice es to the disposal of this fortuee, yet within the first two months of her widowhood she received letters from more than 2,000 different mes, lostructing her how to give away her money so as to do the most good.

The letters that reelly effected Mrs. Sage at this time were pethetic appeals for help from individuals. Many of these were to ell appearances genuine, the appeals of sore and imcrrant persecns, suffering in went and hardship, and pathetically confident. That the kind-hearted woman who had more money then she knew what to do with would give them the little that would make them happy. Some of these letters distressed Mrs. Sage greetly; but they came not only from every state in the Union, but from foreign countries. Hed she responded to them she would have dissipated her entire fortune in cents or sacks to individuale eli over the world. So finally Mrs. Sage gave up her mail. Now a letter which is manifestly not a personal friend is given her, but nothing else reaches her eye.

It is not only impossible to reach Mrs. Sage by letter—it has become one of the impossible things to see her. Mrs. Sage has been one of the most approchable of women. Not a trace of snobbery or purse pride is to be found in her make-up. A plain, old-fashioned villege woman she started life, and she has ee sadly se her own hime as if she hed been the wife of a clerk instead of a multimillionaire.

Some one wrote a book once on Prisoners of Poverty. Mrs. Sage is a Prisoner of Wealth. Behind this human rampart she sits, efraid that some one may reach to torment her.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

New York May Establish Tramp Colony

NEW YORK.—The tramp evil in this state may soon be solved, if bill provides not only for the appointment of a commission to inquire carefully into the conditions of vagrancy, but also makes an appropriation for the purchase of 500 acres of land upon which to establish a tramp colony. That there is need of some more adequate method of dealing with the vagrant class than has formerly obtained is known to every person, and the establishment of a farm where vagrants might be employed and reclaimed is believed by those who have made a study of the subject to be the proper solution of the difficulty.

The vagrants now in this state would form a population as large as that of the city of Albany. The jails, penitentiaries and almshouses are put to an expense of $2,000,000 annually in endeavoring to cope with the problem which has arisen through the existence of this undesirable element.

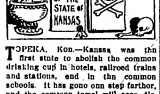
The bill proposes as a solution the establishment of a labor colony. The latter, briefly, is a state owned colony for the detention, reformation and instruction in agriculture and other industrial occupations of persons committed by magistrates as vagrants and tramps.

In Switzerland there is such a colony, located at Witzwil, in the canton of Berne, and it has proved most successful. Practically all of the work is done by the inmates. Not only is agriculture carried on, but other enterprises are also conducted. The buildings of the institution have been erected by the inmates and all of the furniture is made by them. They even make wagons and carriages and the various tools and appliances used on the farm.

With the establishment of such a colony the vagrant in New York would find himself between the horns of an uncomfortable dilemma—either detention at the farm colony or the giving a wide berth to the state in which he now is found most often.

Millionaire Gives a Swimming Party

MACON, GA.—The smart set of Macon is agog because of the fact that 20 young men and 20 young women, all promiscuous socially, passed a whole night in a swimming pool attired only in bathing costumes. The costumes were of the daintiest, and also of the scantiest, and the temperature of the swimming pool was pleasant, but the 20 couples did not enjoy themselves. They passed the night in abbreviated costumes in the pool, not because they wanted to, but because they had to.



W. D. Billingslea, millionaire, with a magnificent home to which a spacious swimming pool is attached, has been giving swimming parties during hot weather, which have been attended by the young men and women of the smart set. Billingslea on this occasion invited 20 men and 20 women of the most exclusive set to his swimming party.

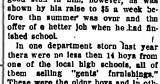
The couples splashed about in the water, flirted a bit and then, at any rate, there some more until after midnight. Then some one noticed the lateness of the hour, and a rush was made for the dressing rooms. Then it was discovered that the clothes of the 40 had been taken, and that the swimming pool had been locked. Billingslea himself was one of the victims.

Efforts to make themselves heard were in vain, and the 20 men and the 20 girls were forced to spend the night in the swimming pool clad in their scanty costumes.

Billingslea thinks some one played a practical joke on his guests, but he is mad clear through, and has offered a large reward for discovery of the person who stole the clothes and locked the door. At any rate, there will be no more swimming parties in Macon for the present.

State of Kansas Bars Public Towels

TOPEKA, Kan.—Kansas was the first state to abolish the common drinking cup in hotels, railroad trains and stations, and in the common schools. It has gone one step farther, and the common towel will soon disappear from all public places. After an exhaustive investigation the chemists and bacteriologists of the Kansas board of health recommended that the common roller towel be forbidden as dangerous to the people of the state and the board adopted the order that the stiffly starched boarding house towel be cut up into individual towels, and everyone have a clean face wipe whenever the exigencies of the occasion demanded a facial bath.



At a meeting of the board an investigation of the roller towel was ordered. Towels were collected in the hotels and public schools of several cities of the state. Railroad trains were boarded in different lines, and the roller towels in the wash rooms confiscated. These were taken to the state's health laboratories at the state university and examined.

In some instances, the bacterial count ran as high as 1,322,000 bacteria to a square centimeter of the towel.

The order means that all the schools will furnish paper towels for the children. These come in rolls and are about as cheap for 100 towels as laundering one towel. The railroads probably will put in paper towels or have individual towels for rent, and the hotels are expected to put individual towels into the washrooms.

Chicago Boys Work During Vacation

CHICAGO.—With the closing of the schools it is estimated that there are about 100,000 boys between the ages of 11 and 20 years who look for summer jobs. That is, there are 100,000 this first week. When the second week comes along there are about 50,000 who still think they must be at work, about 20,000 the third week and about 15,000 who retain their determination throughout the summer.

The average high school youth of this year expects to earn at least $10 a week to start, with a raise at the end of every fortnight. Alas! it seems employers have not the proper respect for their culture. "Out of these boys, the really valuable ones, get over their self-esteem after being rebuffed a few times.

One high school student, who had completed his sophomore year, and who during the winter had been one of the most popular boys in the school, started looking for a $10 job and ended collecting bundles in a department store for $3.50 a week. He had some good stuff in him, however, as was shown by his raise to $5 a week before the summer was over and the offer of a better job when he had finished school.

In one department store last year there were no less than 14 boys from one of the local high schools, all of them selling "gents' furnishings." These were the older boys and in other stores there were high school "men" doing everything from collecting bundles, wrapping them, helping with stock, doing the work of four assistant office boys, to jobs paying $10 a week, a remarkably high wage for the inexperienced youth of tender years.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

HAS UNWATERED THE MAINE

General Bixby, chief of the army engineers, who has had charge of the unwatering of the Maine, recently expressed the opinion that the destruction of the battleship was caused by the explosion of her magazines. No external explosion, in his judgment, could have caused the conditions observed in the remains of the vessel. But General Bixby added that the primary cause of the explosion would likely never be known, as the mystery of the Maine, unlike the hull itself, may never be revealed. General Bixby said that unless the fragment of a torpedo could be found there is no way of connecting an outside agency with the blowing up of the vessel.

The destruction to the vessel was such, says General Bixby, and the deterioration has been so great that it is impossible to tell whether the ship was blown up from a force within or without. The greatest force, however, was from the inside, indicating that the forward magazine had exploded. Whether this was from a sympathetic explosion caused by a torpedo from the outside may forever remain a mystery.

MAN AT THE CUSTOMS GATE

William Loeb, Jr., is the collector of the Port of New York. He is the Man at the Gate. Against him come yearly 300,000 tourists and a million immigrants in the fleet of 5,000 ships. All manner of merchandise goes through his gate—more than a thousand million dollars worth in a year. This man has to sort it and appraise it and tax it if it is taxable. Of all the people and the merchandise that enter the United States seven-tenths come through the port of New York and Loeb stands there with a staff to take the toll for the government on all that stupendous amount of traffic.

Although he has been no more than 27 months in office he has increased the gettings of the government by more than $15,000,000. He has enforced the commandment "Thou shalt not smuggle" as fully on the rich as upon the poor. He has locked up nearly a dozen persistent smugglers in Federal prisons and has humbled the pride of a hundred deftest tourists by having them arrested and heavily fined.

Mr. Loeb says smuggling, even by rich people, is a crime—just as much a crime as counterfeiting or passing bad checks. The law that declares it to be a crime is as plain as daylight.

FOSTER AND HIS MODEST FEE

John W. Foster, ex-secretary of state and known the world over through his connection with the diplomatic corps of the United States, has come into the limelight through the publication of alleged facts concerning the collection of a claim against the Chinese government. It was the claim of the heirs of Frederick T. Ward, an American soldier of fortune, who was killed in 1862 while in the military service of China. China paid to the United States more than $24,000,000 indemnity for outrages during the Boxer outbreak. Of this less than $11,000,000 was awarded to claimants by this government and the remainder was returned to China with the exception of $2,000,000 reserved for belated claims.

Mr. Foster received for this work a fee of $180,000. The matter is now in the hands of a congressional committee for investigation. The amount paid the claimants was $368,237.

Through his influence with the state department and our minister to China, as well as with Chinese officials whom he had known when on a diplomatic mission to China in connection with the settlement of the war between China and Japan, Mr. Foster persuaded the Chinese government to consent to the payment of this claim out of the $2,000,000 reserve, though the cash was not associated with the Boxer claims.

TO PUBLISH A WORLD PAPER

Another movement is now under way to bring the nations of the world into closer and more friendly relations. The International Journal, soon to be published in Paris and which will essentially be an international organ, and it is thought will be a long step in promoting harmony and friendship among nations.

The promotor of this new step in journalism is Theodore Stanton, son of the late Elizabeth Cady Stanton, one of the noted women of her time and a pioneer in the cause of woman suffrage. He has sounded the sentiment in the various capitals of Europe relative to the project and has found it favorable.

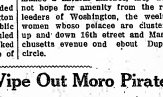
While French will be the language mainly used in the publication, other languages will be employed. The paper will have no policy, in the restricted sense of the term, but will aim to publish truthfully and accurately both sides of all questions of world-wide interest. All interesting matters will not be kept within, but everything will be examined from the standpoint of international importance.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Influence of Money in Capital Clubs

WASHINGTON.—The public rebuke of President Taft, in which he stigmatised certain persons as "smell-bred and narrow-minded critics," following the withdrawal of names of men prominent in the political world up for membership in the ultra-exclusive Metropolitan club, has centered the attention of the country on the snobbishness of Washington.

Close observers assert that the impetus given to existing social conditions dates from the Spanish-American war. Before the treaty of Paris the millionaire residents of Washington could be counted on the fingers. Now all the rich and retired, the famous or otherwise, the representatives of whiskey, sugar, tobacco—every kind of trust—has his palace in an ultra-exclusive residential section and the womenkind set up to be social leaders.



Money and influence in the gilded throng is the test which Washington now applies to every ambitious public man and his wife. The clubs are ruled by money, and men who have balked the politicel or financial schemes of those who are high in Washington circles are punished if they seek the companionship in clubs such as they would obtain in their home cities.

One of the most exclusive clubs in Washington keeps on its rolls a man who deserted his wife and six children to elope with the wife of a fellow-member of the same club, while it refused admission to a man who had defeated the ambitions of certain high officials.

Time was that when a new cabinet official, a new senator or even a member of the lower house came to Washington, some courtesy was accorded by society. Now that richly clad dame inquires about the home status of the raw officials and if the report is not up to the standard, Madame Cabinet Officer or Senator or Representative will have a lonesome time, unless she has some personal friends in the great realm.

The president and his wife will be courteous. They will follow the traditions, and will ask them to the functions decreed by a century of usage. But except to visit among those whom their husband's rank makes a natural alliance, they need not hope for amenity from the real leaders of Washington, the wealthy women whose palaces are clustered up and down 16th street and Massachusetts avenue and about Dupont circle.

Government to Wipe Out Moro Pirates

IT is somewhat startling to learn that piracy as bold and fierce as in the days of Captain Kidd still flourishes under the American flag. The Moro phrates of the Philippines have begun their attacks on peaceful merchant ships once more. A patrol of American gunboats was maintained over the Moros in the Sulu seas until recently, and withdrawn in the belief that they had been pacified. The Moros believed that the Americans were afraid of them, and piracy immediately flamed out afresh. Now the patrol will be re-established.

The Moloy pirate of the eastern seas is perhaps the most notorious of all freebooting types. He excels Captain Kidd in reckless daring and ruthless cruelty.

Instead of sailing boldly forth in fleets of outrigger boats, after the old time style, with a crew numbering hundreds of armed and intrepid warriors, the Moro pirate of today establishes headquarters on some remote island, and therefrom as a base of operations conducts furtive raids. If successful, he becomes bolder, and ventures further afield in quest of booty. Finding a ship in trouble, he attacks it and murders everybody on board. Coming across a village that looks peacefully inviting, he seeks it, mesmerizing all the adult male inhabitants.

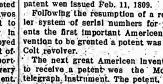
Then, with his load of loot, he does not return to the place from which he started, but seeks another island.

Committee Is to Sift Indian Charges

THE lid on the seething cauldron of Indian affairs is loose. It is to be taken off without further delay by Chairman Graham, of the committee on expenditures in the interior department.

For years there has been endless rumor and vague accusations of graft, trickery, jokers in legislation, of appropriations nominally designed for the Indians, but actually going to land grabbing rings; of looting of the Indian estates all over the country, of waste in maintaining the Indians and policies that tend to pauperize them.

The facts are to be dug out. If the charges are true, they are to get light. If not, they are to be disproved. The investigators expect to stir up a very bad odor.



Where do the millions appropriated each year in the Indian bill go? It has been constantly charged that they go in large part to about everybody except the Indians. For instance, $500,000 was appropriated in the last bill for irrigation of the Flathead reservation lands. If the stories now being told before the probere are true, this money is to go used, not for the Indians, but for lands that have been taken from the Indians and are held by speculators. The Gila irrigation project is alleged to present a somewhat similar situation.

Another case that the committe is going to probe is that of the Crow reservation in Montana. A case of Ute Indians of Utah is going to be taken up in the effort to locate responsibility for the woes of this tribe.

Uncle Sam Issues a Million Patents

THE United States government will soon issue its one millionth patent for an invention. Commissioner of Patents Edward Bruce Moore has been looking forward for some time to a celebration of the issuance of patent No. 1,000,000. It was his hope that this distinguished number should go to some epoch-making invention.

The United States patent office will be 122 years old when the coveted number is issued. The bureau was established in 1790 as an adjunct to the treasury department. Early in 1836 there was a fire which destroyed not only the building of the patent office, but every record, all the important drawings and papers, and every model owned by the government. Prior to the fire the office had issued 9,337 patents.

The first strictly American invention to receive a patent from the original United States patent office was the cotton gin. The patent was issued March 14, 1794, to Eli Whitney. The number of the Whitney patent was not preserved, neither was the number of Fulton's steamboat, for which a patent was issued Feb. 11, 1809.

Following the resumption of a regular system of serial numbers for patents the first important American invention to be granted a potent was the Colt revolver.

The next great American invention to receive a patent was the Morse telegraph instrument. The patent, No. 1,647, was issued June 20, 1840. The patent issued to Charles Goodyear, June 15, 1844, acknowledged his invention of the process of the vulcanization of India rubber. The basic patent of the pneumatic air brake was issued to George W. Westinghouse April 13, 1869. It bore serial number 88,929.

SAVING AND EARNING.

A Chicago millionaire came to this country in 1871, with 12 cents in his pocket. The other day, referring to it, he said he held down this rule: "Never to be out of work and never to spend as much as you earn." I was that rule that made him a millionaire, and that is the kind of millionaire that is entitled to honor. His idea is that it is good for a man to save, for economy is a healthy habit, says the Ohio State Journal. As a rule men can live on half they spend, have better health, and can do more work. Let a man sit down and make a list of what he needs, not scantily but bountifully, and he will be surprised how many things he can cut out and yet keep body and mind in fine condition There are many things that one buys that are the objects of his fancy. He sees them and wants them; if he didn't see them he wouldn't want them. We once heard of a man who would not go to market, because he said, he wanted to buy everything, and succeeded in buying much he did not need. It is possible to live well on meals that average only 10 cents per capita. In a school on the west side they do it, and that little club of teachers are hearty and happy as robins in a cherry tree. We must get out of the idea that great chunks of heavy food are required for energy. As a rule they reduce it.

The bureau of animal industry has toviced what appears to a be a breakfast food for horses, with the purpose to reduce the high cost of their living. The substitute for oats is composed of cocoanut and peanut meals and it can be produced for $15 less a ton than whole oats cost. It appears that the horse's experimented with did not take eagerly to the new ration at first; quite as human beings used to find their breakfast foods eleger until a taste was expressly cultivated. The horses had to get the habit without the encouragement which a liberal application of cream and sugar affords the bipeds. In duo time, however, the animals recovered their form on the novel diet. The ration must be adequestionably justified, nevertheless, before it can be commended to those who truly love a horse. It is not the animal's fault that oats have become a luxury. Human beings have been induced to eat its natural fodder in enormous quantities and that is the reason.

A German expedition which went to German East Africo to scoreh for dinosourin remains reports that discovery of bones longer than any heretofore existing in other parts of the world. One specimen which bos been secured is a humerus 6 feet 10½ inches in length. This would indicate a thigh bono of nine feet. Heretofore the diplodocus has been considered the great-granddaddy of colossal land animals of all times. But the length of the humerus of the diplodocuscus was only three feet eleven inches. It is very safe to say of the prehistoric geological ages that "there were giants in those days."

A telephons has been installed near the pulpit of a Kansas church to enable the congregation to hear the sermon without going to church. However, it is a difficult feat to sleep and hold a receiver to one's ear at the same time.

The American bullfrog is to be introduced into Japan by a young Japanese who was graduated from the American agricultural college this year. Choruses of large, healthy American frogs, having "To-get-'i-kago" from the marshes should add much to the charm of Japanese life and strengthen the ties between the two countries.

Still another doctor is added to the list of those who are being sued for sewing up various articles in the bodies of their patients operated upon. In this last case it is forceps. This sort of thing is apt to make patients nervous aver tho prospect of having a junk department added to the original plan of their interior economy.

It is pointed out that there is no danger of overdoing the apple raising business, as the frequent crop failures keep down the production. Yet this does not seem to be a good argument to address to prospective but hesitating investors.

RECIPROCITY PASSES!

LONGEST CONGRESSIONAL FIGHT FOR YEARS IS ENDED.

FINAL PASSAGE BY 2 TO 1 VOTE

La Follette, in Plea Against Bill, Says Taft Seeks Favor and Scores Democrat's Attitude.

Washington, D. C. — The Canadian trade agreement bill passed the senate by a vote of fully two to one.

The most bitter fight for legislation waged by an administration in many years came to a close when the Canadian reciprocity bill, an issue before two sessions of congress, was passed by the senate by a decisive vote.

This vote included all but four or five of the Democrats and also a good many so-called "stalwart" Republicans. Opposed to the bill were most of the Republican insurgents who come from northwestern states, a few of the Republican regulars and a handful of Democrats.

The measure has not been changed in any respect by the senate and when it is signed by the speaker and the vice president it will be dispetched to the president.

Senator La Follette featured in the final speechmaking with a vigorous arraignment of President Taft and the bill. He attacked the Democrats of the senate on the ground that they were deliberately trying for political purposes and pointed out that the Democrats had consistently voted down amendments proposing general tariff reductions. Their excuse, he said, had been that the president would not sign the reciprocity bill if it was encumbered with any general tariff amendments.

Several amendments to the reciprocity bill were defeoted, including those by Mr. Bristow to reduce duties on lead bullion and lead paints and similar lead products and by Mr. Townsend for an agreement with Canada to enlarge the St. Lawrence waterway.

Senator Smith, of Michigon, attacking the bill, declored Canada would not be the only menace to American industries. He said British capitol in great obundance in waiting to be poured into Canada when the reciprocity agreement is ratified and that from the advantageous ground across the border British manufacturers would flood this conutry with competitive goods."

There were twenty-fivo amendments to the measure acted upon the last day. Many of these proposed to affix general tariff chonges to the agreement. President Taft insisted that any chnnges of this character treat on the defeat of the entire reciprocity agreement with Conoda.

The pending amendments included the La Follette amendments to the cotton and woolen schedules, the Nelson amendments restoring half the duty on agricultural products, the Clapp amendments enlarging the free list and removing all restrictions on the importation of paper, amendments by Senators Crawford and Gore removing the duty on fresh meats and several similor amendments by Senators Cummins, Bristow and others. All were killed.

Party lines disappeared during the consideration of tho bill. Tariff affiliations, to outward appearance, have been completely chonged. President Taft has had the general support of the Democrats and of the Republican regulars and in this union of forces he has found support so that the bill was not in donger of defeat or of serious amendment since the session began.

SUGAR TRUST AIDED HARRISON.

Former Counsel For Combina Says It Gave $10,000.

New York, N. Y. — The American Sugar Refining Company contributed $10,000 to help Benjamin Harrison in one of his campaigns for the presidency against Grover Clevcland. The contribution was told of by John E. Parsons, former attorney for the company. In his testimony before the congressional committee which is investigating the affairs of the so-called trust. He could not remember whether it was the first or the second Harrison campaign.

FIXING OF PRICES POSSIBLE

Attorney General, in Duluth Address, Proposes Powers Like Interstate Commerce Board—Says Law of Supply and Demand Nullified.

Duluth, Minn.—Attorney General Wickersham, speaking before the Minnesota Bar association here, advocated a federal commission for the regulation of corporations in the same way as the interstate commerce board now curbs the railroads.

The cabinet member declared also that the duty of fixing prices of commodities might devolve upon this commission, though he expressed some doubt of the practicability of this phase of the plan.

The law of supply and demand, Mr. Wickersham said, no longer controls prices in the United States. For years, he said, the prices in all the great staple industries have been fixed by agreement between the principal producers and not by a normal play of free competition.

An interstate commission, the attorney general added, would prevent violations of the anti-trust laws and aid business men to maintain a continued status of harmony with the requirements of the statutes.

"That further regulation of corporations carrying on commerce among the states may be necessary," he said, "in coming to be a matter of current comment. It has been openly advocated recently by representatives of some of the largest combinations of capital, probably as a means of salvation and to preserve under government supervision great organizations whose continued existence is menaced by the recent interpretation of the Sherman act, the disintegration of which would be attended, with heavy loss. To arch it is a case of 'any port in a shipwreck.' Better continued cooperative life, even under a powerful master, than disseminated properties and segregated activities without constant government supervision.

"But there are other reasons for such regulation. The federal department of justice is not organized or equipped to maintain constant supervision and control of business combinations. It deals only with cases of violation of the law. The activities of an administrative board or commission would be directed to preventing such violations and in aiding business men to maintain a continued status of harmony with the requirements of law.

"Whether such a federal industrial commission should have power to regulate prices is, of course, a matter for early venture. The expense has been at the rate of $4,000 a year, the greater part of which represents lavestment in-pigs.

Peoria, Ill.—Robert Carruthers, at one time the highest-salaried baseball player in the world, is dying at a hospital in this city from a nervous breakdown.

PLAGUE PERIL LESS

NO NEW CASES ARE FOUND IN QUARANTINE IN NEW YORK.

Port Health Officer Declares Cholera Situation In General Is Very Favorable.

New York.—The cholera situation in this port is looked upon by Health Officer Dr. Alvah H. Doty, with increasing favor.

He issued the following bulletin: "At Hoffman island conditions are satisfactory. There have been no further cases of cholera among the passengers or crew of the steamer Moltke detained there. Reports from Swinburne island hospital state there have been no further deaths.

"The condition of the passengers and crew of the steamer Perugia is satisfactory. On the whole the general condition of the cholera situation looks very favorable."

How different it is to exclude cholera was brought out in testimony heard at the investigation of Doty's administration.

Emil Ledgerr, in charge of the steerage department of the Hamburg-American line, testified that the first case of cholera on board the Moltke did not develop until 22 days after the passengers had first been quarantined in Hazy.

Ledsrer had this from the ship's doctor and from the Italian naval attegeon detailed to the ship.

Washington.—To help the New York authorities in the fight against cholera invasions from Europe Passed Assistant Surgeon Von Ezdorf, one of the experts of the public health service, has been sent from Washington.

WALL PAPER MEN INDICTED

Members of Alleged Trust Are Accused of Violating Sherman Law in Cleveland.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Four indictments were returned by the federal grand jury, which has been investigating an alleged wall paper trust. The indictments charge conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman law.

The indicted persons are officials of wall paper jobbing houses. They are: J. B. Pearce, president of the J. B. Pearce Wall Paper company of Cleveland; Norton Newcomb of St. Louis, Edward P. Stannell of Chicago and C. C. Aler of Columbus, O. Bond was fixed at $5,000 in each case.

The specific charge against the indicted men is that they met in Cleveland May 30, 1910, and after a secret session, notified wall paper manufacturers of the country that if they sold wall paper to [illegible] 10 cent stores the jobbers would boycott them.

SECOND GUNBOAT TO HAITI

Americans and Their Interests Seriously Threatened by Revolution Against Simon.

Washington.—At the request of American Minister Furniss at Port au Prince, the United States will send another gunboat to Haitien waters to protect American lives and interests, seriously threatened by the revolution against President Simon. The second warship will go to Port au Prince, the capital. The gunboat Petrel already is at Port Liberte on the north coast.

Mexico City.—The police have received information of an alleged plot to assassinate President de la Barra. The president discredits the report, but detectives are investigating.

DENIES HINES TALE

ALDRICH SAYS HE DID NOT PROMISE TAFT'S AID IN LORIMER'S ELECTION.

HE WAS 'NOT OBJECTIONABLE'

Former Rhode Island Senator Refutes Much of the Evidence Given by the Chicago Lumberman Before Senate Investigating Committee.

Washington.—Former United States Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island flatly contradicted at the Lorimer committee investigation the story given by Edward Hines of Chicago that Aldrich had asked him to urge Lorimer to become a senatorial candidate.

In substance, Aldrich's testimony was to the effect that Hines approached him and asked him what the administration thought of Lorimer, and Aldrich informed him that Lorimer was "not objectionable" to President Taft.

A cross-examination brought an admission from C. F. Wiehe, brother-in-law of Hines, that the mysterious Robert Shields of Superior, Wis., who travels the country over refreshing the memories of witnesses prio to their appearance here, was retained for his own agency, $4,000,000 of insurance on the Hines Lumber company's properties, has "nothing" for the concern and was active in the election of Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin.

This is what former Senator Aldrich accomplished during his short appearance on the witness stand:

Denied that he sent for Edward Hines in the spring of 1901.

Denied that he asked Hines to see Congressman Lorimer and impress on him "that the administration was very anxious to have a Republican senator elected in Illinois as soon as possible."

Denied that he told Hines there were several important tariff schedules coming up in the senate for the passage of which it was very important to have every available republican vote.

Denied that he sent for Hines and asked him to accompany him to the White House to discuss the Illinois situation with the president.

Denied that he told Hines the president and he (Aldrich) thought Lorimer could be elected and again asked Hines to urge on Lorimer "the necessity of becoming a candidate and doing all he could to be elected at the earliest moment possible."

Denied that he sent any message whatever either to Lorimer or to Governor Deneen concerning the election.

Mr. Aldrich thought he had participated in three conversations with Hines.

THREE BANDITS ROB TRAIN

North Coast Limited Held Up In North Dakota—Passengers Are Relieved of $500.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Train No. 2, the eastbound North Coast Limited on the Northern Pacific railroad, was held up by three masked robbers near Buffalo, N. D. The robbers secured about $500, in cash by searching the passengers, shot Engineer S. P. Olson of Fargo twice to make him stop the train and made a successful escape in an automobile which they had awaiting them near the scene of the robbery.

The deed as executed was one of the most daring ever perpetrated in this part of the country and showed that the men were no amateurs at the business, as every movement was executed as planned and admirably executed. When the train stopped at the high bridge at Valley City the three masked bandits crept into the day coach. Heavily armed and shooting recklessly to intimidate the passengers, they first lined the train crew up at one end of the car and then proceeded to search the passengers in the coaches.

LEWIS STRANG IS KILLED

Noted Auto Driver Crushed to Death In Attempting to Avoid a Wagon.

Blue Rivers, Wis.—Louis Strang, the noted automobile race driver, was instantly killed near here, when, in an endeavor to avoid a wagon his automobile careened and went crashing over a high embankment.

Strang was driver of a car carrying the technical committee of the annual endurance tour of the Wisconsin Automobile association.

In the car with Strang were three other passengers, including Joe Jagerbauer, also a driver of Cese cars, and Lester Clark of Richland Center, Wis. The name of the other passenger has not been learned. Strang did not jump, but remained at the wheel and was crushed to death in the fall of thirty feet.

Hunt Hoosier Politician.

Rushville, Ind.—T. E. Gregg, a field examiner under the state board of accounts and former city treasurer, has been missing for two weeks. The last trace of Gregg was that he was seen in Indianapolis in May.

PASS PUBLICITY ACT

ELECTION REFORM MEASURE IS APPROVED BY SENATE.

No Candidate for Congress Can Spend Over Ten Cents for Each Voter in State.

Washington.—With a practical unanimous vote the senate passed the most drastic campaign publicity measure that was ever adopted by either branch of the United States congress.

Using the pre-election publicity bill passed by the house of representatives as a basis, the senate constructed a proposed law with the following important features:

"No candidate for the senate [illegible] shall spend in the election more than a sum equal to ten cents for each voter in his district or state.

"No senatorial candidate shall spend a total of more than $10,000 in the primary and general election; and no candidate for the house shall spend more than $5,000.

"Publicity must be given to all primary campaign contributions and expenditures.

"All general election expenses must be made public before the election, beginning fifteen days before election, and making publication each six days until election.

"All promises of political jobs must be made public."

The bill further makes it illegal to promise political places in order to secure election support, or to aid in influencing the election of any member of a state legislature.

The bill will be the subject of probably prolonged conference between the two houses. It originated in the house as a part of the Democratic legislative program and was designed to require the publication of expenditures before election, which is not required by the existing publicity law.

The Republicans in the house attempted to extend the bill to cover primary election expenses. In the senate the primary election amendment, coupled with more radical amendments, were adopted with little opposition.

The senate amendments submitted by the committee on privileges and elections required publicity of all primary election expenses and all pledges of political jobs or favors. Some objection to this was made on the basis that primary elections were not within the control of congress. The amendment was finally adopted, however, by a vote of 50 to 7.

WILSON OUSTS WILEY AID

Secretary Removes Floyd W. Rohlson Without Consulting Chemist—Tart to Act.

Washington. — Floyd W. Rohlson, an important member of the staff of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture, it was developed, was dismissed from the bureau June 30 on charges of insubordination.

Although his dismissal was important, it was not considered sufficiently noteworthy to bring to the attention of Dr. Wiley's staff of experts in New York city. He came originally from Michigan.

Secretary Wilson said that Rohlson had been relieved of service because he refused to carry out an order of the secretaries of the departments of agriculture, treasury and commerce and labor to prohibit the making of benzoate of soda with food, which had been determined was deleterious to health.

WOMAN IN AUTO SHOT DEAD

Bloodhounds Are Aiding Posses in Search of the Assassin in Woods of Virginia.

Richmond, Va.—Bloodhounds, cried on by their trainers of the Henrico county constabulary, are searching the Virginia woods in Chesterfield county aiding Richmond mounted police and posses under the sheriff of Chesterfield in the hunt for the men who shot and killed Mrs. Harry C. Beattie, Jr., as she was riding with her husband in an automobile.

Young Beattie stopped the car when an unidentified man, evidently an auto-automobile fiend, stood stubbornly in the middle of the road. When he asked the man to get out of the latter with a surly retort raised a single barreled shotgun and fired at close range into the car, killing Mrs. Beattie.

GATES' FRIENDS ARE HOPEFUL

Stricken Financier Is More Than Holding His Own, and Complete Recovery Is Looked For.

Paris.—Although the condition of John W. Gates is still critical, he continues to make slight gains.

Doctor Gaies, after his second visit to the patient said while it would be several days before the physicians could say definitely that Mr. Gates was out of danger, his condition at present justified confident hopes for his recovery.

Canada Has Honey Famine.

Toronto, Ont.—Dealers in honey declare that the drought of June and early July has caused a shortage of over 1,000,000 pounds in Ontario's harvest from the hives. The practical failure of small flowering field crops is given as the cause.

Killed in Auto Crash.

Willmar, Minn.—Mrs. C. W. Carlson of Carpenter, S. D., is dead and her husband is seriously injured as the result of an automobile accident near this city.

MISS SPRIGG'S NEIGHBOR

By DONALD ALLEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

It was no use for Miss Amanda Spriggs to try and conceal the fact that she had lived long enough to be classed as an old maid. As a matter of fact, and as the very best way, she didn't try to conceal it, but owned right up to 35 years, and then added:

"So you can see that there is one woman in this world who isn't ready to jump in fair any man that comes along. I don't propose to be married one month and divorced the next.

Miss Spriggs was well to do. After living for a number of years in a certain village she bought a rather pretentious house and grounds in the suburbs of a town. One day she was moved into the house she had a sty come on her right eye. It was large enough for the eye of an ox. Miss Spriggs, like other old maids, carried a chip on her shoulder, and when the sty came she was in fighting mood.

Mr. Alexander Smith was an old bachelor. That is, he was 37 years old, and when any of his friends referred him about it his reply was:

"The rest of you can go and make fools of yourselves about matrimony, but none for me, thank you."

And then he would smile in a pitying way and shake his head to show how sorry for them he was, and seemingly prepared for a row with the first man that trod on his corn-toils.

Mr. Smith had lived at his club. His club got tired of his dog and cat and mocking-bird and revolver practice, and after a few hints he bought him a house and announced that the rest of the world could go to same place for away. He hadn't the slightest idea that he was neighbor to Miss Spriggs.

Mr. Smith and his old housekeeper were just getting settled, and Miss Spriggs was just developing that sty, when the bachelor fell off a step-ladder and sprained his ankle. On the very next day his dog took advantage of the occasion to trat across the grass on the old maid's premises and attack her cat and cause her to suffer various painful emotions. But for that sty Miss Spriggs would have walked over to the other house and had it out with the master. Instead, she wrote the following note to be handed in by her servant:

"Sir: Your dog has attacked my cat without the slightest provocation and nearly killed her. You must keep him chained up or kill him. I am, sir, respectfully yours."

"Oh, you are, are you!" exclaimed Mr. Smith after reading the note. "Well, see about that. I'll neither chain up Billy nor kill him far one woman's cat. Must be an old maid or a hot-tempered widow."

And he wrote and dispatched by his housekeeper:

"Madam: My dog is four years old, and never have I known him to attack a cat unless that animal showed fight or insulted. If you kill your cat or keep her chained up, there can be no more trouble. Saltoro me, I am ever yours."

Miss Spriggs didn't fall down in a faint or a fit when she read that note. There were three chairs standing handy by, and she kicked them over, one after the other, and thus saved her life.

As Mr. Smith didn't know about the sty, he rather expected a call. Two days passed and then his dog came howling home. He had been investigating around Miss Spriggs' back door, and her servant had scalded him. When Mr. Smith got his breath back he wrote and dispatched the following:

"Madame: There is a law to punish cruelty to animals, and as soon as I can leave the house I shall make it my business to see it enforced. Bellows me, and so forth."

"Oh, be will, will he!" exclaimed Miss Spriggs. "Well, let him enforce to his heart's content. There is also a law against trespass, he wants to understand, and as soon as his old sty gets well I'll give him all the law he wants!"

And then she wrote and sent the following:

"Sir: I have this day instructed my servant to buy a shot-gun to shoot dogs with! I am, sir, and so forth."

Three days later, while Miss Spriggs and her servant were trying to get a bureau upstairs, it got away from them and went bumping down to bring up with a great crash in the hall and shiver the pane of glass in the front door. Half an hour later over came the following note from Mr. Smith:

"Madam: Let me inform you that this is a restricted locality, and that such a row as took place in your house a short time since cannot under the head of public nuisances. I know my rights and shall maintain them at all hazards. See section 23, page 432 of the compiled laws of this state, and govern yourself accordingly. Believe me, if you can, and so forth."

That sty persecuted Miss Spriggs from weeping, but she got the hemmer and pounded on the kitchen floor for fully fifteen minutes to show she was not dismayed. Her opportunity to hit back came three days later. Mr. Smith bobbled on the back door and did some shooting at a target. He had just babbled back to the sitting room when ever came a note reading:

"Sir: Under a city ordinance it is first man that trad on his cont-tails. forbidden to indulge in target practice outside a licensed shooting gallery. I shall lay a complaint against you. Also, see section 27, page 674, of the compiled laws, under the heading: 'Restricting minors and others from handling deadly weapons.' I am, sir, and so on."

"Mrs. Hastings," said the old bachelor to his housekeeper after reading the note, "I shall have the woman next door arrested."

"Yes sir."

"For defemation of character."

"I see, sir."

"Here, in her own handwriting, she refers to me as an idiot."

"Of course."

"You can go oh the stand and swear I'm not."

"I can."

"Then that settles it. I must put that woman where she belongs. In two or three more days I can bobble about, and then I'll see my lawyer."

And about the same time Miss Spriggs was writing to her servant:

"Anna, this sty is getting well and in two or three days I'll attend to that man's case. I'll give him to understand that he can't walk over me!"

"Good for you, ma'am!"

But next day they met almost on the dividing line. Miss Spriggs was out pruning a rose bush, and Mr. Smith went out to recover a slipper the dog had run off with. The two stood and stared at each other. They recalled those notes. They recalled the scalded dog and the shot-gun. They tried to look fierce, but it was no use. They didn't look as each expected to see other to Mr. Smith raised his hat, and Miss Spriggs smiled. Mr. Smith said she was charming.

People say that in the fall they will be married.

When Taft Was Hazed.

At a recent smoker of the Washington Yale club it came out how the wicked sophomores of Yale, at the time President Taft was a Freshman, hazed him. When the Yale men discovered Candwell C. Tyler of the class of 1877 in their midst they insisted on knowing how he came there. He had hazed the class of '78, of which W. H. Taft was a member, and they particularly wanted to know how Freshman Taft had been initiated into the mysteries of Yale. "Well, that is not hard to answer," said Mr. Tyler. "I happened to be one of the ten or twelve that visited Taft on a mission conducted solely by sophomores. We found him in his room alone, and, of course, the visit of so large a delegation of men of hostile intent, made its impression. But he was then, as now, good natured. We were determined on nothing less than a concert, and told Taft that we would try out his voice in song, and we insisted that it should be from no less a place than his study desk; and from there he sang to us, much to our edification and delight. He sang well the songs we told him to sing. I do not believe he was molested after that, but at all events, that is the way soma twalve of us hazed him."

Too Many of That Kind.

"Professed politicians who pride themselves on having reduced public office to an exact science," recently observed a wise old chap at Washington, "frequently find the independent voter a real stumbling block, in fact that was amusingly disclosed last fall in the experience of a friend of mine in Ohio, who was out for reelection. He was talking to an intimate political business man of his home town one day and when he said:

"'I do wish, Henry, that you would be a steady friend of mine.'

"'My dear fellow,' returned the business man, 'I have, as you know, always supported you when you were right.'

"'The candidate for reelection sighed and, as he laid his hand upon the shoulder of his friend, said:

"'My friend, I have no use for that kind of friendship.'"—Lippincott's Magazine.

BIG SOIL EXPOSITION

"NORTHWESTERN LAND PRODUCTS SHOW" DESIGNATION CHOSEN FOR EXHIBITION.

WILL BE HELD IN DECEMBER

Advertising of Booster Project Will Be Started on Automobile Tour to Montanas Capitol.

It will be the "Northwestern Land Products Show" officially, which is to be held in St. Paul in December, But everywhere it will be known as the "St. Paul Land Show."

This was determined after a conference of Northwestern Development league officers. It was proposed to call the big show of soil products the "National Land Show," but Pittsburg has incorporated the word "National" into a long title for its land exposition, and the development league people wanted to confine the show to the states which it is intended to benefit. These are the states which are in the league and certain to have exhibits: Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. Alaska also will be represented. Every other state will be secondary to these states and the special interests connected with them.

Announcement of Show's Plans Soon.

The Northwest Development league will make an official announcement of the plans for the show within a few days, as it is to be given under the auspices of the league organized in Helena the first of May. The proposition of the league has been accepted and the league's secretary, Will A. Campbell, becomes general manager of the land show.

One of the first advertising "stunts" to be pulled off to boost the land show will be to send an automobile in the Minnesota State Automobile association tour from the Twin City to Helena and Great Falls, Mont. The special train being fitted out by the Great Northern will also be a big advertisement for the land show. Posters will be hung in the windows of the train, and business men from the Twin City will talk land show, that every one passing the train may know the show is an assured fact.

T. H. Bigelow Chairman of Finance.

H. H. Bigelow has been named chairman of the finance committee for the land show, together with Jit S. Warner, St. Paul, and P. L. Howe of Minneapolis. It is understood same money has been subscribed, and with some assistant that he can't walk over me!" start shw peapls the work has actually started on the land show.

"The December dates are necessary, as thera are land shows running continuously from October 12, until December 9," said Mr. Campbell. "The Pittsburg show opens first, October 12, and runs for two weeks; then comes the show in Omaha in which some Western States are interested, opening October 15 and continuing until October 28. The New York shows opens in Madison Square Garden, November 3, and runs a couple of weeks. Then we hava the Chicago show, which does not close until December 9. This makes it necessary to have the show here in December. Just what days will be selected cannot be said now, but December is the best time, as early dates bring a show too close following big state fairs."

SEEKING FARM LANDS.

Rotterdam Man Looks For Suitable Site far Colony.

A. Van der Spek, president of the Association of Dutch Farmers, with headquarters at Rotterdam, was in conference with George A. Ralph, state immigration commissioner, regarding Minnesota lands last week.

Mr. Van der Spek represents an organization that is looking for homes for a large colony of Hollandare same, where in the United States or Canada, and Mr. Welsh spent considerable time explaining to him the advantages of living in Minnesota. Mr. Welsh laid special stress upon the value of the cut-over and half timber lands of Northeastern Minnesota, where people of small means can make a start and gradually build up a home and have a profitable farm.

The association which Van der Spek represents has a membership of about nine thousand farmers. He did not give any definite information as to when or how many of them will come here, but said that he was simply looking for information so he would be able to tell his people where to find the kind of land they wanted when it would cost and what it would produce.

Mr. Van der Spek, when showing his card, explained that the "Mr." in front of his name indicated that he is a doctor of laws. He is a member of a firm of lawyers in Rotterdam.

LANDS TO BE OPENED AUG. 22.

Cut-over Cass Lake and Duluth Indian Districts to Cost $1.25 an Acre.

Washington, D. C. — Cut-over Indian lands in Minnesota, on which timber has been cut, approximating 191,647 acres, will be thrown open to entry Aug. 22, 1911, under instructions signed by the first assistant secretary of the interior. Although open to homestead entry, settlers will have to pay $1.25 an acre for the land, which is situated in the Cass Lake and Duluth districts.

CAMP IS SANITARY.

Precaution Taken for Health of National Guard.

Camp Lakeview.—The Second regiment is favored with the presence of four regular army officers detailed from the war department. They are Captain A. E. Stone of Fort Lincoln, N. D., army inspector, who was here at the encampment of the First and Third regiments. Major Arthur Johnson, detailed as instructor with the Minnesota national guard, who was in attendance at the Third regiment encampment; Lieutenant Colonel William Gerlach, U. S. A., retired, and Captain Monroe C. Kerth of the general staff, division of militia efforts at Washington, who is here to observe the work of the troops. He will not make a written report to his department, but his suggestions and recommendations in the improvement of the national guards based on notes taken will be followed out as far as possible by the war department" Captain Kerth just before coming here was at the encampments of national guard at Waukesha, Wis., and Des Moines, Iowa, on a similar mission.

Plan for Better Sanitation.

For the purpose of better sanitation this camp is divided into three districts to be officered as follows: First district, Major Nicholson, assisted by Surgeon Collins; Second district, Major Mollison, assisted by Surgeon Mercill; Third district, Major Buechers, assisted by Surgeon Rowe, Jr. Surgeon Major Dorsey has general supervision and the object is to make a perfectly sanitary camp, which means to drive out the fly. To accomplish this two screens were built and all slops and refuse will be burned.

While the other regiments were in camp the flies had become so numerous as to be unbearable, breeding in a ravine at the lower end of the camp that the men had to fill and level. This has been thrown for years. This was burned away end with other precautions taken it is hoped relief will be gained.

MEDICAL SOCIETIES MAY MERGE.

Southern and Minnesota Valley Bodies to Meet in Rochester.

Rochester.—The nineteenth annual meeting of the Southern Medical association will be held in Rochester on Wednesday, Aug. 3. The session is to be one of the most important in the history of the organization, it being probable that it will result in the uniting of the southern association with the Minnesota Valley association The Valley organization will meet in Rochester at the same time in conjunction with the southern Minnesota, and the main business session will be a discussion of the union of the two societies.

The program for this meeting will be an especially interesting one, the surgical work and hospital work and the study of the brain and nervous system at the hospital occupying much of the time.

The Sisters of St. Francis, who have charge of St. Mary's hospital, will serve a luncheon to the visitors, and Dr. F. F. Kilbourne, superintendent of the state hospital, will entertain at dinner. The committee of arrangements is composed of Doctors W. J. Mayo, A. F. Kilbourne and H. H. Wetherstein, while the reception committee comprises Doctors J. E. Crowe, H. S. Plumer, O. C. Hayerdale, G. T. Joyce.

TAWNEY-DAY WEDDING.

Political Enemies Families United By Marriage.

Fairmont. — Miss Constance Day was married to Everett Tawney at the old Day residence in Fairmont, Reverend Edward Copeland of the Fairmont Congregational church officiating. A tower of green had been erected on the Hood lawn, which slopes away through an apple orchard to the lake and it is there that the ceremony was performed.

Because of the political interest in the joining of the Day and Tawney families many words and telegrams of congratulation came from statesmen throughout the country. The good will in the groom's favor in the government showed itself in the gift of a handsome chest of silver from the Tawney's associates in the office of the special agents of the treasury department. The Day clans chest of silver from invitations had been issued.

ALARMED AT GRASSHOPPERS.

State Entamologist and Deputies Confer Over Situation at Fergus Falls.

Fergus Falls.—State Entomologist Grabham and his deputies from all parts of the state met in this city to discuss the grasshopper situation. They had reports from all sections in several sections, as the dry summer has proven just right for the development of hoppers. A new poison is being tested which, it is believed, will destroy them.

LUNCHEON AT FERGUS FALLS.

Motorists Will Plint Twin City Tourists to and From City.

Fergus Falls.—The Fergus Falls Automobile club entertained the Twin City-to-Helena automobile tourist while they were in this part of the state. A delegation of local motorists, headed by Dr. Sherping, piloted the party from Alexandria to Fergus Falls. A fine noon luncheon was in readiness on their arrival here, and another delegation, headed by Dr. Freeborn, piloted them automobile to Detroit.

INCENDIARY IS HUNTED.

Suburb of New Duluth Search Woods —Has Caused $100,000 Damage.

Duluth.—Practically the entire suburb of New Duluth is searching for the incendiary who has been terrorizing that suburb for more than a year. Probably a score of fires, some of them destroying property worth from $20,000 to $30,000, have been traced to this unknown man.

The last fire was in the year the inhabitants have a description of the man, and every one is on the hunt for him. He is believed to be a half-mad recluse who has been camping in the woods near New Duluth. Early Wednesday he attempted to set fire to the boarding house occupied by Hike Monovitch, making three successive efforts. He was seen each time and driven away, after he had lighted a torch of oiled paper which he carried, and applied it to the building. In spite of the fact that they were armed, the occupants of the boarding house were too frightened to open fire on him, or capture him.

He returned twice, after being driven away, and repeated his attempts. Four men remained on watch until daylight. The man is described as being of very heavy build and wearing a long matted beard. Officers are scouring the woods. There is a big reward for his capture, and every resident of New Duluth is joining in the search. The damage traced to this man is placed at upward of $100,000, and there have been several narrow escapes from fatalities in the fires he has started.

SECOND ALFALFA CROP CUT.

St. Cloud Reformatory Farm Gets Yield of Ton to the Acre.

St. Cloud.—It is being found by experiments now in progress at the state reformatory farm here that alfalfa can be grown with desirable results in this part of the country. The experiment is being tried on a six-acre tract of land, and will next year be tried on double that area. The first crop of hay was about a ton to the acre. The second cuting was done today, when the yield was the same as in June. Some of the California crops have run as high as three tons to the acre, but in that territory, so-called alfalfa country, the normal yield is one and one-half tons to the acre. With favorable conditions the rest of the season, the fields may yield two more crops. It is necessary, however, in obtaining this crop that moisture be received, as alfalfa is a grass demanding it.

CHARGED WITH WHITE SLAVERY.

Couple Chased Across Continent Arrested at Duluth.

Duluth.—After being traced across the continent and back again by a United States secret service agent, William Nichols, aged 40, and Claret Hofter, 17, were arrested and are being held under the federal white slave law.

It is alleged Nichols has a wife living, and a daughter four years older that the girl with whom he eloped. At the police station today Claret Hofer replied readily to questions.

She said her love for Nichols led her to go away with him. That she loved him better than anything on earth. That they have been traveling for a month. Nichols was arraigned in federal court before Judge Page Morris and was bound over to the grand jury under $1,000 bonds. The girl is held at the police station and will be sent to Minnespolis tomorrow.

Nichols is said to have been a conductor on the Chicago Great Western road.

EXODUS TO DAKOTAS BEGINS.

Fields Near Winona Deserted by Man on Annual Harvest Hunt.

Winona.—The exodus of men to the Dakota wheat fields has started in this city and west-bound passenger and freight trains are loaded daily with crowds of laborers seeking their annual "harvest of high wages." The inducement offered by farmers is causing a scarcity of men in this section.

Barley and rye are being stacked, some oats has been cut, and wheat is about ready for the reaper. In South Dakota the harvest is a little later, and in North Dakota crops are a week in arrears of those farther south.

Many of the harvest hands this year are starting in Southern Minnesota, then going to South Dakota, and than to Canada, where vast areas of new wheat land have been opened. This course gives them several weeks' work before threshing begins.

LAKE FISHERMAN PROTEST.

Assert Right to Fish Within Half Mile of North Shore.

Duluth.—North shore fishermen claim they will be driven out of business by the attempt to enforce the state law, which prohibits them from fishing within a half mile of the shore. This law was passed four years ago, but it has been unenforced. Efforts are now being made to enforce it. They say they will either have to abandon their plants, or move to Wisconsin or Michigan.

INCENDIARY IS HUNTED.

Suburb of New Duluth Search Woods —Has Caused $100,000 Damage.

Duluth.—Practically the entire suburb of New Duluth is searching for the incendiary who has been terrorizing that suburb for more than a year. Probably a score of fires, some of them destroying property worth from $20,000 to $30,000, have been traced to this unknown man.

The last fire was in the year the inhabitants have a description of the man, and every one is on the hunt for him. He is believed to be a half-mad recluse who has been camping in the woods near New Duluth. Early Wednesday he attempted to set fire to the boarding house occupied by Hike Monovitch, making three successive efforts. He was seen each time and driven away, after he had lighted a torch of oiled paper which he carried, and applied it to the building. In spite of the fact that they were armed, the occupants of the boarding house were too frightened to open fire on him, or capture him.

He returned twice, after being driven away, and repeated his attempts. Four men remained on watch until daylight. The man is described as being of very heavy build and wearing a long matted beard. Officers are scouring the woods. There is a big reward for his capture, and every resident of New Duluth is joining in the search. The damage traced to this man is placed at upward of $100,000, and there have been several narrow escapes from fatalities in the fires he has started.

SECOND ALFALFA CROP CUT.

St. Cloud Reformatory Farm Gets Yield of Ton to the Acre.

St. Cloud.—It is being found by experiments now in progress at the state reformatory farm here that alfalfa can be grown with desirable results in this part of the country. The experiment is being tried on a six-acre tract of land, and will next year be tried on double that area. The first crop of hay was about a ton to the acre. The second cuting was done today, when the yield was the same as in June. Some of the California crops have run as high as three tons to the acre, but in that territory, so-called alfalfa country, the normal yield is one and one-half tons to the acre. With favorable conditions the rest of the season, the fields may yield two more crops. It is necessary, however, in obtaining this crop that moisture be received, as alfalfa is a grass demanding it.

CHARGED WITH WHITE SLAVERY.

Couple Chased Across Continent Arrested at Duluth.

Duluth.—After being traced across the continent and back again by a United States secret service agent, William Nichols, aged 40, and Claret Hofter, 17, were arrested and are being held under the federal white slave law.

It is alleged Nichols has a wife living, and a daughter four years older that the girl with whom he eloped. At the police station today Claret Hofer replied readily to questions.

She said her love for Nichols led her to go away with him. That she loved him better than anything on earth. That they have been traveling for a month. Nichols was arraigned in federal court before Judge Page Morris and was bound over to the grand jury under $1,000 bonds. The girl is held at the police station and will be sent to Minnespolis tomorrow.

Rifle for Under Water Action.

When he is not engaged in the interested by sheriks and other sea monsters likely to do him harm, the diver has at present to rely on his safety on the use of the knife, or, failing that, on a quick return to the surface. Now comes the invention of Captain Spreck, a German diving instructor, who has constructed a rifle which can be fired under water, and is designed for the better arming of the diver. The most remarkable thing about this is that it fires, not bullets, but water, which is propelled with such force that it bes an extraordinary power of penetration. Indeed, he inventor himself has pierced armor pleto of medium thickness with the water jet from his weapon. The rifle has a stout barrel and is loaded with a cartridge cased in india rubber.

DISFIGURED WITH CRUSTS

"Some time ago I was taken with eczema from the top of my head to my waist. It began with scales on my body. I suffered untold itching and burning, and could not sleep. I was greatly disfigured with scales and crusts. My ears looked as if they had been most cut off with a razar, and my neck was perfectly raw. I suffered untold agony and pain. I tried two doctors who said I had eczema in its fullest stage, and that it could not be cured. I then tried other remedies to no avail. At last, I tried a set of the genuine Cuticura Remedies, which cured me of eczema when all else had failed, therefore I cannot praise them too highly.

"I suffered with eczema about ten months, and saw many entirely cured, and I believe Cuticura Remedies are the best skin-cure there is." (Signed) Miss Mattie J. Shaffer, R. F. D. 1, Box 8, Danby, Miss., Oct. 27, 1910.

"I had suffered from eczema about four years when boils began to break out on different parts of my body. It started with a fine red rash. My back was affected first, when it also spread over my fake. The itching was almost unbearable at times. I tried different soaps and salves, but nothing seemed to help me until I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. One box of them cured me entirely. I recommended them to my sister for her baby who was troubled with tooth eczema, and they completely cured her baby." (Signed) Mrs. F. L. Harberger, Dreherville Pa., Sept. 6, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticure," Dept. 4 L, Boston.

Work for Extinction of Tuberculosis.

Exhibitions showing in graphic form the prevention of consumption have been shown in every state in the United States, except Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico and Wyoming, and also in most of the Canadian provinces and Mexico, Porto Rico and Cuba, according to a statement made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. There are nav 25 states and 16 cities having permanent and traveling exhibits besides the two operated by the National association itself, and the total number of similar displays is over 200, including about 50 new actual exhibits. Tha first tuberculosis exhibit in America was shawn by the Maryland Tuberculosis commission in January, 1904. In 1906 there were four spcb exhibits.

Thinnest Man Weds.

The thinnest man in the world was married recently by Municipal Judge John R. Newcomer at the city hall.

"I had to look three times to see him," said the judge.

Tha man is Arthur Atherton, twenty-four years old, who is five feet high, he weighs only 78 pounds. He married Blanche Buckley, nineteen years old, who weighs 135 pounds.—Chicago Daily News.

A meeting has been called by Pennington county Progressive Republicans to meet at Thief River Falls August 6, at 11 o' clock a.m. That is the 31st boys, start early, and by next year we will have the fire going as hot as the Alianco and Peopels Party made in 90 and 92. Down with machine rule and rag law, and let old Taft know that we know he sold us out. May this movement spread from Thief River Falls to Main and California, and THE SUNBEAM will spread news that Pennington County Republicans are going to stand for the intrests of the Northwestern farmers and no longer submit to machine rule We are with you gentelmen and our pencil will be used until it gets so hot that it will melt the lead.

What's the Matter With Thomas?

There are some names which seem peculiarly suited to royalty: Louis, for instance, has a ringly sound. Francis, George, Henry in both spellings, Charles, William, Edward and James all have served their turn. Johns there have been, and Stephens. I remember a Robert in Sicily and a Peter in Russia and Nevia. Frederick has often worn the crown, and royal honors are even now paid to Ferdinand in Bulgaria But was there ever, anywhere, a king named Thomas? Oscars and even Hookens succeed the dais, but never through all the centuries Thomas remains the subject, sometimes struggling up to a bishopric or on earldom, but never climbing the crown. Nicholases wear the imperial purple; Godfreys lord it over Jerusalem; Alexis struts in ermine; Alexanders fare forth to conquest; Julius and Leo don the triple-crown, but Thomas, poor plebeian Thomas, has never a crown to his name. Now tell me, you who are wise in the occult influence of names, what is the matter with Tom?—London Idler

Washington as a Humorist.

While president Washington's humor seemed to find expression in the diplomacy of self protection. A French revolutionist came to him for a generous testimonial, which Washington did not care to grant, yet he did not wish to give offense to the French by a curt refusal, so he wrote an evasive card worthy of Lincoln—"C. Volney needs no recommendation from G. Washington."

After Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown Washington treated him with high consideration. At a dinner given in honor of the distinguished prisoner Rochambeau proposed "The United States" as his toast; Washington immediately responded with "The King of France." Cornwallis, perforce, faintly suggested "His majesty." when Washington hurriedly filled them all by announcing, "The king of England—may he stay there!" with a ready wit that made even Cornwallis laugh.—Century.

Cards and Card Playing.

In a paper in the Journal of the Royal Society of Arts Professor H. Chesney, discussing the part played by gambling in magic, observes: "The use of cards is said to be derived from the Tarot cards, which were originally employed for occult purposes. The legend which ascribes the invention of cards to the purpose of amusing a mad king does not seem at all a sufficient explanation, and there is in addition the fact that cards of a kind existed before the said king. In further support of this idea the well known practice of telling fortunes by cards may probably be regarded as a survival of a regular form of divination by such means. It seems, in fact, that card playing for stakes is a mere development of a ceremony in which individuals consulting the oracle decided to abide by its pronouncements as to the holding of disputed property.

Meteors and the Atmosphere.

One of the most useful results arising from the study of sporadic meteors is the light thrown upon the question of the height of the atmosphere, since it is the friction of the air that sets them on fire, and if their elevation is known at the moment of their first appearance the probable height of the atmosphere can be calculated. On Aug. 11, 1900, a brilliant meteor happened to impress its picture simultaneously on three photographic plates, at Trabkend, Islander and Tschingan, in Russian Turkestan. The distances between these places furnished base lines from which the height could be deduced. The calculation shows that the meteor first appeared at a height of 69.45 miles above the earth and disappeared at fifty miles.

BOWSER'S CANCER

He Is Morally Certain That His End Is Near.

EXAMINES HIS WILL AGAIN.

Mrs. Bowser Applies Camphor and Gives Good Advice—He Admits That He Has Been Hard Man to Live With and Than Pleads For Forgiveness.

By M. QUAD.

(Copyright, 1901, by Associated Literary Press.)

After dinner Mr. Bowser lighted a cigar and took a stroll in his garden—that is, he called it his garden. He had planted five hills of sunflowers, and three hundocks were already showing their green heads above the soil, and so he had a right to call it a garden.

The sun was sinking away to rest, having been on the move all day. Now and then some weary woman threw a tomato can from a second or third story window, and now and then a boy peeped at a cat licking herself on the fence.

It was a peaceful scene—it ended for a peaceful day.

There might have been more robins and bluebirds and orioles and bobolinks and nightingales to sing the sun to rest, but even Mr. Bowser realized as he gazed around him that we can't have all the good things of this world at once. A feeling of faintness was stealing over him, and he was about to speak to the cat in tones of kindliness and courtesy when—

Well, the stroller in the garden and dealy uttered a wild yell and jumped two feet high. Mrs. Bowser, who was standing in the back door, rushed over to him, but he pawed and pranced and pushed past her into the house.

Wife Applies Camphor.

"Will you tell me what on earth's the matter all of a sudden?" she asked as she followed him up to the sitting room. He held a hand on the back of his neck and glared at her.

"Have you been stung?" was the further question.

No answer.

"I saw bees about this afternoon, and there was a mosquito buzzing around last night. Let me see the spot. If it's a sting or bite I'll put some camphor on it."

"Woman, it's too late," said Mr. Bowser in a hoarse voice.

"Too late for what? I'm sure it's a trifle."

"Too late. It's what I've been expecting for a week past. It's what Dr. Sluger told me in most horrifying language. It's what I've been hiding from you so as to not worry you. I will lie down on the lounge."

"Now, then," said Mrs. Bowser as she drew nearer and kicked up, "what's all this talk about? Who is Dr. Sluger? What did he tell you? Was he a fool to have been counseling from me? Speak right up!"

"Con-cancer!" he gasped.

"Cancer nothing! Did the idiot tell you you had cancer?"

"Yes!"

"Fiddlesticks!"

"He said I had it in my blood and it would break out all of a sudden, just as it has."

Ready For the End.

"Then he ought to be put where he can't break out all of a sudden! Hold still now while I look. You have simply been bitten by a fly or stung by a bee."

"It's worse than that, woman—far worse," he answered, with doleful shakes of his head. "Mrs. Bowser, I've got a feeling that my time has come."

"Well, I haven't, and you hold still while I rub some camphor on. If I had that old fraud of a Dr. Sluger here I'd make him swallow a bottle!"

"But—but why should he have told me so?"

"How do I know he care why? It's sufficient to know that he's a fraud. There—isn't the pain about all gone?"

She was answered with a long drawn groan.

"The redness has almost disappeared."

She was sure of groan, but a trifle more hopeless and dismal.

"You ought to know that a cancer doesn't come like a bullet. It is months or years coming. The doctor must have taken you for an ass. You certainly feel better now."

He struggled part way up, to fall back in despair, and then he reached for her hand and whispered:

"Don't leave me to die alone!"

"Bosh! What's got into you? Are you a man or a baby?"

Examines His Will.

"I'm a man, Mrs. Bowser, and a dying one at that. It's kind of you to make me think I've been bitten by a fly, but I know I'm doomed. Please bring out my will from the safe. I want to see that everything's left to you."

"Well, there it is," she said as she brought him the document, "but you needn't look if ever on my account. Get up and walk around and forget it. Why, a boy four years old wouldn't hooky around about a fly bite!"

"Mrs. Bowser, I've been a hard husband to get along with."

"On the contrary, you have been as easy as grease."

"I have kicked and bluffed and bowled around."

"Yes, and you've always got as good as you gave."

"I have charged you with selling the cow and the geese"

"Aml I've gone through your pockets when you were known to get even"

"Mrs. Bowser," he continued as his lips trembled, "if I haven't always been the best husband in the world I want you now in my dying hour to forgive me."

"But there is nothing to forgive, Mortimer, and I have managed to keep you pretty straight."

Done Mother-in-law.

"Yes, your mother—your dear old mother! I've been mean to her. Tell her that I begged her forgiveness."

"Oh, you don't owe her anything!"

"I should have lifted to see her once more, but it was not to be—not to be. The cancer suddenly broke out, and—"

"You mean it fly suddenly bit you. The red has all gone, and I'll bet you don't feel the least bit of pain."

Mr. Bowser didn't answer in words. He wiped a tear from his eye with his last will and testament and then unfolded the document and read:

"Being at this date sound in mind and body, but having the fear of death before my eyes and wishing to make suitable provision for my wife"—

Here Mr. Bowser broke down, and after struggling with his emotions for a couple of minutes he handed over the will and was about to say some thing when the doorbell rang, and Mrs. Bowser answered it. It was the family doctor.

"I was saying a professional call next door," he said, "and I thought I'd drop in here for a minute. Both well, I hope?"

Encouraged by Doctor.

"Alas, no!" she answered as he followed her back to the sitting room. "I am sorry to say that Mr. Bowser is dying!"

"Bowser dying?"

"Of cancer," explained Mr. Bowser as he looked up.

"Where is it? Oh, on the neck, eh? Humph! When do you depart for the shining shores?"

"He was walking in the garden and dealy uttered a wild yell and jumped two feet high. Mrs. Bowser, who was standing in the back door, rushed over to him, but he pawed and pranced and pushed past her into the house.

When a Peanut Sprouts.

"Few persons are perhaps aware that a thing of beauty is a yellow peanut plant growing singly in a so or eight inch pot and grown indoors during the colder weather," said a florist. "Kept in a warm room or by the kitchen stove a peanut kernel planted in a pot of loose mellow loam and only moderately moistened will soon germinate and grow into a beautiful plant, extending its branches over the pot. The leaves close together like those of the sensitive plant at approach of night or when a shower begins to fall upon them. The plant blooms during rather dry weather. There is nothing else just like it."

Lengthy and Monotonous.

One of the most curious enactments entered into by all operatic artist was that agreed to by Farinelli. When he visited Spain, Philip V. was suffering from mental depression, from which nothing seemed him until the arrival of Farinelli. The queen was so delighted to see her royal spouse once more liberated that she engaged Farinelli at a salary of $10,000 to remain in Madrid. This he did, singing the same four songs to the king every night for ten years.

An Old Smallpox Cure.

The following primitive "cure" for smallpox was observed by the Leytonstone (England) guardians in one of their registers for the year 1580: "That whosoever hereafter shall have both them in cinders in a new pot then crush into a fine black powder a dose for smallpox, three ounces."

The Orange in Spain.

It is considered a very healthful thing to eat an orange before breakfast. But who can eat an orange well? The one and only Spanish method is done. The smooth rind of the fruit with her silver knife, then, pulls her love locks into the peeled fruit, separates every morsel with his pearly teeth and continues to eat the orange without losing a drop of the juice that was down the rove with the fork still in it.

"Unpalatable.

The Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon was fond of a joke, and his keen wit was moreover, tested on sterling common sense. One day he remarked to one of his sons:

"Can you tell me the reason why it is that didn't eat breakfast?"

"No, sir. Why was it?"

"Because the meat of him was like a stone and the rest was grist."—Youth's Companion.

SUPPLEMENT TO

THE SUNBEAM

Commissioners' Proceedings

Thief River Falls, Minn.,
July 10, 1911.

Pursuant to law the board of county commissioners of Pennington county, Minnesota, met in regular session in the office of the county auditor, in the city of Thief River Falls, Minn., at 10 o'clock a. m.

Members present, Anbol, Shaw, Hedeen, Wold, Larson.

Members absent, none.

Minutes of the meetings of April 22, 1911, and May 15 and May 16, 1911, were read and accepted as read.

The following is a statement of the county funds submitted to the county board by the auditor.

To the county board of Pennington county, Minnesota:

The following is a correct statement of the condition of the respective funds of said county at the close of business on the 30th day of June, 1911, showing the amounts levied for various purposes for the correct year, together with the actual cash balance and amounts unpaid on contracts of the board:

Name of Fund	Amount Levied	Actual Amount Cash Balance on Contracts	Amount Unpaid
Revenue Fund...	$11,664.00	$2,264.71	$3,442.37
Road and Bridge	4,400.	2,798.05	1.1.0.
Interest Fund...	2,200.	1,253.02

Dated July 10, 1911.

Respectfully submitted,

A. H. FASEL, County Auditor.

The following resolution, offered by Commissioner Shaw and seconded by Commissioner Hedeen, was adopted unanimously.

Whereas; after due consideration, this board has estimated the necessary expenses of the county for the ensuing year to be as follows:

County Purposes	$17,500.00
Road and Bridge Purposes	4,400.00
Bond and Interest Purposes..	2,200.00

Therefore be it resolved that to meet such expenses the following sums be levied on the taxable property of Pennington county as a basis of taxation for the year 1911.

County Revenue Fund.....	$17,500.00
Road and Bridge Fund.....	$4,400.00
Bond and Interest Fund.....	2,200.00

In the matter of the petition of H. J. McKercher and others for a county road; the following resolution was offered by Commissioner Wold, who moved its adoption, duly seconded by Commissioner Anbol;

Whereas, on the 10th of July, 1911, a petition signed by twenty-four freeholders of said county was presented to us praying for the laying out and establishing of a highway running into more than one town of said county, and not within the incorporated limits of any city, and described as follows:

Beginning at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section number thirteen (13) in township number one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west, and running thence east on the section line between sections twelve (12) and thirteen (13) in the township number one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-four (44) west and sections seven (7) and eighteen (18) in township number one hundred fifty-two [152] north of range number forty-three [43] west, a distance of one [1] mile, to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter [N. W. ¼] of section number eighteen [18] in township number one hundred fifty-two (152) north of range forty-three [43] west, and to be connected with other roads as follows: The state road running north and south through said sections seven [7] and eighteen [18] in said township number one hundred fifty-two [152] north of range number forty-three [43], and terminating at the northeast corner of the northwest quarter [N. W. ¼] of section number eighteen (18) in township number one hundred fifty-two [152] north of range number forty-three (43) west.

And the board of county commissioners of said county having determined that in the judgment of a majority of its members said petition is reasonable on its face.

It is hereby ordered that a day of hearing be had on said petition at the auditor's office of said county on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1911, at 1 o'clock p. m., at which time and place said board will hear all that may be said in favor of and against granting of said petition.

It is further ordered that Peter Hedeen, Peter C. Wold, and Daniel Shaw, members of this board, be and they are hereby appointed a committee to examine said proposed establishment of said road, and that said committee meet upon the route of said road at the house of R. J. McKercher on the southwest quarter (sw¼) of section twelve (12), township one hundred fifty-two (152), range forty four (44), in said county, on the 5th day of August, 1911, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of examination of said proposed establishing of said road and make report thereof at said meeting of said board hereinbefore specified, and that notice thereof be posted and given as prescribed by law.

The Board of County Commissioners of Pennington County, Minnesota.

ED. A. AUBOL,
Chairman.

A. H. FASEL,
County Auditor.

Motion made by Commissioner Shaw, seconded by Commissioner Hedeen that the engineer on Ditch No. 22 be instructed to place a culvert on the range line between section 19, township 153, range 41, and section 24, township 153, range 42, where said ditch No. 42 crosses said range line.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Wold, who moved its adoption, duly seconded by Commissioner Larson:

Resolved, That the following sums be and the same are hereby appropriated from the county road and bridge fund, as follows, towit:

To the town of Clover Leaf the sum of $150, to aid in repairing and improving highway on section line between sections 30 and 31 of said town.

To the town of Bray the sum of $150 to aid in repairing and improving the highways of said town.

To the town of Silverton the sum of $150 to aid in improving and repairing road on the south side of sections No. 27, 28, and 29 of said town.

To the town of Reiner the sum of $100 to aid in repairing and improving highway between sections 28 and 33, and between sections 28 and 29 of said town.

To the town of Wyanotte the sum of $100 to aid in the repair and improvement of highway between sections 10 and 15, 11 and 14, and between sections 12 and 13 of said town.

To the town of Mayfield the sum of $100 to aid in repairing and improving highway on section line between sections 22 and 23 of said town.

Resolution unanimously adopted.

Martgin Swanson sold his Antimobile last week for one hundred dollars more than he paid for it. If the river does not come up so he can boat it this fall he will work with Andrew Nelsons threshing rig in this township.

It now looks like an impossibility for us to get time to go to the Pennington county fair next week, as we are to busy haying. But any farmer that can spare the time will be well repaid for the day he spends to visit the fair.

We are now all ready to call be meeting of farmers and tax Eayers of ditch No. 47, but we do not want to stir up a muss, if there is any hopy that the work can be done. However we can assure the people that we are not going to go to sleep, and not wake up until the ground is "ro" to up this fall.

In the natural course of events the Red Lake River has been worthless for power as well as for navigation. It now serves only the same purpose as the drainage ditch In the future while at times the water may become somewhat higher, there will be no regular navigation and no dependable water power.—Thief River Falls Press

We met Jerry Sherwood, one of the large ditch contractors of eastern Pennington county, at Thief River Falls this week. He informs us that his drudges are moving satisfactorily now with good prospect that all his ditches will be completed on time. It is our intention to put men to run them dredges that understand their business, and will keep them moveing" said Mr. Sherwood, and we should judge by his appearence that he was not the kind of man that would have his machinery roosting on the prairie by the season, with an uncompleted ditch ahead of him.

The Man Guessed Right.

In a church at Amsterdam there is a very curious monument of white marble on which are engraved a pair of slippers of a very slender kind. Under this inscription, "King, N.Y." which means "exactly," and the story of this singularity is this: A man who was very rich, but who was a bachelor, took it into his head that he was to live a certain number of years and no longer. Under the influence of this idea he calculated that if he spent so much a year on his estate and his life would expire together. It happened that he was not mistaken in either of his calculations; he died precisely at that time which he had presented to himself in fancy and had then brought his fortune to such a predicament that after the paying of his debts he had nothing left but a pair of slippers. His relations buried him in a creditable manner and had the slippers carved on his tomb with the above laconic advice.—Tales and Anecdotes.

A Curious Tea Case.

A correspondent of the British Medical Journal gives an account of the curious symptoms he experienced after drinking tea. He writes: "Whenever I take tea I go through a regular procession of events most distressing and stultifying. Shortly, these are as follows: Within fifteen minutes of walking movement seems to be essential. I feel hot about the scalp and knees. The former feels as if pepper were dusted all over it. Then I practically lose my sight and hearing—and if in conversation cannot say more than 'yes' or 'no' because I am so faint that listless that I lose the power of walking—fall straight and choose the wall side of the path. Lastly I break out into a general perspiration, and with in fifty-five minutes I return to my senses." This correspondent adds that he has consulted many medical men, but has never found any means of relief.

The Way of a Woman.

"She passed me on the street yesterday without speaking."

"She did?"

"Yes. She gave no sign."

"I wonder," he said, "if that could be? Perhaps she didn't mean to snub you."

"Of course she meant to snub me. You see, I had on my old hat."

"That wouldn't make any difference to her."

"Oh, wouldn't it? Once before when I happened to have on an old dress she didn't speak to me, either. Now I'm through with her. If she doesn't care enough for me to speak when I'm in my old clothes she needn't speak at all. I won't speak to her when I'm dressed up. That's all there is to it."

"Did you speak to her?"

"I should say not. It's her place to speak first. Do you suppose I'm going to attract attention by spoiling my lungs out for the like of her? I guess not."

"Perhaps she didn't see you."

"See me? Of course she did. I saw her, didn't I? Then why didn't she see me?"—Detroit Free Press.

When the Shoe Pinches.

"My corns continue acute and the shoe clerk permitting, I shall never want another pair of tight shoes," said a woman, "but if I should be tempted into asking myself unconfortable I know what I shall do to allay the pain. The misfortunes to the aching feet of a man who called on my fathom subdued for relief showed me a remedy. The man's shoes pinched in three different places. Having located the painful spots he first flipped a long strip of cotton flannel into boiling water and laid the cloth stretched tightly across the men's shoes. When the water began to evaporate he dampened the cloth again and repeated the process several times.

"Now," said he at last, 'your shoes are soft as mush feet.' No more pain.'

The man gave him a quarter, which was a small price to pay for relief from a pinching shoe."—New York Tribune.

A Curious Swiss Custom.

In one part of the canton of Ticino, Switzerland, a very quaint marriage ceremony prevails. The bridegroom dresses in his "Sunday best" and, accompanied by his many friends and relatives as he can muster for the fete, goes to claim his bride. Finding the door locked, he demands admittance. The inmates ask him his business, and he submits the detail of his chosen maiden. If his answer is deemed satisfactory he is successively introduced to a holdsaw of matrons and maids, some perhaps deformed and others old and ugly. They he is presented to some staid dame, and on whom he reports with some quaint comical merriment. The bridegroom, whose temper is sometimes sorely tried, is then informed that his sentence is passed and he is required to make his choice. Choice! no choice at all. He has to take the one he is destined for, and the ceremony is then concluded.

MORE EXCELLENT REPORTS FROM WESTERN CANADA

Grains Are Heading Out Rapidly and Harvest Is Now Approaching With a Great Demand for Harvest Help.

Last week it was pointed out in these columns that there would be a yield of about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat throughout Western Canada, an increase of about 100,000,000 over the previous year, and that the demand for farm help was very great. Confirmation of this news is to hand and the cry still is for more help. The Canadian authorities are leaving nothing the friends of the 400,000 or 500,000 Americans who have gone to Canada during the last few years will come to the help of these people and induce as many able-bodied men as they possibly can to take advantage of the low rate which is being offered from all points on the Canadian Boundary, and particulars at which can be had from any of the following Agents of the Canadian Government: M. V. McInnes, 176 Jefferson Avenue, Detroit, Mich.; C. A. Laurier, Marquette, Mich.; J. S. Crawford, Syracuse, N. Y.; Thos. Hetherington, Room 230, 73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.; H. M. Williams, 413 Gardner Bldg., Toledo, Ohio; Geo. Ahd, 216 Traction Terminal Bldg., Indianapolis, Indiana; C. J. Broughton, Room 412, 31 L. & T. Bldg., Chicago, Ill.; Geo. A. Hall, 2nd Floor, 125 Second Street, Milwaukee, Wis.; E. T. Holmes, 315 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.; Chas. Pilling, Clifford Block, Grand Forks, N. D.; J. B. Carbonneau, Jr., 217 Main Street, Biddeford, Me.; D. M. MacLachlan, Pierce 952 Waterlaws, S. D.; W. V. Bennett, Room 4, Bee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.; W. H. Rogers, 125 West 9th Street, Kansas City, Mo.; Benj. Davies, Room 6, Lunn Block, Great Falls, Montana; Jas. S. Grieve, Auditorium Building, Spokane, Wash.

Every facility will be afforded men of the right stamp to secure advantage of these low rates. To those who propose to go, it may be said that they will have this splendid opportunity of securing first hand information as to the excellent producing character of the lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. They will have the opportunity of seeing some of the greatest wheat fields in the world and probably the largest yield of wheat, oats and barley that has ever been grown on the Continent. And all this on land rame of which cost the settler only the $10.00 necessary to enter for his homestead, or, if he purchased, in some cases, costing him from $7.00 to $10.00 per acre, but which is now worth from $15.00 to $20.00 per acre. Even at these prices the land is remarkably cheap as will be understood when the statement is made that from 20 to 25 bushels per acre and over of wheat are grown, netting the farmer from $8.00 to $10.00 per acre; and this on land that he got for nothing or paid merely a nominal price for it, the fact tha productiva shows that $18.00 to $20.00 per acre would be a nominal price for land that would produce as these lands produce.

Another Pressing Need.

It a well enough to devote a lot of time and a good deal of money and effort to the composition of a National anthem, but what's the matter with giving us a National wedding march?

Must we be forever indebted to the marches of an erratic Bavarian and a lop sided Bohemian?

Here's an opportunity far ambitious native composers.

Think of the pride that would follow such an announcement as this:

CURE THAT SORE THROAT

Sore throat is inflammation of the mucous membrane of the throat, and if this membrane happens to be at all sensitive a predisposition to sore throat will exist.

Paxtine Toilet Antiseptic is both a preventative and a cure for sore throat because it possesses extraordinary cleansing, healing and germicidal qualities. Just a little in a glass of water, used as a gargle, will quickly relieve all soreness and strengthen the mucous membranes of the throat, and thus overcome all tendency to sore throat.

Paxtina is far superior to liquid antiseptics or Peroxido for all toilet and hygienic uses.

Paxtino may be obtained at any drug store, 25 and 50c a box, or sent postpaid upon receipt of price by The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass. Send for a free sample.

A LIKELY SPOT FOR TROUT

FOOT SHELTER OR TEMPORARY CAMP

IF COURSE, it is not within possibility that every man who reads this can go to Alaska, or the wild sections of the northwest, or any of the parts of God's country where big game and big adventure still beckon to the men with red blood in their necks. But it is possible for even men on small salaries to own a permanent camp at their own in wild unfrequented places, places where they can be free from the presence of the summer boarders and of reech of the sound of the trolleys and even where the honk of the automobile is seldom heard. Such places exist within a hundred miles of almost every city in America, but they can only be found by making little journeys in search of them. They are not on the list of the real estate boomers because the very thing that makes them valuable to campers is the fact that they are tucked away in unfrequented corners. The mountains in Pennsylvania within a hundred miles of New York city, notably in Pike county, abound in small lakes, lakes which are usually filled with big fish or which can be stocked with bass and other fish, according to the conditions of the water and tastes of the fisherman. There also exists within the circle of a hundred miles of New York city belt a spare supply at such big game as lynx, bob-cat, wild cats, black bear, Virginia deer and smaller game, including foxes, raccoons, possum, great northern hare, rabbits, rough grouse, woodcock, various waterfowl and quail. Of course, it is almost a crime under present conditions for any one to help the rapid extermination of these animals by killing those found so near the centers of population, but, with proper conservation and common sense game in this supply can be made to last indefinitely and at the same time furnish game for the sportsmen, and the many people who became interested in outdoor life the greater will be the interest exhibited in the efforts made to protect and increase the wild life of our woods.

It is a fact not generally known that the public is almost wholly dependent upon the sportsman at this country for the enforcement and the enactment of the laws protecting the wild life.

It is usually the chump who does not know one end of the gun from the other, and who could not kindle a camp fire without the aid of the Sunday edition of a newspaper and a can of kerosene whom you find at the lobster palaces loudly calling for a hat-bird and a cold bottle. One of the rules of the Camp Fire Club of America is to have no game served at its banquets, and this club probably contains more big game hunters and big game hunters than any other club of its size in the world.

Since the advent of the automobile and the telephone wild lands and the farm lands have steadily increasing in value; nevertheless, camp sites can still be purchased for sums within the reach of poor men, and I would advise every man in every city to buy a small piece of wild land with the determination of keeping it wild. He will find that when he has invested his money and built a camp on a piece of property at first he will find his business interests will require him to visit it occasionally to look after its welfare, and every time he visits the place he can few days' outing will give him a new lease on life. He will come back with a clearer vision, more optimistic views of business, stronger mental grip and better fitted for the battle of existence. His outdoor vacation will teach him that life, after all, is worth the living. I have known a man to camp for twenty odd years and I really do not think I would be alive today if it were not for the time spent at my little log house in Pike county on Big Trout pond.

When you plan for a camping trip remember that there is one kind of a man who is welcome at every camp fire from one end of the world to the other, and he is the cheerful man. He may be a big, sleeping elephant, he may be a little runt, he may be a wealthy monopolist, or a poor clerk, he may be even so weak and delicate that it is arduous labor for him to bring a stick for the camp fire, but he carries with him always something more valuable that arms and ammunition, something more valuable than wood, fire or shelter, something that cannot be bought with money and something that is absolutely essential for any one to have in camp or out of it. He is a man who never sulks but, like a boy scout, always has a smile. When the rain comes down in torrents he laughs as he mends the leak in the roof of the leanto or brush shelter. When the smoke blows in his eyes he declares with a grin that it is good for them for the tears clear out the dust. When he misses a shot he will say: "It would have been too bad to kill that critter, anyhow; glad he got away," or that the camp is not in need of fresh meat today. The cheerful man always takes an interest in everything, looks on the bright side of everything, and camp is but a gloomy place without him. If you cannot find a cheerful man for a companion go in training for one yourself so that you may occupy that enviable position and bring sunshine to your comrades.

In outfitting for a temporary camp, you must be guided wholly by your purse and the means of transportation. If you are to travel in a big wagon or a house boat you can add many luxuries to your outfit, provided, of course, that the route or waters permit a heavy load. I have camped with an ice chest, a full set of china, napkins and all the luxuries, essentials and non-essentials of a city home. I have also camped with only the bare necessities of life and even necessities are comparative and many things thought so necessary may be omitted without serious results. I remember making one meal with the late Mr. Bow-Arrow, chief of the Montenais Indians, and Mr. Rice, secretary of the Camp Fire Club of America, when the stock of our provisions consisted of some odd crusts of bread two weeks old, a handful of tea, no salt, no pepper, no vinegar, no butter, no milk, no sugar, no camp kettle, no cooking utensils of any kind, and yet we had a very enjoyable meal. Mr. Rice had the honor of showing an Indian how to make a tea kettle at birch bark out of praying to the ingenious savage that the water could be boiled in a vessel made of such inflammable material. We toasted the bread, which was as hard as stone, to give it a flavor, as well as to make it easier to bite and masticate. We caught some trout and roasted them black. The burnt surface acted as a candiment to the meet. We drank the tea straight and enjoyed it.

But it is not often necessary to reduce one's commissary to such a primitive basis. When you have selected your camp outfit and personal baggage, have bags made for every article, bags with "pucker" or "draw string. Make the bags of different material and different colors. You will soon learn by observing the color of the bag whether it contains a fishing reel, tobacco or toilet articles. Use all silk for your toothbrush bag, buckskin or chamois skin for your dirty bag in which you pack your nick-nacks, thread, needles and personal treasures, when you do not wish to carry them on your person, such things as your sleeve buttons, collar buttons, watch, compass, etc. Use oil cloth flannel for your fish resis, chintz or calico for your camb, brush, fly-books and other small articles. The big bags for your blankets, extra clothing, provisions, etc., should be made of waterproof canvas. Pack all your duffle, first in its individual bags and then put the small bags into the big ones. These large bags can be purchased at seventy-five cents to a dollar and a half apiece, with a dollar extra for a lock (if you went one). The bags have double tops and edges strongly bound with linen braid, and they vary in size from 12 feet 9 inches to 2 feet 18 inches. In regard to a lock on your duffle bags, it is interesting to know that I have travelled across the continent a number of times with all my baggage packed in such bags. I have visited the Maine woods. I have camped in the Rockies, in the Sahlek mountains and from Maine to Washington state; never were the "puckers" unloosened or tampered with, by strangers. The bags seem to have been respected even by the custom house officers. But! When I visited a small hamlet in Connecticut and left my baggage in the railroad station unguarded for 15 minutes, every bag was opened and the contents examined. I will say for the honesty of the Connecticut Yankee that it was apparently only curiosity which impelled him to invade the privacy of the contents of them bags. This incident shows that these canvas bags should be watched in some places, but, nevertheless, they are as safe ordinarily as a trunk. Besides, the baggage man are grateful to you for giving them luggage which is easily handled and so easily stowed away. Today the camper's outfit is a marvel of economy, both in regard to weight and space which it occupies. You can obtain from any reputable outfitter cooking utensils which nest, i. e, which fit into each other snugly so that they can all be packed in the largest utensil. They are made of aluminum of the lightest weight possible; the cooking utensils have a single detachable handle which answers for all of them. Plates, cups and saucers are of the lightest weight possible. My whole outfit, which I have used for nine people on a prolonged camping trip, all fits inside of the largest aluminum pail. Cheaper outfits of the same sort can be obtained in the. In regard to the clothing which you are to wear, that necessarily depends very much upon the latitude of your proposed camping trip and whether it will be in the dense forests, prairies, the hot desert; or the sandy ocean beach. But there are some general rules which may be given. Your clothing should be rather light, fit loosely, and no thicker than the climate demands. In this you must use your judgment; take enough warm clothes to secure against suffering from the cold. Even with this, a most careful forethought you will sometimes be caught in uncomfortable situations. I once went into camp with thick flannels and woolen clothes and found them most comfortable as the nights were so cold as to freeze the water in the pails so that the ice was broken with some difficulty. Yet within a week from that time, having no chance to make a change in my clothing, I was almost overcome with the intense heat while crossing a barren portage.

Probably the best material for underclothing is not wool, but linen. Wool makes a most comfortable outar garment unless you are going to the arctic, and there you will find the fur the most useful. Linen, silk and cotton absorb the moisture of the body much better than woolen under garments. The best should be encased in moccasins or some sort of mackesin shoe pack or hnot-pack, because the artificial elevation of the bed which, however useful when pounding on the city pavaments, is unnatural, and anything that is unnatural interferes more or less with your progress. After wearing conventional healed shoes for 12 months, I have put on the leather moccasins of oiled mauso hide and tramped through the forests for weeks at a time without feeling my ill effects from the change. But when I returned and put on my high-heeled shoes, the first day spent hitting the trail on the Great White Way made the muscles of my shins as sore that I was almost unable to walk the next day.

For shelter or temporary camp for a night or so, do not use the "eschagan" of the Indians, commonly known as teepee by the whites. It is a splendid thing for a mare or less permanent camp, but it takes too long to erect it; there are too many poles to cut for it, and it is heavy and cumbersome in packing. The big fire which can be kept burning in the center of the "eschagan" is fine in cold nights, and the comforts af the teepee have never been improved upon by white inventors of tents.

The best of all teechers for would-be campers is good old mother nature. She does her kindly old soul! It was at her knees that our race first learned to exercise its baby brain and muscles. It was in nature's kindergarten that we learned to build our first rude shelters, from which has evolved sky-scraping palaces. Even today we people living in the artificial atmosphere of the opera, the ball, the midnight feasts at the lobster palaces, and all that hotbouse type of pleasure, must go back to good old mother nature to be really enthused end to experience the beethy thrill, only to be produced by the beam of the avalanche in the teers down the mountain side, the rush and roar of the tarrents issuing from the grinding glecians, the roar of the sea, the song of the birds, and the rapture experienced by watching the sunset clouds reflect their tints upon the mountain tops. And then comes the night! Every camper is more or less of a naturelist; every camper must be something of a poet and an artist before he can fully appreciate the surroundings; and he must necessarily be moka a poet, and an artist and a naturalist at him.

The best advice that can be given to a man who is going to camp for the first time is "go and do it." It is possible that he may come back from his outing disgusted with the first experience. He may have apparently followed his experiment; it may have refused most of the time; the black flies and mosquitoes may have stred him up as a tenderfoot and made his life miserable; it may be that the fish refused to bita; that the game refused to show it-self, but these things have a tendency to make a man love the life more than ever. Your camping trip will put you right in a few days.

FALSE HUNGER

A Symptom of Stomach Troubla Corrected by Good Food.

There is, with same forms of stomach trouble, an abnarmal craving for food which is frequently mistaken for a "good appetite." A lady teachar writes from Carthage, Mo., to' explain how with good food she is dealt with this sort of hurtful bunger.

"I have taught school for fifteen years, and by my own overwork and bad, good, average health. Nine years ago, however, my health began to fail, and continued to grow worse steadily, in spite of doctor's prescriptions, and the best medical treatment I could get. Sometime my appetite continued good, only the mare I ate the mare I wanted to eat was always hungry.

"The first symptoms of my breakdown were a distressing nervousness and loss of flesh. The nervousness grew so bad that finally it amounted to actual prostration.' Then came stomach trouble, with very painful, very painful, constipation which brought on piles, dyspepsia end severe nervous headaches.

"The doctors seemed powerless to help me, and I was overworn ago, and at last urged me to give up teaching, if I wished to save my life.

"But this I could not do, and kept on at it as well as I could, each day growing more wretched, my willpower alone keeping me up, till at last a good angel suggested that I try a diet of Grape-Nuts food, and from that day to this I have found it delicious always appetizing and satisfying.

"I owe my restoration to health to Grape-Nuts. My weight has returned and for mare than two years I have been free from the nervousness, constipation, piles, headaches, and all the ailments that used to punish me so, and have been able to work freely and really." "She Is Gone, Then!" Gasped the Boy.

The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

ILLUSTRATIONS BY DERBROOK HELVILL

COPYRIGHT 1903 BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prospector in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blinding blizzard but are confronted by the husband instead. He is shot by the wife, but the chivalrous boy puts a note to the body, taking the crime upon himself.

PROLOGUE—Continued.

The Storm Without.

Who woman's first thought when she stepped outside the door was that at all hazards they must go back. The wind almost swept her away; only the steadying grasp of the boy, better prepared than she for the attack of the storm, enabled her to keep her feet. Yet the presence of that ghastly thing in the floor which was affecting even her iron nerve, prevented their return. Whatever happened they must go on! The door of that slaughter was closed to them forever by the dead or dying tenant. She realized however, that their chances of escaping freezing to death in this mad endeavor were as small as to be practically none. Well, fate had forced her into this position. She would follow the path she had chosen, whatever might be at the end of the way.

Speech was well nigh impossible. The boy staggered on past the window, and she followed until the lee of the house was reached. Between a great drift and the wall, in a little open space the horses were tied.

The boy was a natural horseman. He had picked out the best two broncos in the camp. If any animals could take them to safety, these could. Not yet chilled by the fierce cold, they united the shivering, reluctant, terrified horses from the wooden pins driven into the chinks between the log walls of the house to which they had been hitched, mounted them, and threading their way round the drift started southward on their awful ride. They left death behind them—and lo! death loomed before and on either hand.

Except where the stream was broken by houses, drifts had not yet formed. The wind was too terrific; it swept the level prairie clean. But away from the shelter of the house they got the full force of it. Although they were thickly clad in wool and fur, the pressure of the storm drove their garments against their bodies, and soon filled them with icy cold. There was no help for it as relief from it. They had to bear it. They could only bend their backs to it and keep on, trusting to the endurance of their horses.

The woman judged that it had been about one in the morning when they had started. The Overland Limited ran through the station at three. No horses that lived could have made that 15 miles in two hours under those conditions. It was more than probable, however, that the limited would be greatly delayed by the storm, and if they kept going steadily they would be likely to catch it. At any rate, when they reached the station, they would find food, fire and shelter.

If their horses did not give out, if they were not turned adrift on foot in the storm and snow, and left to plod on until they fell and slept, and froze, and died, they would perhaps get away.

Nitro experienced than the boy, all these possibilities were present to her. She did not pray, she could ask nothing of God; but she went warily and carefully, helping the horse where she could.

As for her companion, he did not give these matters very much consideration. His keen gaze toward the south to the railroad station because that was the only thing to be done.

Another, however, rode with him, if not with her. Before his eyes was ever present that gory, grisly spectacle of a human form, the red blood welling from its breast, redder still from the white snow with which he had covered that awful figure, beckoned him on. He was younger, once better, than she. He was more than brave; she was all knave. Her thoughts went forward to what was before her; but his went backward to what was behind.

After a long time it seemed to them that the fierceness of the storm was somewhat abated. The wind was certainly falling; but the drifts were steadily rising, and their progress was more difficult every moment for that cause. Their very souls were numb with the awful cold. Still they went forward, slower now, and more slowly ever.

Now for they had come, what time it was, where they were, neither he nor she could tell. It seemed to them both that they had been hours on the way. The woman was sure that they must have compassed the greater part of the journey, when her horse suddenly stumbled and fell. Her broncho's matchless endurance had at last been exhausted by the terrible struggle of their journey. He lay dying where he fell, and nothing she could do could get him up again. The boy had stopped, of course, when her horse had fallen. He had dismounted and helped her to rise. He had sustained her vain efforts to get her own played out horse on its feet. The two now stood staring at each other in dismay.

"You must take my horse," said the boy at last.

The woman nodded. With his assistance she climbed slowly and painfully into the saddle, took the reins from the boy, and started on. Her companion caught hold of the stirrup leather and staggered forward by her side. The going was now infinitely harder for the remaining horse. The woman immediately realized that with this almost dead weight plunging through the deep drifts and dragging heavily at the stirrup leather, the remaining bronco would soon be exhausted.

She had meant to pay for him but it could not be. And so for a long time the trio plodded on in this way, the woman serving herself to a frightful action as best she could. She hesitated to do it. She was reluctant—

But no horse that ever lived could stand such a strain. She knew that it would be a matter of minutes now when she must—and she was sufficiently inspired by her fear and love to make it stick—to have them shove the ordinary feeling of loneliness. Nevertheless, he was ten peremptorily loosening, and at this particular moment desperately so.

He had drifted into New York some 25 years before, utterly unheralded unnoticed. He had begun by filling a small clerkship in a little dry goods store. He kept at it until he owned the store, and after that a larger store on a better street. He had developed a genius for trade, and an executive ability in accord, until the original little shop had expanded into a 15 story building covering a block as the principal thoroughfare of New York city, and its owner had become a power in finance,—a merchant prince. Such was George Gormly.

He was, too, a scrupulously honest man. He sold good goods, without deceit. Things were as he represented them. He established principles of accommodation in his dealings that were unique when they were first installed in New York. He made no dishonest dollars. His money was good everywhere because it was untainted. He prospered exceedingly, one expansion following another. Eschewing speculation of any kind and devoting himself strictly to the business, he found himself in middle life the head, the foot, the sole owner, of the greatest enterprise of the kind that the world had ever seen.

This had not been achieved lightly. He had brought it about because, with absolute singleness of heart, he had put every ounce of strength and time and talent, which he him annointed to genius, at the service of his affairs. Time, talent, and genius do not always produce such results; fortune still must be considered in the game. Opportunity had favored Gormly. He had succeeded in everything beyond his own or anyone's wildest dreams.

His might have gone on indefinitely in his mercantile operations without attracting special attention to himself personally; had it not been for one fact. That momentous happening was his meeting with Miss Haldane.

It had come about in a commonplace way enough. Miss Haldane, deeply interested in social settlement work and being brought in contact thereby with some of the poorer employees of the great Gormly establishment, had concluded to call on the proprietor thereof to see if she could not induce him to make some adequate contribution to the work she had so much at heart. Like every other business man in New York, Gormly was overwhelmed by charitable demands. His business was one thing; his charity another. He employed a special secretary to look after the eleemosynary end of his affairs.

There were two reasons why the secretary felt himself unequal to deal with Miss Haldane and her demands. The first reason was Miss Haldane herself. She was a member of one of the oldest and most exclusive circls in New York society. Her family was one of the richest and most prestige; in that hive of multi-millionaire worldlydom also—rare, and other people. The second was the magnitude of Miss Haldone's demand. She want of something like a million dollars. This amount appalled the secretary. She realized east a man like Gormly would do such a thing as that for her or would much rather give a million than a dime to an undertaking that needed to be financed. Gormly having devoted his attention so exclusively to his business heretofore, was rather stingy with large bundle of the amount. He would have been more staggered by it had he been less busy to refuse it peremptorily.

Miss Haldane had beauty, thousands of people—women, that is, and men, too, perhaps—have that. She had more; she had presence and personality. Hundreds of men, and some few women, have these.

Those who have all three in either set are rare and come to view infrequently. Added to them, Miss Haldane's undoubted beauty, or Miss Haldane's charming breeding and manner, or Miss Haldane's force of character and determination, that most impressed him, or all three, the instant subjugation was due to the influence of all three, Gormly could not tell.

He was not a man of sexual impulse, as lonely people usually are. By analyzing himself he learned to analyze others, introspection and observation had been great factors in his success. Here again his experience was at fault; for Miss Haldane defied analysis. It was a breath of summer compounded of a thousand balmy scents cannot be resolved into its elements, save by the hard scientist who in insensible to its fragrance.

The Wonders About Us.

Let not earn and humdrum deaden us to the wonders and mysteries amid which we live, nor to its splendors and glories. We need not transport ourselves in imagination to some other sphere or state of being to find the marvelous, the divine, the transcendent; we need not postpone our day of wonder and appreciation to some future time and condition. The true loveliness of this great visible world hanging like an apple on the bough of the great cosmic tree, and swelling with the juice and potencies of life, transcends anything we have dreamed of superterrestrial abodes.—John Burroughs.

Friend Indeed.

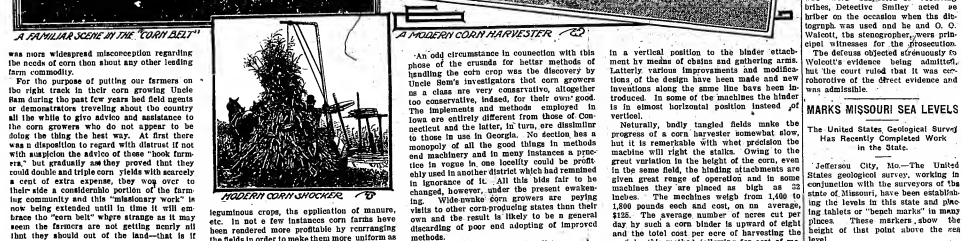
UP-TO-DATE METHODS OF HANDLING THE CORN CROP

THERE is no branch of agricultural activity in the United States where the past few years has witnessed greater improvement in methods of cultivation and harvesting than in the sphere of corn growing. This is as it should be for corn is easily one of our most important crops. Indeed, although the fact is not generally recognized, it is a greater wealth producer—considered in the broad sense—than is the wheat crop. The advance which has been made concerns not only the methods employed in nurturing and handling the corn crop but also the means employed, that is the machinery which is doing so much to aid human brawn in caring for the golden kernels.

Whereas progressive farmers have in many instances worked out their own salvation as regards the improved methods of corn cultivation, it is perhaps only fair to give the major portion of the credit to the United States department of agriculture, which has worked in co-operation with the State Agricultural colleges and experiment stations to bring about a better understanding of the requirements of the corn crop. Many an old-fashioned farmer has been wont to assume that every tiller of the soil knew from his boyhood apprenticeship on the farm all that there is to know about growing corn and yet the experts of the agriculture department found that in reality there was more widespread misconception regarding the needs of corn than about any other leading farm commodity.

A FAMILIAR SCENE IN THE "CORN BELT"



A MODERN CORN HARVESTER

For the purpose of putting our farmers on the right track in their corn growing Uncle Sam during the past few years had field agents or demonstrators traveling about the country all the while to give advice and assistance to the corn growers who do not appear to be doing the thing the best way. At first there was a disposition to regard with distrust if not with suspicion the advice of these "book farmers," but gradually as they proved that they could double and triple corn yields with scarcely a cent of extra expense, they won over to their side a considerable portion of the farming community and this "missionary work" is now being extended until in time it will embrace the "corn belt" where strange as it may seem the farmers are not getting nearly all that they should out of the land—that is if you list these government sharps tell it.

The first boost that was given to the American corn crop came through improvement in seed selection. The experts have induced the farmers to select their seed corn with great care in the field instead of merely making use of what happens to remain in the crib at planting time and the improvement from this cause alone has approximates at least twenty per cent. Most of the progressive corn growers have also awakened to the wisdom of properly treating the seed corn by keeping it dry during the winter in a special, seed house instead of merely entrusting it to the corn crib in the old, haphazard way. It has now come to the pass where the best quality of corn is worth $25 per bushel more for seed purposes than unselected corn.

A second effective method of improving our corn crop has as its purpose the improvement of the condition of the soil in accordance with the studied requirements of corn cultivation. Modern science is teaching the farmer that it simply will not pay to attempt corn growing on poor land until it is brought into a fertile condition by the growing and plowing under of leguminous crops, the application of manure, etc. In not a few instances corn farms have been rendered more profitable by rearranging the fields in order to make them more uniform as regards moisture and soil fertility. Soil washing, that is, the washing away of the surface soil—one of the bugbears of corn growing—is being prevented by systematic means such as were almost unheard of a few years ago.

The big problem of fertilizers is one which touches the very heart of the corn-growing industry and the experts in and out of the government service have prepared very explicit directions for enabling the corn grower to add to his soil nitrogen or whatever other ingredients are most needed to produce the longed-for prize ears of corn. It has been found upon investigation that many farmers have had very different ideas as to how corn should be planted and cultivated but at the same time it has been discovered that no hard and fast rules can be laid down as applicable to the whole country. The corn grower who is cultivating a deep soil in a section where there is prolonged dry weather will obviously have to proceed on a different theory from the man whose land is low and wet. The point that is being driven home is that each farmer must study his own particular needs.

A MODERN CORN HARVESTER

An odd circumstance in connection with this phase of the crusade for better methods of handling the corn crop was the discovery by Uncle Sam's investigators that corn growers as a class are very conservative, altogether too conservative, indeed, for their own good. The implements and methods employed in Iowa are entirely different from those of Connecticut and the latter, in turn, are dissimilar to those in use in Georgia. No section has a monopoly of all the good things in methods and machinery and in many instances a practice, however, under the present awakening. Wide-awake corn growers are paying visits to other corn-producing states than their own and the result is likely to be a general discarding of poor end adopting of improved methods.

The depth of planting, the distances between rows and hills and the depth and frequency of cultivation are all corn problems that are being solved along dependable scientific lines after a century or more of discussion and dispute. Meanwhile the improvement of corn cultivating and harvesting machinery has worked wonders in bringing about the results now in the corn fields. Mechenical corn harvesters have developed more slowly than the machines for wheat and other cereals, attempts to solve the problem of mechanically handling the corn crop dating from 1830, whereas it was not until 1831 that Cyrus Mc. Cormick made the first reaping machine.

Despite the fact that there was almost continuous experiment in the sphere of corn harvesting machinery from the date above mentioned it was not until 1892 that success crowned the efforts of the inventors. The principle in corn harvesters and binders which was destined to prevail appeared in the year mentioned, the invention of an Illinois man. In its elementary form it consisted of a corn harvester with the two dividers passing, one on each side of a row of corn, which was cut and carried back in a vertical position to the binder attachment by means of chains and gathering arms. Latterly various improvements and modifications of the design have been made and new inventions along the same line have been introduced. In some of the machines the binder is in almost horizontal position instead of vertical.

Naturally, badly tangled fields make the progress of a corn harvester somewhat slow, but it is remarkable with what precision the machine will right the stalks. Owing to the great variation in the height of the corn, even in the same field, the binding attachments are given great range of operation and in some machines they are placed as high as 72 inches. The machines weigh from 1,400 to 1,800 pounds each and cost, on an average, $125. The average number of acres cut per day by such a corn binder is upward of eight and the total cost per acre of harvesting the corn by this method (allowing for cost of machine, wages of driver, cutlay for twine, etc.) averages about $1.50. Corn shockers cost about as much as corn binders and weigh approximately the same. These are the labor saving machines for owners of small farms who do most of their own work. A man with three horses and a corn shocker can cut and put up acres of corn per day at a total expense of $1.06 per acre as against $1.50 per acre with the machine previously described.

The fundamental features of the corn shocker are the circular rotating cutters which cut the corn as the machine advances and the circular rotating table upon which the corn is collected vertically to form a shock. A loading device for handling the shocks adds greatly to the efficiency of the modern approved type of machines. Corn pickers, machines which remove the ears from the stalks (which latter are left in the field) cost $250 each and are operated at an expense of $1.81 per acre. Combined huskers and shredders are the latest additions to corn handling machinery and on up-to-date farms these are in many instances operated by gasoline engines.

Nervousness--A Lack of Control

How often we meet women who complain of being nervous. What they really mean is that they have not control of their nerves, but let them run away. A woman may be of a nervous temperament and yet have such good control of her nerves that she never complains of being nervous.

This lack of nerve control manifests itself in various ways. Sometimes it is only a tendency to cry at trivial things or an inclination to despondency —to have "the blues," or to worry over real or fancied slights. Many women waste so much time thinking over things that are past and over each visit with a friend loses its joy in the afterthought, for this victim of the nerves lives over again every moment of the visit. She recalls everything that has been said and wonders if a different meaning was meant. Things that were said as a joke and originally taken that way are now brought up for criticism and pondered over until she woman convinces herself of the presence of a hidden meaning. She is not satisfied until she has bent and shaped the original thoughtless sentence into an ugly sting.

These nervous women are the ones who are constantly tormented with the demon of jealousy. If one of them should suddenly meet her husband on the street walking with another woman, what a curtain lecture he receives that evening; or if not that, he finds his wife wearing the air of one who considers herself much abused. The real facts of the case may be that her husband met the other woman quite accidently and, as they were going in the same direction, he could not avoid walking with her without being positively rude. In this age men must of necessity have business transactions with women. It is a common occurrence for two men to lunch together in order to have a chance to talk over some important business matter without fear of interruption. There is no reason why a man and woman might not do the same, and yet how impossible it would be to convince the jealous woman that this was the case. To be jealous is to acknowledge the superior charms of the other woman. "If I cannot hold you against all women, then I do not want you," is the right thought. If you think some other woman is attracting your husband, wake up and beat her at her own game. Do not sit idly in the corner and complain.

A woman who is nervous does not usually realize what is the cause of her condition. When excitable and irritable and suffering from a nervous headache, she takes various remedies to deaden the symptoms instead of looking the matter squarely in the face and going after the cause. Many women need a hobby to take up their spare time. If their minds were occupied and their bodies kept in a good condition by proper care, they would soon gain control of their nerves.

To Raize Old Paris Fortress

Fortifications Now Useless—Undesirable Persons Rent Space From Government and Attack Pedestrians.

There is talk, as there has been talk for years, of leveling the fortifications of Paris, which are perfectly useless now in the improved conditions of modern warfare, and of building houses on the large tract of ground which would be set free right round Paris. At present the fortifications are not only useless as a protection to the city in time of war, but they are absolutely dangerous to the citizens in time of peace. According to the law a large space around the fortifications is kept free of all stone buildings. This military zone, as it is called, has no houses upon it, but little obestory huts are allowed to be built there and are rented at tiny rentals by the military authorities. Their cheapness and discomfort attract undesirable tenants, and the Paris epache has for years made a hunting ground of the fortifications.

Only a few days ago a rich Russian, M. Ivanoff, bed gone for a drive in a taxicab. The motor broke down near the fortifications, and while it was being put right M. Ivenoff went for a stroll. He was not more than a couple of hundred yards away from his cab when two men and two women attacked him, stabbed him in seven places, robbed him of all his money and his watch and chain and a valuable scarfpin, and left him for dead. The two women have been arrested, but their companions are still at large. The incident is being used as another argument for the leveling of the fortifications. Another argument still is, of course, the great value of the land for building purposes.

DICTOGRAPH AS A DETECTIVE

Recently Invented Instrument Plays an Important Part in the Ohio Bribery Trial.

Columbus, O.—In the trial of Rodney J. Diegle, sergeant-at-arms of the Ohio state senate, convicted of aiding and abetting the alleged bribing of a state senator, the state relied on a mechanical device, the dictograph, a highly sensitized telephone, for its strongest evidence.

The dictograph transmitter was secreated in a detective's room in a hotel and a court stenographer in another room, reported the conversation in which it was alleged bribes were offered and accepted.

For the first time in the history of detective work this curious machine was used.

A dictograph consists of a series of sensitive metal plates sat in a hard rubber cylinder. In its elements it is a telephone transmitter magnified. Used in a business way it enables a man to sit at his desk in his private office alone and talk off his correspondence without the stenographer being present. The stenographer may be in the next room or the other side of the building, but she hears the words as distinctly as though she were at his elbow and sets them down.

The detectives got some of the suspected men, separately and together, in a hotel room, a dictograph was under the sofa. A court reporter was at the other end. Word for word his nimble fingers recorded every word that was uttered. None but he and the detectives knew.

Nothing escaped the transmitter—not even the opening or closing of the door—and the stenographer transcribed everything which the little instrument reported to him. This report was admitted as evidence by the judge who presided at the trial.

The inventor of the instrument is K. M. Turner.

In order to entrap the legislators who were suspected of receiving bribes, Detective Smiley acted as briber on the occasion when the dictograph was used and he and O. O. Walcott, the stenographer, were principal witnesses for the prosecution.

The defense objected strenuously to Wolcott's evidence being admitted, but the court ruled that it was corroborative of the direct evidence and was admissible.

MARKS MISSOURI SEA LEVELS

The United States Geological Survey Has Recently Completed Work in the State.

Jefferson City, Mo.—The United States geological survey, working in conjunction with the surveyors of the state of Missouri, has been establishing the levels in this state and placing tablets or "bench marks" in many places. These markers, show the height of that point above the sea level.

These bench marks are of two forms. One is a circular bronze or aluminum tablet three and one-half inches in diameter and one-fourth inch thick, having a 3-inch stem which is inserted in a drill hole in solid rock in the wall of some public building, bridge abutment or other substantial masonry structure or in the solid rock.

The second form to be set in the ground where there is no rock or masonry, consists of a hollow wrought iron post four feet long. A bronze or aluminum table is riveted over the top of the post and it is sunk into the ground so that the top protrudes about six inches.

The tablets are stamped with the words: "U. S. Geological Survey. Missouri." The elevation in feet above sea level is marked on the tablet and the words: "Two hundred and fifty dollars fine for disturbing this mark."

Old Church as Garage.

Long Hill, Conn.—The old white First Methodist church building, steeple and all, for many years used as a place of worship and the first church built in the town of Trumbull, has given away to the progress of the times and garage. The edifice, which stands almost in the center of the village, has long been a landmark. The steeple will be retained, the galleries will be made into waiting rooms for women and the pulpit and platform a show place for accessories.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Second Coxey Army Threatens Capital

WASHINGTON.—An army of unemployed men proposes to soon swoop down on this city following in the footsteps of Coxey's famous army. James Eads How of St. Louis, friend of the proletariat and protector of the wandering tramp, will head this great movement that is to overflow Maryland, sweep into the District of Columbia and spend its force against the walls of the national capitol and the great buildings of state along the Washington thoroughfares. It will be the first march of protest since the utter failure of the Coxey movement back in the '90s.

Somewhere between 250,000 and 500,000 of workless workers are expected to join in the march of the discontented. The campaign to gather them up is already under way. The first plans for the great march were made last spring at the Hobo convention in Milwaukee. These have since been perfected and it is hoped now that half a million from the party of discontent will join the protesting column in its march upon the capital city.

James Eads How, the St. Louis millionaire worker in the realms of trampdom, the man who laid aside the dress shirt for the blue flannel of the worker, is the moving spirit in this movement. He has been in the valley towns along the Ohio for weeks hushing the propaganda of this latter-day crusade that is expected to shake the walls of indifference and make it possible for every man who wants it to have a job.

Coxey was the leader of the first of the great marches of protest. His men marched so far that the spirit of the column was gone long before it came within striking distance of Washington. It was a failure. This army dwindled away, and but a handful of those that started on the movement stuck until the end. How and his lieutenants are studying the history of this march and hope to profit by the mistakes of Coxey and his aids. How hopes to make this march last spring at the Hobo convention in a crusade against things as they are.

Midshipmen May Early Become Ensigns

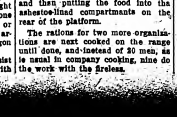
IF congress acts favorably on a recommendation made by the board of visitors to the United States Naval academy and indorsed by the secretary of the navy, a young man who has completed the course at the academy will be commissioned an ensign on graduation. Under the present law a graduate does not get his commission as an ensign until he has completed the two years' cruise at sea. This is, it is asserted, discriminates against the graduates of the Naval academy. A graduate from the Military academy at West Point gets his commission as a second lieutenant on the day of graduation, and a salary, which a graduate of the Naval academy cannot obtain until he has taken his two years' cruise.

Midshipmen receive $600 a year while at the Naval academy, under the new pay table, and during the two years they spend at sea they receive $1,400 annually. Not until they have passed their final graduation—that is to say, not until they have completed their two years' cruise—can they get the $1,700 which is paid to graduates from West Point to become second lieutenants and rank with ensigns.

The board of visitors to the academy has been urged to favor another change in the regulations of the school, but it has not yet consented to do so. This change, if granted, would relax the bar which now prevents a midshipman from marrying until he has completed his two years' cruise, or in other words, has obtained his commission as ensign.

The prohibition against marrying until final graduation is based on the assumption that the midshipman is not receiving salary enough to enable him to support a wife. The plea is made that this regulation discriminates against the midshipmen. There is no bar to a graduate of West Point marrying as soon as he receives his commission as second lieutenant.

Uncle Sam Fights to Save the Salmon



IN the interest of Alaskan salmon the extermination of the fresh-water sculpin, called also "miller's thumb," "bullhead," or "bloh," is urgently demanded. It is a worthless fish, with a tendency to feed on salmon fry and salmon eggs, and has a voracious appetite and wonderful digestive apparatus.

Barton A. Bean and Alfred C. Weed of the division of fishes, United States National museum, recently have investigated the "bloh" and find that it is extremely destructive to salmon eggs. These fish have no trouble gathering in the fry, two or three inches long, and occasionally manage to corner some larger ones.

Fourteen blohs were found to have made way with 39 salmon and 46 eggs, an average of almost three salmon and a little over three eggs for each fish. These blohs were not at all particular about holding to the average, as some of them had exceeded it materially, nor did they bear out the theory well known to every fisherman that the halt is first turned by the fish and swallowed head foremost. The bloh, it seems, eat them both ways.

The destructive average of the bloh is estimated at six salmon a day, which is maintained for about sixty days a year. This would make the destructive capacity of one fish total 360 salmon annually, to say nothing of the little trout gathered in and sometimes little blohs. The latter kind of feeding, however, meets with the approval of the fish experts.

Army Has a Mobile Fireless Kitchen

UNCLE SAM, like so many other alert and up-to-date housekeepers, is an advocate of fireless cooking. To further satisfy himself of the efficacy of this feature of preparing meals, he has set aside, through the war department, $5,000 for the construction and testing of the equipment of the mobile kitchen, which is the invention of Capt. Frederick Stopford, of the coast artillery corps, post commissary at the Presidio of San Francisco.

This rolling field kitchen is designed to feed men in the field on the march. And it is owing to the good service it has given, and which elicited praise from the officers in command, that the device is so highly thought of by Uncle Sam. The vehicle is equipped with a sufficient number of air-tight compartments to prepare the rations for two companies of infantry or troops of cavalry, the outfit being arranged to mount on any sort of wagon or truck.

These fireless compartments consist of a large improved field range with hot water attachments, a large tank for carrying hot water, and compartments for meat and utensils. About three hundred men, or a squadron of cavalry or a battalion of infantry, can be provided for by this kitchen, the manner of preparation being to arrange meals for two companies by first bringing to boiling on the range, and then putting the food into the asbestos-lined compartments on the rear of the platform.

The rations for two more organizations are next cooked on the range until done, and instead of 20 men, as is usual in company cooking, nine do the work with the fireless.

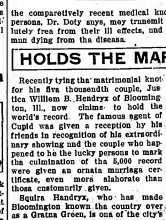
IN THE LIMELIGHT

PRIME MINISTER OF PERSIA

The ruler of a country which has been so wedded to ancient customs as to fall far behind in the progress of the world may have so intelligent and progressive and ever so determined a ministry of reforms, but he can accomplish little unless he can bring his advisers to his way of thinking. That is the position in which the young shah of Persia has found himself. Realizing that the financial system of his country is archaic and that there can be no real progress for Persia until the country's money affairs and credit are put on a firm and modern foundation, some months ago he invited W. Morgan Shuster and a corps of Americans to come to Persia and take full charge of the country's finances for a period of years. Mr. Shuster and his companions are in Persia now, but both they and the shah found great difficulties in their way.

The plan was bitterly opposed by many of the shah's most powerful advisers. Among these was Seghdri-Aram, prime minister, whose portrait is given. That official was so opposed to the Americans taking the finances out of his hands that he left Teheran, the capital, and tha reform was at a standstill. Recently, however, he has returned to his post of duty. The prime minister is a very able man, but he is difficult for him to abandon the semi-oriental ideas of government to which he has been trained.

DR. WILEY ON THE CARPET



Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, pure food expert, chief of the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture and one of the most widely known officials in the government service, was recently condemned by a committee on personnel of the department of agriculture, with a recommendation to President Taft that he "be permitted to resign." In an opinion on the case, submitted to the president, Attorney General Wickersham recommended approval of the committee's action.

It is charged against Dr. Wiley that he permitted an arrangement to be made with Dr. H. H. Rusby, a reconstructed pharmacognosist of Columbia university, New York, for compensation in excess of that allowed by law. It is asserted that the arrangement was to put Dr. Rusby on the pay roll of the department at $1,500 a year as an employe of the bureau of chemistry.

The chief chemist's friends declared he could show conclusively that he had the full sanction of Secretary Wilson for the agreement made with Dr. Rusby of New York for expert services to be compensated at a higher rate than the $11 a day, allowed by law.

FIGHTS CHOLERA INVASION

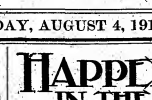
Dr. Alvah H. Doty, health officer of the port of New York, who is engaged in fighting the threatened invasion of cholera, is regarded as an efficient and watchful public official. He is a lecturer on quarantine sanitation at Bellevue Hospital Medical college and a fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine.

Dr. Doty says that the cholera germ can be received in one way only, through the mouth, and that there is no danger in ordinary contact with persons who have the disease.

However, Charles Duckhind, counsel for the complainants at the investigation of Dr. Doty's official conduct now in progress, declares he is told that the cholera patients recently placed in the hospital caught the disease not on the steamer, but at the immigration station, where all the passengers were detained after landing.

The danger, or rather the understanding of it, is further increased by the comparatively recent medical knowledge of "cholera carriers." These persons, Dr. Doty says, may transmit the germs, although themselves absolutely free from their ill effects, and ha as great a menace to others as a man dying from the disease.

HOLDS THE MARRYING RECORD



Recently tying the matrimonial knot for his five thousandth couple, Justice William B. Hendryx of Blooming ton, Ill., now claims to hold the world's record. The famous agent of Cupid was given a reception by his friends in recognition of his extraordinary showing and the couple who happened to be the lucky persons to mark the culmination of the 5,000 record were given an ornate marriage certificate, even more elaborate than those customarily given.

Squire Handryx, who has made Bloomington known the country over as a Gretna Green, is one of the city's most unique characters. Forty years a justice of the peace, he was recently honored by his fellow citizens and elected police magistrate, one of the most profitable offices in the gift of the people.

Although kept busy in looking after the municipal lawbreakers, he has not closed his remarkable marriage parlors, and sandwiches in the police court trials, with marriage. His is now marrying the grandchildren of persons he married shortly after the Civil war. He has hopes of living able to marry the fourth generation, establishing another extraordinary record.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Weeping Widow Quickly Weds Consoler

SWAINSBORO, Ga.—Standing beside the open grave into which the body of her husband was about to be lowered, Mrs. J. J. Jewell was hysterical with grief, and friends had to restrain her from throwing herself into the grave upon the casket of the man with whom she had lived happily for 15 years and who was the father of her six children.

Woman tried in vain to comfort her and the scene was an unusually painful one until Robert S. McDaniel, a young man who recently came here from Joplin, Mo., and who had become very friendly with Jewall, stepped close to the widow and whispered a few words through her heavy veil of black.

Whatever McDaniel said seemed to give the widow courage to bear up during the soul-trying "ashes-to-ashes, dust-to-dust" period of the ceremony, and she wilted through those painful moments with surprising fortitude, considering her pitiful condition before the whispered consolation given to her by McDaniel.

Turning from the grave when it was all over, she leaned on the arm of McDaniel as she walked to the gate, where she and her children were helped into a carriage by kind-hearted neighbors and were driven to the fatherless home, a little farm for which Mrs. Jewall and her husband had worked hard to pay.

Jewell died on Tuesday and the funeral wee held on Wednesday. The next day the widow drove into Swainsboro, accompanied by McDaniel, and went to the courthouse.

It wasn't the probate judge then Mrs. Jewell was looking for, however, but the marriage license office. Guided by McDaniel, she walked into the office and gave her age as thirty-one while he gave his as twenty-six.

Lifting her black veil so that she could see to write in her name, the widow signed the affidavit and in a few minutes they were married and on their way back to the Jewell farm.

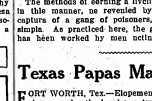
City Wages War to Rout Army of Rats

They fought the dogs and killed the cats
And bit the babies in their cradles.
They ate the cheese out of the vats,
And drank the soup from the cook's own ladles.

—"The Pied Piper."

CHICAGO.—The health department estimates there are more than 500,000 rats in Chicago and that the number is increasing day by day, despite the efforts of professional rat catchers and the use of mechanical devices for their destruction.

War of extermination against members of the surmised tribe is carried on in all parts of the city, but in no place is the attack kept more alive than at the stock yards. There the battle is waged continually.



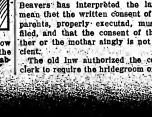
Every morning for breakfast men who have studied the subject say the little brown rat in the city consumes a quantity of food equal to the meat of 52 cows. Since they eat three meals a day in each twenty-four hours they consume three times that quantity, or equal to 156 head of cattle. This estimate is based on the allowance of one ounce of food for each rodent each meal.

Dogs, ferrets and cats are used in the war of extermination, and although thousands of rats are slaughtered daily, their number does not decrease. This can easily be understood when it is known that from one pair of rats in a year one thousand young surmulots will breed in a year.

Each of the members of a boys' gang gather nightly to go on hunting expeditions for rodents. Garbage cans are overturned, and as the rats scamper away dogs accompanying the boys catch and kill them.

The boys carry sticks or clubs in their hands and kill the rats when they attempt to escape. Many become so expert at rat catching that in after years they embark in it as a profession.

Horse-Poisoning Is the Newest Graft



NEW YORK.—The police here believe that they have finally succeeded in locating one of the strangest as well as one of the meanest forms of graft which the members of the underworld, always fertile in such schemes, have ever developed. This form of graft in no way resembles the good old hunko games of the professional sharper, but has brought about instead the new calling of the professional horse-poisoner.

The methods of earning a livelihood in this manner, as revealed by the capture of a gang of poisoners, are simple. As practiced here, the game has been worked by men acting in couples, one to handle the finances, the other to do the poisoning. The former, to begin operations, selects a certain section of the city, preferably one in which one or more big stables are located. His assistant is then sent out to poison two or three horses a day for a week.

This is accomplished by giving them, as the opportunity may occur, a lump of sugar, half an apple or some other equine delicacy, loaded with poison. There is no monetary gain in this, the preliminary steps, which is merely done to create a favorable state of affairs—that is, from the viewpoint of the grafter. As soon as the poisonings begin to be talked of the financial man gets busy. He goes to the owner of a large stable, mentions the numerous deaths from poison, and offers protection for a sum varying from $25 to $100 a week.

If the owner refuses to pay, coercion is brought to bear in the shape of a few deaths among his animals.

Texas Papas May Prevent Elopement

FORT WORTH, Tex.—Elopements of lovers under the legal age, twenty-one for the young man and eighteen for the girl, will be effectually checked in Texas by the new law adopted by the late legislature and now effective.

Under this law no person under the legal age can obtain a marriage license without the written consent of the minor's parents, and the paper must be acknowledged before a notary public like a deed. If a minor has no parents, a county judge's consent to the union is necessary. If the clerk doubts that either the prospective bride or bridegroom has attained the legal age, he is authorized to require the affidavit of the other party to the contracting parties. County Clerk Beavers has interpreted the law to mean that the written consent of both parents, properly executed, must be filed, and that the consent of the father or the mother singly is not sufficient.

The old law authorized the county clerk to require the bridegroom to file an affidavit to the effect that he was "over twenty-one," and with equal alacrarity the girl would make affidavit that she was "over eighteen."

In a few instances indictments have been returned against bridegrooms for perjury, swearing

WHEN THE PETS SUFFER.

A large gray cat leaped to death from a 18-story window of a New York hotel, and a telegram gives the explanation that the animal committed suicide is this way because its mistress had sailed for Europe, leaving it behind, says the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph. Whether the cat committed suicide or not is immaterial, but the incident does serve a purpose in calling attention to a pathetic side of the vacation season. In thousands of homes all over the country there are household pets, such as dogs and cats and birds, and as many of these homes are closed during the summer, or at least for several weeks, the pets are in most instances left to shift for themselves. For the sake of those there are neighbors who will take charge of the canaries during the absence of their owners, but for the dogs and the cats there are, as a rule, only harsh words and buffetings from the neighbors, and sticks and stones from the urchins of the community, and the poor creatures, homeless, friendless, and abused, are indeed objects of pity. It would be much more humane for the owners of these pets to put them to death before going away on their vacation trips, instead of leaving them to their fate, but the practice of deserting them goes on year after year.

A bulletin recently issued by the census department shows that the United States leads the world in manufacturing silk, with the possible exception of China, from which no figures are obtainable. We took first place from France in 1905, and have maintained our lead. We not only are the greatest manufacturers of silk goods, but the greatest consumers. Although we manufactured in 1900 silk worth $106,425,000, we exported less than one per cent. of the goods we made. Our silk industry in 1859 amounted to $12,210,000. It was more than $41,000,000 ten years later, it has more than doubled again in 1885, when it was $87,298,000. It was $107,356,000 in 1905 and more than $133,000,000 five years later.

The instruction of school children on the danger of railroad trespassing is a good thing to take up. Much of the danger is incurred through childish thoughtlessness and failure of responsible parents and teachers to instructors to the matter. The fact that cars and trains have the right of way on railway tracks cannot be too strongly impressed on the youthful mind. In fact, it might with advantage be brought to some adult attention. At the same time, much danger, particularly to the young and to the aged and feeble, might be lessened by more strict on the part of car and train crews to the laws governing the rate of speed in cities, particularly the ordinances applying to the street crossings.

Surgeon B. M. Brown, U. S. N., has discovered a method of treating anaesthetic air so that it shall sustain life for us as much as a week in an enclosure of moderate size even though no fresh air is introduced. If the scheme really works, we shall hear of public men and fashionable women seeking the rest cure by a week's vacation in a submarine immersed say a hundred miles off shore.

Somebody who claims to have conducted a scientific investigation announces that music will quench a man's thirst for strong liquor. If this is the case the bands that have been maintained by some of the fashionable cafes are likely to be compelled to look elsewhere for engagements.

Another comet has been sighted. If it creates all the commotion ascribed in this sphere to Halley's comet, its discoverer ought to be jailed on the charge of disorderly conduct, so that other seekers after these mischief breeding celestial vagrants may be discouraged from breaking the public's peace of mind.

Now a scientist announces that the halo is a real thing, and that a faint glow can actually come from the brain, the result of radium stored there. This explanation, however, will destroy the value of halos, as some brains radiate nothing but faint glows.

POOR OLD EXCITABLE NEW YORK!

PASS NEW WOOL BILL

LA FOLLETTE COMPROMISE MEASURE PUT THOUGH IN SENATE, 46 TO 32.

PARTY LINES ARE DIVIDED

Democrats and Insurgents Vote Down Original Draft, Passed By House and Adopt Substitute Presented By Wisconsin Senator.

Washington.—Senator La Follette pressed a compromise wool bill to its passage through the senate by a combination of the Democratic and insurgent Republican forces. The measure cuts the duty on raw wool to 25 per cent. ad valorem, and makes corresponding reduction on woolen manufactures.

The result came about after Senator La Follette's original substitute bill, carrying a duty on raw wool of 40 per cent, and the wool bill passed by the house of representatives, carrying an ad valorem on raw wool of 29 per cent, both had been defeated. The vote on the new measure was 46 to 32.

The house wool bill was defeated in the senate by a vote of 44 to 36. Senator Brown of Nebraska was the only Republican voting with the Democrats for the bill. The La Follette amendment to the revision measure was defeated, 66 to 14.

A motion by La Follette to reconsider the vote by which the house bill was defeated, so as to throw open again the entire question of revising the wool schedule, was adopted by a vote of 49 to 31.

The outcome showed a well-devised and executed compromise plan between Democrats and Republican progressives, which swept the "standpat" Republicans from their feet. Although the situation presented by the unexpected action of the senate was in the nature of a surprise for the regular Republicans, they were asserting after the vote that the senate would have to compromise further with the house of representatives before actual wool revision could be had at this session.

It is pointed out that the house bill, passed only after difficult manuvering with the Democrats demanding free wool, carries a duty of only 20 per cent. on raw wool product. The La Follette bill carries 35 per cent, as against the original La Follette bill provision of 40 per cent. The duty on raw wool under the existing Payne law is in excess of 40 per cent.

Regular Republicans expect, if real legislation is to be had, to see the house demand a compromise with the senate which will further reduce the duty to at least 30 per cent. ad valorem. Among the regulars there is a serene confidence, however, that President Taft will veto my wool bill passed at this session.

Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee, and Democratic leader, said:

"The house will not accept the wool revision bill as it has passed the senate. Personally I believe the Underwood bill is exceedingly high.

"I want to see a bill passed reducing the wool duties, and I want to see such a bill sent to the president. I would prefer that the house bill be sent, but if this is not possible then any bill making material reductions in duties should be passed."

WILL CALL PACKERS

CHICAGO BEEF MEN TO TESTIFY IN LORIMER CASE.

Tribune Editor Tells of Rumored Political Activity and Stx Will Be Summoned to Washington.

Washington.—Several Chicago packers will be summoned before the Lorimer investigation committee of the senate as a result of testimony given by James Keeley, general manager of the Chicago Tribune.

Replying to a question by Senator Fletcher, who asked if he could suggest the names of any packers who should be called as witnesses, Mr. Keeley mentioned the following:

J. Ogden Armour of Armour & Co.; Alfred H. Urton, general counsel for Armour & Co.; Arthur Meeker of Armour & Co.; Edward Morris of Morris & Co.; Louis F. Swift of Swift & Co.; John A. Spoor of the Union Stockyards company.

One other packer, Edward Tilden, president of the National Packing company, whose name was given by Mr. Keeley, already has appeared as a witness before the committee.

Mr. Keeley told the committee that he had no evidence against any of the men he named. He said, however, that it was commonly reported that the packers had contributed largely to various campaign funds and for that reason he believed they would be interrogated regarding their knowledge of a fund raised for the election of Senator Lorimer.

The subject arose when Burridge Hanecy, attorney for Senator Lorimer, asked Mr. Keeley whom he had in mind when he wrote editorials a year ago which made the inquiry: "Who Furnished the Sawdust and Lard for Lorimer's Election?"

Mr. Keeley said in mentioning the word "sawdust" he had in mind Edward Hines and the lumber interests, and in the use of the word "lard" he referred to the packing houses, without having the name of my particular individual in mind.

DECIDE CANADA MUST VOTE

Conservatives Insist That Reciprocity Agreement With United States Must Have People's Indorsement.

Ottawa, Ont. — That reciprocity with the United States will have to get the indorsement of the voters of Canada was the decision of a party caucus of the Conservatives.

The Liberal caucus thereupon decided the election should be held as soon as possible. There may be dissolution of parliament within a fortnight, but possibly not until the end of August.

The election probably will be held the last week in September or the first week in October. Parliament will be called immediately afterward. If the government is returned the reciprocity bill will be put through without difficulty.

HIT REAPER TRUST

CHARGE IS MADE THAT MORGAN AND HARVESTER INTERESTS UNITED.

REBATE IS PAID ON STEEL

Townsend Report on Which Former Attorney General Bonaparte Failed to Act Goes Before Investigators—Wickersham Is a Witness.

Washington.—That charges were made to Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte during his term of office that the United States Steel corporation gave refund of three dollars a ton to the harvester combine companies was revealed to the house "steel trust" investigating committee. Representative Stanley of Kentucky, chairman of the committee, introduced into the proceedings a voluminous report on the harvester trust made to Mr. Bonaparte in 1908 by Burdette C. Townsend, a special investigator of the department, now assistant district attorney of Oregon.

In describing the organization of the group of larger companies in the Harvester combine the McCormicks, Deering, Plano, Wardner, Bushnell, Gleasner and the Milwaukee Harvester companies, Mr. Townsend reported to Mr. Bonaparte:

"It appears that there was an unusual concentration of the capital stock of these five companies. It was owned and controlled by four families, the McCormicks, the Deerings, the Joneses and the Gleasners. The pooling of their holdings was all that was necessary to create a trust. All these people lived in Chicago.

"Another fact le interesting. Harold McCormick (ons of the heaviest stockholders of the McCormick company) is a son-in-law of John D. Rockefeller. The McCormick company therefore already distantly related by marriage to the great American family of trusts. J. Pierpont Morgan's great underwriting house employed by the Rockefeller interests.

"He is a good builder and receives fabulous fees for his work. George W. Perkins is his associate."

Attorney General Wickersham, summoned as a witness, testified that he had never seen the Townsend report before. He promised that Townsend would testify later. He did not know why the harvester case was not pressed in, 1908-09. "I understand," he added, "that the case was held up pending the Supreme court decisions involving the tobacco and standard oil cases involving the same points."

Mr. Stanley announced that a cablegram had been issued for Mr. Bonaparte, who is now in Canada, and that an effort would be made to ascertain from him and from other government officials why there had not been a prosecution of the International Harvester company upon Townsend's charges. Mr. Stanley also announced the formation of understanding or even a close connection between the United States Steel corporation and the International Harvester company.

Mr. Townsend in his report particularly referred to the price paid to a subsidiary of the U. S. Co.; the harvester deal, declaring that "$5,000,000 is a very high price for the simple service of suggesting to persons how they can agree in a legitimate transaction. Such a deal would," he said, "be illegal transactions, such as creating a trust, which can evade the Sherman law." Townsend declared it instituted against the International Harvester company, the manner of its incorporation demonstrates that the fee was earned."

TAFT SIGNS CANADIAN BILL

Secretary Knox and Other Cabinet Officers Witness Approval of Reciprocity Measure.

Washington.—The Canadian reciprocity bill reached the White House shortly after 1 p. m. Mr. Taft signed it at 2:15 o'clock. Speaker Champ Clark and Vice-President Sherman already had signed the bill.

Secretary of State Knox, Secretary of Commerce and Labor Nagel, Secretary to the President Hilles and Representative Littleton of New York, several newspaper men and photographers witnessed the signing. As he picked up the pen the president turned to Secretary Knox.

"Come over here, Brother Knox," he said, "you are responsible for this."

The secretary of state stood beside the president.

"It's done," said Mr. Knox. "It's done," echoed the president as the two clasped hands across the desk.

To give the photographers a chance, the president went through the motion of signing the act again.

The gold pen used by the president in signing this treaty was sent to Chairman Penrose of the senate finance committee, who led the fight for the bill in the senate.

GOES OVER NIAGARA

"BOBBY" LEACH GOES OVER CATARACT IN BARREL.

Tank With Man Suspended in Canvas Hammock Shoots Through Space With Speed of Cannon Ball.

Niegara Falls, N. Y.—Bobby" Leech made a trip over the Horseshoe falls in a barrel and lives to tell the tale of an experience more thrilling than any of his previous feats. Leach, who is forty-nine years old, was considerably bruised by his drop of 158 feet, but was not seriously hurt.

This is the second time in the history of the river that such a feat has been accomplished. Mrs. Anne Bidson Taylor of this city made the trip in a barrel on October 24, 1901, and came out alive.

Haraeeed by the police on both sides of the river, Leach was forced to make his etart from La Salle, two miles and a half above the cataract on the United States side. Two riverment took him in a launch to Navy Island, where everything was made shipshape and Leach was placed in the barrel. It is a steel affair, eleven feet long with ends of wood. Leech was hung in a canvas hammock.

The barrel with its passenger was cast adrift just off the mouth of Chippewa creek, hardly a mile above the brink of the Horseshoe, and was quickly caught by the rush of the upper rapids. From 600 yards from the brink the barrel was caught in the tremendous current and raced to the chasm.

Within 200 yards of the brink it struck hard against a rock, and a large section of the wooden end was broken off. As the barrel reached the crest, it swung straight and went plunging down into the abyss on its long axle.

Hundred thirty seconds elepsed until it wee seen, a red speck, careening in the spume below the cntarect.

Fred Pearl Bender of Chippewa swam out to it with a rope and caught the barrel by one of its handles. From that point the barrel was towed ashore.

Leach was bleeding and appeared in a bad way, but once out of the barrel he raised himself and waved to the crowds that lined the bank. He was badly exhausted and it was necessary to apply oxygen to revive him.

MOROCCAN AFFAIR IS ACUTE

Premier Asquith Declares Great Britain Will Be Firm in Demands in Controversy.

London.—Premier Asquith made a statement in the house of commons on the subject of Morocco which fully bore out the description of the situation as one of real anxiety. The position the premier said had reached a point at which it was necessary to take difficult and harassing unless a solution was found.

Mr. Asquith said that Great Britain was not a party to the conversations proceeding between France and Germany, but earnestly and sincerely declared to see them result in an arrangement honorable and satisfactory to all the powers. He refused to the house not to seek to enter into the details of the situation at the present moment, the premier said the government had thought it right from the beginning to make it clear that failing a satisfactory settlement, Great Britain must become an active party to a discussion of the difficulties.

The Berlin and other German newspapers take a serious view of the situation. The Berliner Tageblatt is made official quarters that nothing has occurred to cause anxiety. At Lloyds, however, war risks have been doubled between Great Britain and Germany within three months rose from 5 to 8 per cent. In some cases even 10 per cent. was paid. Against the risk of war between France and Germany 12 per cent. was quoted.

MANY ARE HURT IN RIOTS

Police Have Numerous Fights With Striking Peddlers at Chicago.

Chicago.—Seventy-five out of the 3,000 peddlers out on a strike against the anti-noise ordinance recently passed by the city council, were arrested by the police in a day of fighting and wild disorder such as has not been seen in Chicago since the teamsters' workers' strike.

Half a dozen policemen were injured in trying to disperse the mobs, and hundreds of pedlers who attempted to sell their wares despite the strike were set upon and beaten.

One of the most serious affairs occurred at Maxwell and West Thirteenth streets, where a band of rioters, led by Mrs. Isidor Silverman, the wife a peddler, overturned two grocery wagons, trampled their contents in a pulp and severely beat the drivers. A platoon of police charged into the crowd, and after a fight Mrs. Silverman and five men strikers were arrested.

"I notified the grocer, but finding that home was no coffee for breakfast next morning I prepared some of the Postum, following the directions very carefully.

"It was an immediate success in my family, and from that day we have used it constantly, parents and children, too—for my three rosy youngsters are allowed to drink it freely at breakfast and luncheon. They think it delicious, and I would have a mutiny on my hands should I omit the beloved beverage.

"My husband used to have a very distressing stomach trouble when using coffee, but to our surprise his stomach has grown strong and entirely well since we quit coffee and have been on Postum.

PRESIDENT TAFT REFUTES CONTROLLER BAY CHARGES

Message to the Senate Fully Explains the Transaction and Denounces the Attack on Chief Executive and His Brother as Wilful and Malicious Falsehood.

Washington.—President Taft sent to the senate Wednesday a message that recalled some of those received from his predecessor. It was in reply to a resolution of the senate requesting the president to transmit to the senate all the documents relating to the elimination from the Chugach national forest, in Alaska, of land fronting upon Controller bay. Mr. Taft seizes the occasion occasion to make a vigorous defense of his own honor and that of his brother, Charles P. Taft, against the attacks made in relation to this Controller bay "scandal."

The president sent in all the documents asked for, and more, and quotes the executive order in question, by which 12,800 acres were eliminated from the national forest. His message describes the importance of Controller bay as a railway terminal and relates the operations of the Copper River railroad, owned by the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, whose terminal is at Cordova.

Ryan's Application Investigated.

In December, 1909, Richard B. Ryan applied for the Controller bay elimination, afterward granted, stating that he represented the Controller Railroad and Navigation company. Mr. Taft tells how this application was referred to the district foresters at Portland, Ore., and in Alaska and was approved by Chief Forester Graves; how the navy department stated it did not desire to use Controller bay as a reservation; how the matter was considered fully by the forestry bureau, the secretary of agriculture, the secretary of the interior, the general land office and the cabinet. As a result, after an interview between the president and Mr. Ryan, an order was drafted eliminating 320 acres.

Meanwhile Mr. Ryan had satisfied the president and other officials that he and his associates had no connection with the Morgan-Guggenheim interests and were engaged in an independent enterprise in good faith to build an independent railroad. The question again came before the cabinet, and the president, with the approval of the secretaries of the interior and agriculture, changed the order so that it eliminated 12,800 acres, with sufficient room for a railroad town. The message says: "I was willing to do this because I found the restrictions in the law sufficient to prevent the possibility of any monopoly of either the lands or the harbor or channel by the Controller Railroad and Navigation company or any other person or concern." These restrictions the president sets forth at length, and shows that the Ryan company has not the slightest opportunity for exclusive appropriation of the harbor facilities unless congress shall by future act deliberately and voluntarily confer it.

The "Dick to Dick" Letter.

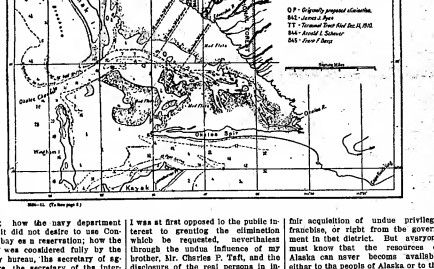
Coming to the personal side of the matter, Mr. Taft says:

"Before closing, I desire to allude to a circumstance which the terms of this resolution make apt and relevant. It is a widely published statement attributed to a newspaper correspondent that in an examination of the files of the interior department a few weeks ago a postscript was found attached to a letter of July 13, 1910, addressed by Mr. Richard S. Ryan to Secretary Ballinger—and in the present record —urging the elimination of land enough for terminals for the Controller Railway & Navigation company. The postscript was said to read as follows:

"Dear Dick: I want to see the president the other day. He asked me who it was I represented. I told him under this resolution. Who is really responsible for its wicked fabrication if it ever existed, or for the viciously false statement made as to its authenticity, is immaterial for the purposes of this communication. The purport of the alleged postscript is, and the intention of the fabricator was, to make Mr. Richard S. Ryan testify through its words to the public that although the latter was away for his vacation for two months, must impress everyone.

Places the Blame.

"The person upon whose statement the existence of what has been properly characterized as an amusing postscript is based, is a writer for newspapers and magazines, who was given permission by Secretary Fisher, after consulting with me, to examine all the files in respect to the Controller Bay matter—and this under the supervision of Mr. Brown, then private secretary of the secretary of the interior. After the examination, at which it is alleged this postscript was received from the hand of Mr. Brown, the correspondent prepared an elaborate article on the subject of this order and Controller Bay, which was submitted to Mr. Fisher, and which was discussed with Mr. Fisher at length, but never in the conversation between them or in the article submitted did the correspondent mention the existence of the postscript. Mr. Brown states that there was no such postscript in the paper when he showed them to the correspondent and that he never saw such a postscript. Similar evidence is given by Mr. Carr and other custodians of the records in the interior department.



"Stronger evidence of the falsity and maliciously slanderous character of the alleged postscript could not be had. Its only significance is the light it throws on the bitterness and venom of some of those who take active part in every discussion of Alaskan lesuse.

Scandal-Mongering Denounced.

"I am in full sympathy with the concern of reasonable and patriotic men that the valuable resources of Alaska should not be turned over to be exploited for the benefit of greedy, absorbing and monopolistic corporations or syndicates. Whatever the attempts which have been made, no one, as a matter of fact, has secured in Alaska any undue privilege or franchise not completely under the control of congress. I am in full agreement with the view that every care, both in administration and in legislation, must be observed to prevent the corrupt or unfair acquisition of undue privilege, franchise, or right from the government of the district. But everyone must know that the resources of Alaska can never become available either to the people of Alaska or the public of the United States unless reasonable opportunity is granted to those who would invest their money to secure a return proportionate to the risk run in the investment and reasonable under all circumstances.

"On the other hand, the acrimony of spirit and the intense malice that have been engendered by the recent administration of the government in Alaska and in the consideration of measures proposed for her relief and the wanton recklessness and aspersions by which attempts have been made to besmirch the characters of high officials having to do with the Alaskan government, and even of persons not in public life, present a condition that calls for condemnation and requires that the public be warned of the demoralization that has been produced by the hysterical suspicions of good people and the unscrupulous and corrupt misrepresentations of the wicked. The high purpose to which the sovereignty of some and the malevolent scandal-mongering of others have brought the people of Alaska in their struggle for its development ought to give the public pause, for until a juster and fairer view be taken, investment in Alaska, which is necessary to its development, will be impossible, and honest administration of legislation will be embarrassed in the advocacy and putting into operation of those policies necessary to the territory which are necessary to its progress and prosperity. WILLIAM H. TAFT.

Sampson at Gaza.

A facultiar story is that of Sempson pulling down the pillars of the temple of Gaze, whereby the roof fell upon the Philistines. How Samson was able to do this is now known. Excavations on the site of Gaza show that the pillars of the temple were of wood, and rested upon foundations of stone without being fastened thereto. The strong man had, therefore, merely to push these pillars off their supporting stones when down would come the roof of the whole building.

Soldier's Brave Deed.

Asked what was the bravest deed he had ever seen, Lord Roberts said he remembered that while he was on his way to Lucknow his force was attacked by a mutiny regiment. A little sidding, a Punjabi Mohammedan, seeing the difficulty, endeavored to open the door, which barred their way. When he tried first to draw the bolt one of his hands was cut off by one of the enemy; then he managed to unfasten the bolt with his other hand which was subsequently nearly severed from the wrist.

Cover for Bathtub.

Many housekeepers spend a lot of time cleaning the bathtub. Here's a way to make the work less strenuous: Cut a piece of unbleached muslin the size of the tub and round off the edges so it fit, a hiss facing is then stitched round the cover, and through this a piece of tape is run. When the tub is not in use the cover is put on and tape drawn tightly under the edge. It is easy enough to wash, and, seems as incredible as it may seem, lasts on bathtub for [illegible]

FOREST FIRE FUND

GOVERNMENT WILL SPEND $1,000 IN MINNESOTA THIS YEAR FOR EMPLOYMENT OF PATROLS.

NATIONAL AID TO THE STATES

Money to be Dispensed in System of Co-operation—State Forester Cox Says Men Are Already at Head Waters of Streams.

The United States government will spend $10,000 in Minnesota this year for the protection of the forests at the headwaters of navigable streams. Under the Weeks law passed by the last congress this is to be dispensed through the department of agriculture under a system of co-operation with the states. The money is spent solely in employing patrols.

"We already have the men on the ground," said State Forester Cox, in discussing the aid which the United States government is giving to the state of Minnesota. "The marks the beginning of the federal government protection of timber on the head waters of the navigable streams. It has never before given such protection. Scientists have proved that the standing forests at the head waters of a stream affect the flow of water. Congress has just recognized that fact and has made it possible to give federal aid to the states that are making an effort to protect the timber.

"Minnesota is perhaps more entitled to such than any other state. There are more head waters in this state than in any other. We have more forests on such head waters and there is more timber on the forests than every bit of the sum allotted to us by the federal government."

The co-operative agreement under which the federal government gives aid to the state of Minnesota is made possible by the terms of the Weeks law, which was passed by congress last winter.

Provisions of Law.

This law, besides providing for the purchase by the national government of lands on the head waters of navigable rivers for the purpose of creating national forests to protect these rivers, carried also an appropriation of $20,000 which the secretary of agriculture might expend in order to protect, from fire, in co-operation with the states, similar lands in state or private ownership. It was provided in the law that expenditures by the federal government in any state should not exceed the amount spent by the state itself in the co-operative work. Other states which have signed similar co-operative agreements with the government are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New Jersey, and Wisconsin.

The secretary of agriculture concluded that the most effective way to use the money available would be by requiring, as a preliminary to entering into an agreement with any state for co-operative fire protection, that the state authorities should submit a definite plan showing in detail exactly what it was proposed to do. With these plans were required maps showing areas to which protection would be given, and plans submitted are carefully examined by the department of agriculture, to see both that the area to be protected is actually forested land on the headwaters of navigable streams and that the plan of protection is such as will reasonably be hoped to be thoroughly practical, with an organized and effective system of administration and adequate state officers. It was decided for the present year that the amount spent in any one state by the national government should be limited to $10,000.

Funds Go to Patrolmen.

The funds of the federal government will be used solely for paying patrolmen. The state officials select these patrolmen, subject to the approval of the department of agriculture. The maps submitted to the federal government show where each of these patrolmen will be located, the approximate routes of patrol, and all matters necessary to a clear understanding of the location of lookout points, telephone communications, railroad paths, location of state forest fire wardens and other officials, and the like.

In short, the basic idea is that effective protection can be had only by the development of a carefully worked out, well manned, and capably equipped system, and the adaptation of action beforehand and makee provision for the most effective disposal and use of the available forces, with a view both to preventing fires from getting under headway and to getting to them quickly if they do get started. In the national forests of the West, where the fires must often be fought at a long distance from a base of supplies, a further consideration often of great importance, is how to provision the forces which are on the fire line, perhaps for days at a time. To provide for the every forest officer is expected to know beforehand from what stores, construction or lumber camps and ranches he can obtain food, tools, packhorses, and man, and in what quantities. In fact, the training of the forest officer includes a sort of the game which consists in suddenly locating on imaginary fire on the map of a national forest and calling on a ranger to tell offhand how and from whara he would gather help, how he would organize his conduct his defense, and whence he would obtain supplies and means of transportation. Although conditions in the East seldom present such serious difficulties, they are regarded as calling equally for intelligent planning and the development of a trained force.

Responsibility on State.

Under the terms of the co-operative agreements, the secretary of agriculture may terminate the co-operation at any time that he finds it not to be conducted in a satisfactory manner. In this way the responsibility for organizing and maintaining the work is placed upon the state, which, however, must keep its system up to a good standard of efficiency in order to have the co-operation with the federal government be continued. Forestry officials of the department of agriculture will act as inspectors to keep the department informed as to how the states are handling the work. It is believed that under this system a great advance will be made in the development of good state systems of fire protection.

In addition to the states with which agreements have been signed by Secretary Wilson, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Maryland have requested co-operation this year. A number of other states have made inquiry concerning the possibility of their entering into co-operative agreements with the government, but have found that they could not do so under the terms of the law because their legislatures have made no provision for expenditures on behalf of the state.

PREUS GIVES ADVICE.

Counselee Committee of Scandinavian Relief to Keep on Its Feet.

Insurance Commissioner Preus, following a conference held in his office by the committee appointed Tuesday to take up the matter of the rate increase in the Minnesota Scandinavian Relief Association of Red Wing, told the committee it could either disband the organization or go along on the increased rates. He advised the latter course.

The committee was composed of Rev. O. Rest of Minneapolis, Andrew Croonquist of St. Paul and Rev. C. J. Nelson of Milwaukee, the latter representing the Milwaukee members of the association.

If it was found members are not willing to continue under higher rates, under the rules of the organization the committee can go to ten of the board of directors, sixty in number, and have them notify the secretary to call a meeting of the directors and disband the organization and distribute the balance of funds in the treasury.

"For the sake of the little money that each member would get out of it," said the commissioner, "I hardly think this last suggestion will be acted upon. I do not know what will be done."

Policyholders have been threatening to bring injunction proceedings against the board of directors for raising the rates, but it is believed that following the conference with the commissioner will be advised to abide by the decision and keep the society going.

DOUBT KENSINGTON RUNESTONE.

Christiania Professor Said to Have Pronounced It Spurious.

The Kensington runestone that has proved so effective a subject for controversy among the sruddie of Minnesota and Wisconsin is reported to have been discredited in Norway, to which it was taken by H. R. Holand, its discoverer and champion.

The stone is reported to have been on exhibition at the University of Christiania, where Prof. Hiegstad pronounced it spurious for the reason, it is said, the runes cut in the stone were not used in that form 400 years ago or even up to a much later date. The Norwegian theory is that the stone might date back as far as 1865.

The Minnesota Historical society, through its archeological committee, is preparing a report on the authenticity of the stone.

MAY BE DR. JACKOLA.

Friends Are Looking for a Man Seen Near Lakeside.

Duluth.—In the vicinity of Lakeside, it is thought, may be the missing Dr. John Jackola, who last spring was arrested in New York for alleged perjury in connection with a land entry. Jim Saari and Gust Lahti, friends of the physician, who went to Finland with him, have come home to locate him. The doctor disappeared June 19 and his friends had about come to the conclusion that he was no longer alive.

BEMIDJI CHURCH FINISHED.

Bemidji.—The brick work on the elegant new M. E. church building will be completed in another week. After the brick work is done, the contractor will at once begin the building of the basement walls and floor. When completed, the church will be one of the most handsome and imposing brick structures in the city.

AIRMAN BREAKS STATE RECORD.

Ward, Flying in Curtiss Biplane at Austin, Goes Up 2,600 Feet.

Austin. — Aviator Jimmie Ward, flying in a Curtiss biplane, broke all state records for altitude when he attained the heighth of over 2,600 feet in his last flight at the big aviation meet here.

Ward made three wonderful flights, remaining in the air over half an hour and traveled about 10 miles.

NORTHERN CITIZENS EXCITED

THREE MYSTERIOUS DEATHS WITHIN YEAR STIR PEOPLE.

Corpses Discovered Under Strange Circumstances—Buried by County.

Sawyer, Minnesota. — Both Indians and settlers in this territory are wrought up over the deaths of Otto Holt, John Sarri and John Orni under peculiar circumstances on their homestead, and there is much speculation as to whether the men were murdered or died accidentally.

All the deaths were under the strangest surroundings. Holt was found dead near the Iverson postoffice, Sarri's dead body was discovered west of Sawyer depot and Orni was found dead west of Sawyer one and a half miles.

Citizens say that great mystery surrounded the finding of the bodies and that all three were buried at the expense of Carlton county and that the coroner's verdict of found dead or accidental death was based on very little investigation and without a real public hearing.

March 14, 1910, Henry Sarri, a lonely homesteader, was found dead on the Northern Pacific railway track, one mile west of Sawyer depot. The coroner said it was a very clear case of accidental death, being struck with a passing train. Sarri's body was taken to Cloquet and buried at the expense of Carlton county.

The night before the find on the track, citizens over that Sarri and another man had been drinking heavily and the death at least was suspicious, and Sarri was a man not likely to end his own life. Most of the territory is also Indian and under prohibition laws.

John Orni, brother, a Finlander, came and occupied the deceased man's homestead, and April 7, just a year afterward, he was found dead by a fisherman in his cabin. The corpse was found on the floor. He had a rude cabin covered with blood. The night previous a man had been with Orni, saying there all night, and next morning Orni prepared the breakfast, which the two ate. Then the visitor went two miles west of Sawyer for his clothing, which he had left at another homestead. When the visitor returned he found Orni dead on the cabin floor and a gun alongside the body.

Citizens say a few feguai questions were asked by the coroner and Orni's body was taken to Cloquet and buried.

Otto Holt's death was even more suspicious, and occurred about four weeks ago. He lived in a cabin three miles west of the Iverson postoffice. Holt was a bachelor and was known to carry about $400 about with him in bills secreted about his clothing. His cabin was found on fire by a stranger and when the fire was out, the charred body of Holt was discovered, but what had become of the money he generally carried on his person, was never discovered. He also was buried by the county authorities.

In consequence of these three mysterious deaths the settlers in those sparsely populated places are full of dread, and they aver that a full and careful investigation would have revealed that these three men did not die accidentally, but by the hand of some villion or villians.

STATE SUES LUMBER COMPANY.

Civil Case Involving $25,000 Alleged Mistake on Trial at Brainerd.

Brainerd.—On trial in chambers before Judge W. S. McClenahan of the district court is a timber case brought by the state against the Brooks-Scanlon Lumber company, involving about $25,000. It is alleged that the state sold the timber of section 16-53-12, in St. Louis county, to the lumber company, estimating it at the time at about 5,000,000 feet.

The state later had reason to believe that there was more timber on the tract and a resale was ordered, estimating the cut at 7,500,000 feet. The state now sues for the difference in value, estimated to be about $25,000. Attorney Hale Steed is Assistant State's Attorney General Janes of St. Paul.

DITCH CONTRACTOR BEGS OFF.

R. A. Elzy Says Muskeg Fills Drains and He Loses Money.

R. A. Elzy, drainage contractor, appeared before the county board to ask that he be not required again to county. These ditches, numbers 19 and 60, have not been entirely paid for because the work has not been declared completed by the drainage inspector.

Mr. Elzy says he has cleaned the ditches out twice, but that because of the peculiar formation of the muskeg, they have filled up in places. He said he has already lost money on the ditches and that to make him clean them out again will make him lose still more.

The drainage board will go to Koochiching county next month to inspect these two ditches.

PHYSICIAN FOR GIRL'S HOME.

Sauk Center.—Dr. J. A. Du Bois of this city, has been appointed physician to the Industrial Home for Girls, the State Board of Control authorizing the appointment.

The Board of Control also decided to grade the lands adjacent to the recently built cottages and put in gravel roads and walks.

Plans for two new buildings were considered by the board, one for the superintendent and another for a modern hospital.

Thirty five bushels of wheat to the acre on one side of the road and the other side wild land, is the conditions in Pennington county to day.

We had a picture of president Taft hanging in our office, and when that reciprocity bill passed we turned its face to the wall. No more Taft sonp for us.

Germany and England are making faces at each other and saying ' who is afraid of you." As an exhibition scrap, this one had ought to draw a good house, as it will certainly be a big fight.

President Taft extended a note of thanks to the Democrats for their assistance to pass his reciprocity treaty, and the Donkey said; thanks never mention it. "We wanted to help you OUT."

Wheat will sooo take an other slump downward, and it will be likely to strike the 50 cent mark as soon as they begin to dump in free wheat from Canada, but the farmers will have an loniog next year.

The farmers are to meet at Institute hall, at the State Fair, on Wednesday Sept. 6th, for the purpose of orgaoization. They will be lined up for the next campaigo, but not for Taft. He has had his luniog, and now let the farmers have a turo at the bat.

About 90 per cent of the leaders of the Populist movemeot in Minnesota came from the Republican party. They were often asked this question: Why doo't yoo stay in the Republican party and try to reform it? That is just what they are going to do now, stay by the party, and firemen like Taft out of office.

The first state to select delegates to the national convention next year will be North Dakota and the selection will be made by the direct vote of the people at a primary election to be held on March 19th. Wisconsio, Oregon and New Jersey will select delegates in the same way during April and May. There will be much interest in the expression from these states, but North Dakota can be depended on for a solid anti Taft delegatiuo, and Wisconsin to .promptly secood the motion.

The Progressive Republican meeting held at Thief River Falls yesterday drew a much larger crowd than was expected, and they were after Taft with a sharp stick, and they propose to attend to and see that he don't get any more support from Northern Minnesota, and the opinion was freely expressed that the anti Taft movement would continue to grow like a Kansas cyclone, onti1 it swamped the old rotten craft of Taft, and his entire crew of .Damocratic sailors, so far from shore that they won't be heard from again during this generation.

JONES TO WOMEN

The Immortal C. Hope Talks to the Fair Sex.

TELLS THEIR LONG HISTORY.

He Begins With the Garden of Eden and Traces Events Down to Date, Even Coming to the Defiance of Lucretia Burgia and Her Use of Paiaos.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.]

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—My remarks this evening will be addressed directly to the ladies.

I arrived here less than an hour ago in the mud and rain to keep this appointment, but I am full of enthusiasm. My audience numbers only seventeen, counting two deaf mon, and the receipts are only $1.10, but Q. Hope cannot be quenched.

I am here tonight on behalf of the downtrodden sex, a sex that has been kept in bondage for thousands of years and hasn't quite thrown off the yoke yet.

Turn back with me to the garden of Eden and find Eve. She came there in humiliation. She was created from ons of Adam's ribs, and it was a rib he could spare and not feel it. The intention from the very start was to make him the big "it" and her the small one. Was it any wonder that she went around in humble attitude and was expected to look up to old Adam as the god?

And he bossed her. He ran the garden. He was high cock-a-doodle-doo around there. He wanted this done and that done, and he was going to raise a row if it wasn't, and within a month he had that little woman as scared as a rabbit with two dogs after him. Bossed and nagged and lorded it, Adam did, and set an example that other men have followed to this day.

Women Followed Example.

The second woman on earth saw how the first one had to knuckle down, and she followed suit. Probably Mrs. Adam told her that she must do it or have a row in the house all the time. The third and fourth women were told the same thing, and there you get the key to the slavery of the sex. They bowed their heads to the bosses and brought about 6,000 years of bondage.

What would have been the effect had Eve sputtered right up to Adam and whacked him good and hard with a club? I know, and you know. She would have called his bluff, and he would have come off the perch. Bluffing was Adam's trump card, and most every husband has followed in his tracks.

In the old days there were men, cattle, sheep and women. They were appreciated in the order named. If a cow belonging to one of the big "its" got choked to death on a turnip it was a loss of 80 cents. If one of his wives died of sickness he gave her a fifteen cent funeral and went out and drove in two to replace her.

King Had Long Head.

The women weren't saying a word as yet, but there was a certain king who got scared for fear they would and hatched an edict that all females infants should be put to death. He was a long headed old chap. He foresaw what would begin to happen along the last of the nineteenth century.

The sole subject of the "it" for thousands of years was to keep women down. She wasn't supposed to know enough to take a turn around the wood pile on a dark night. If she showed any gumption she was beaten and driven to the fields to hoe beans. Every "it" had from 10 to 100 wives. They were cheaper than sheep, and they were humbler than cats. Let one of them open her mouth in the presence of the "boss" and there was a tyrannical disappearance next day. She was too fresh—too gabby. If allowed to go on she would soon be talking about her "rights."

Oh, yes, I will admit there were a few exceptions. We find here and there a woman who rose and got to be somebody, some of them to be queens. What was the reason of it? Because they got to know how to use beloons, and the losses became afraid of them. When the head of the family has reason to fear that he will get something worse than billoins calls if he slaps on his wife he's going to stay off.

Justified in Using Poison.

Lucretia Borgia has been held up to execration because she wanted her rights—and got them by way of the poison route. She has been defended. That was her only weapon in those days, and she felt justified in using it. At any rate, after she had disposed of some fifteen "its" the cause of woman's rights began to look up, and it was conceded that woman might have an ounce or two of brains.

Rome let a few women pop to the surface, but held millions down. Greece was a little more liberal, but wanted to have the fashion of dress. The bosses hadn't let go when the pilgrim fathers landed. The value of a wife had raised from 30 cents to $5, but she must be very humble and not express her opinion on the weather. The first thing those fathers did was to thank God for their safe arrival, the next sixty-six lines applying to women only. Today, even in the progressive state of New York, there are twenty-eight votes to humiliate woman and make her understand that she has got equal rights with men.

Big "It" Loses His Bluff.

A new day has dawned, however. The big "it" has lost most of his bluff. He is seeing the handwriting on the wall. He is hedging. He finds it hard to let go of a good thing that has been running right along for thousands of years, but he is coming to it. He knows he must give the ballot to the other sex, but he wants time to hunt up good excuse.

There is an old saw reading, "Wives, obey your husbands." Did a man or a woman invent it? Why should a wife obey more than a husband?

It has been slow in coming, but it is here. Woman is being recognized as a fellow creature. We are discovering that she has a share of the brains. The time has come when she must be consulted in all things, from the selling of the family dog to the election of a president.

I see the fat man on the front seat hitching around uneasily. Let him not be afraid. I don't mean that when he gets home tonight he will be met with a crack on the cocoanut from a broomstick, but I do mean that his days of bluff are over. He has got to consider his wife a partner instead of a drudge and a slave.

Advice For Women.

I don't mean that any of you wives should start for the nearest drug store tomorrow to buy arsenic to mix with tea or coffee, but that you should primarily assert yourselves. It's for you to mix in.

Man is going to keep the ballot from you just as long as he can, because the day when you go to the polls is the end of many things for him. But keep talking, keep pressing, keep battling in. Don't let the pancakes grow cold.

If this world had been created for the sole benefit of man Eve would not have come along on Adam's side-partner. She did come, and she is entitled to certain rights and benefits. Man has played the hog too long. He must be made to divide up. It won't do him any hurt to take a back seat for awhile and let you women run the show. Indeed, he may get some points to benefit him.

Ladies and gentlemen, this concludes the performance this evening. I am billed for Cabbage Hill tomorrow night and must be on my road. I wish I had some moving pictures to show how the woman has moved from the foot to the head, but you know all about it. Love and honor your husband, but when it comes to the obeying part see that he does his half or dissolve the partnership.

He Had Hopes.

Owen Wister, in addition to being an author, has acquired some celebrity as a wit. He was being shaved in a St. Louis hotel while refreshing himself on a trip to the west some time ago, and the barber who was attending to his needs apparently had been out all night before. His hand was very shaky, and several times the author winced.

"Will you have anything on your face when I get through?" he asked Wister, "but I hope to have part of my nose."—Philadelphia Times.

Hald Tight.

Quite the Reverse.

"Did your father ever raise his hand to you, Billy?" asked Tommy.

"Hundreds of times," said Billy. "But it wasn't that that bothered me. Where I got stung was when he brought it down."—Harper's Weekly.

Charity.

Husband—What on earth are you collecting all those old papers for?

Wife—I'm going to send Thomas out to give them to the poor. They make so nice to light their furnace fires with. —Punch.

The Campaign Portrait.

I saw a picture of a man
With lofty brow and saintly eyes
That seemed this world of ours to scan
In quest of boons fair and wise.
Where all would heed the wisdom deep
His lips, last parted, seemed to frame,
Yet vigilance that knew not sleep
Into his bait waylaid him.

A hero in whatever may come,
Publish flashing desperate in the strain,
With courage fit for martyrdom
And caution to avoid that same!
In fascination still I gaze,
For it depicts man's perfect state,
Whose vast attainments amaze and daze
The portrait of a candidate.

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured."

The Greatest Historian.

By common consent the greatest of all historians is Thucydides, the Greek contemporary of Pericles and author of the history of the Peloponnesian war. Many of the greatest orations that can be paid to him is that, according to the estimate of a very able critic, we have a more correct account of a long and eventful period by Thucydides than we have of any period in modern history, equally long and eventful, and yet all this is compressed into a single volume. For concise, vigorous and yet intense presentation Thucydides has never been equaled. He is the king of historians.—New York American.

An English King's Death.

William Rufus was killed by an arrow, either accidental or with murderous intent. He died in the New Forest. His body was stripped by tramps and the next day was found by a charcoal burner, who placed the naked corpse on his cart, hoping to receive a reward. On the way to Winchester the cart was upset, and the king's body fell in the mire. Covered with filth and black with charcoal, it arrived in Winchester, where it was buried in the cathedral. A few years later the tower fell and crushed the tomb, and 600 years after the Puritans rifled the grave and placed football with the king's skull.

The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL REVELATION TO THE WOMAN

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Illustrations by Dencoon Powell

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY HARPER, FOX & COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prospector in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blinding blizzard but are confronted by the wrathful husband. He is shot and killed, but the chivalrous boy pins a note on the body taking the crime upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the woman's horse falls exhausted; the youth puts her astride his own and follows hanging to the stirrup strap. Seeing he is an impediment, the woman thrusts her aside into a snow drift and rides on. Half-frozen he stumbles into the railroad station just as the train bears the woman away.

CHAPTER I—Continued.

He actually gave her $200,000 to start that great institution for young working women which was the pride of her heart, and he promised her that as the work developed, as he had no doubt it would develop on the foundations she was planning, he would follow up the first gift by others even larger. He told her that he was willing to devote a million or perhaps more to the enterprise, if it proved worth while, especially as so many of his own employees would be benefited by it.

Miss Haldane did not intend to live in the social settlement herself. She might perhaps have enjoyed such a life; but her social duties at the other end of society were of so exacting a character, and her family were so opposed to her undertaking such work that she contented herself with furthering from afar the efforts of certain of her college mates in that direction.

One thing possibly that induced Gormly to promise this great sum of money, which he could very well spare, was the knowledge imparted to him by Miss Haldane that she herself, through her father and friends, would give a like amount.

Gormly had erected a pledge from the young woman that she would not betray him as a benefactor in her institution. He had actually made out the check to her for the amount in question and turned it over without hesitation after an interview lasting less than half an hour, in which Miss Haldane had set forth her plans, her hopes, and her ambitions with all her charm of manner. He was not certain that he could have refused her the more if she had demanded it.

When Miss Haldane left his business office, check in hand, she felt that she had indeed accomplished much. She was quite satisfied with herself.

Gormly was equally satisfied with himself. Then and there he determined to marry Miss Haldane. It takes the cool head, prudent man of business to make the most extraordinary plunges into wild endeavors at times. He felt as a man with the Wall street germ in his blood might feel who was suddenly, after a semester of a century of restraint, launched on the sea of speculation. What Gormly determined was usually carried out about sooner or later. In this instance, however, there was no assurance of success. Matrimony is theoretically regarded as a contract between two equals into which neither enters upon constraint. That was Gormly's view of it. He could buy and sell merchandise. He would not buy or sell a woman.

Nor had George Gormly a particular knowledge to enable him to play the game he had entered upon with such stupendous indirection. He could hand out a million dollars or so on occasion without feeling it; but cynical though he had become about womankind in general, Gormly instinctively realized that such means would be entirely inadequate to do more than arrest temporary attention and excite a passing interest in such a woman as Miss Haldane. Indeed, too freely resorted to, such practise would inevitably disgust her.

Meanwhile he must keep in touch with her. At intervals, therefore, he won himself a sight of her and maintained a speaking acquaintance of further remittances toward her project; which had already started with a tremendous flourish of trumpets and great futurest on the part of the public.

Miss Haldane, for all her other qualities, was human and a woman. There was something rather alluring in a secret even to her. She enjoyed being the means of disbursing for good ends millions that remained anonymous to the general public. She was quite willing to call at Gormly's business office on occasion for the purpose of relieving him of further donations. Naturally she confided more and more of her plans and sometimes her difficulties to the same astute man. She found Gormly remarkably intelligent on such matters and able to give her the very best possible advice. Sometimes she even came to him of her own motion to receive something else than signed bits of paper good at the bank, and to discuss vexing questions and problems that arose from time to time. She grew to respect him and then to like him. Fortune so favored him.

Miss Haldane was twenty-two. Normally she possessed a mass of forty-four as a possible father, and she had no hesitation in approaching Gormly with much more familiarity than she would have dreamed of allowing herself had he been younger. And yet Gormly himself was a young looking man for forty-four. He was still as tall and slender, not to say spare, as he had been when a boy. He was as smooth shaven, and the flecks of gray in his blond hair were scarcely noticeable. If Miss Haldane had ever given thought of his age, she would have supposed him ten years younger than he was; that is, on appearance. When she thought of his business, she would have considered him sixty. Ever since she could remember, she had dealt at the great shop, and Gormly himself unconsciously took on to her the aspect of ancient history.

So the little affair ran on; Gormly conscious much sooner and more deeply involved; Miss Haldane unconsciously intervening herself in the same tangled web.

CHAPTER II.

The Devotion of Mr. Gormly.

The relationship of Miss Haldane and Gormly was all very well so far as it went, but it did not go far enough for the man's purpose at least; and Gormly was shrewd enough to see that things might run on without any definite result in this way forever.

Since the beginning of the acquaintance Gormly had kept track of Miss Haldane through a clipping bureau—an instance of his practical commonsense which may amuse the romantic reader. He had neither the time nor the inclination to search the journals in the Orient into New York any and unloaded them in his great institution. He had conceived, some dozen years before after paying tremendous freight charges, the propriety of establishing his own line of freight steamers. It had amused him to combine the practise of the ancient merchant prince with the customs of the modern one. He had bought the controlling interest in a freight line of half a dozen large steamers, which, he found no difficulty in using as cargo carriers for other people when they were not employing his own needs.

The purchase of the freight line had with it a lease of one of the piers in the North river. The lease had run out the year before. He had there after availed himself of what he considered to be an excellent opportunity of subleasing another pier in the East river. The city had just completed an elaborate railroad, surface and sub way, for the transportation of heavy freight from the water front to the great mercantile establishments inland. The system had been leased to the Gotham Freight Traction company, a vast corporation with a full set of ostensible promoters and directors, but which had back of it powers and persons unknown to the general public, carefully concealed from it in fact.

The corporation had not been formed to promote the health of its members. Therefore when Gormly applied to the authorities for permission to construct a switch from the

THEY CHEATED AT CARDS

Experienced Shopper, Who Was Wise, Put Hubby Onto Facts of the Case.

Speaking of family poker parties this really happened:

A young married couple attended such a session at the home of a neighbor the other night. And when the young couple got home, the female end of the sketch said:

"Jim, I hate to say anything about the Halle—they seem to be nice people. But I'm afraid they cheat at cards."

"Nonsense!"

"I know you'd say that, and it's dear of you to be so unsuspecting. But—well, what was the price of the chips, tonight? Five cents each? That's what I thought. Jim, I examined those chips carefully, and they're the very same thing that I could have bought at Jones' store for a dollar a hundred in all three colors, too!"

BABY'S HAIR ALL CAME OUT

"When my first baby was six months old he broke out on his head with little bumps. They would dry up and leave a scale. Then it would break out again and it spread all over his head. All the hair came out and his head was scaly all over. Then his face broke out all over in red bumps and it kept spreading until it was on his hands and arms. I bought several boxes of ointment, gave him blood medicine, and had two doctors to treat him, but he got worse all the time. He had it about six months when a friend told me about Cuticura. I sent and got a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. In three days after using them he began to improve. He began to take long naps and to stop scratching his head. After taking two bottles of Resolvent, two boxes of Ointment and three cakes of Soap he was sound and well, and after he had any breaking out of any kind. His hair came out in little curls all over his head. I don't think anything else would have cured him except Cuticura.

"I have bought Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap several times since to use for cuts and sores and have never known them to fail to cure what I put them on. Cuticura Soap is the best that I have ever used for toilet purposes." (Signed) Mrs. F. E. Harmon, R. F. D. 2, Atoka, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 16 L, Boston.

Resting Must Be a Business.

Will M. Rose, a well-known writer of Stevens Point, Wis., who is himself a cured consumptive, holds that useless resting becomes a business to the tuberculosis patient, he might as well give up his fight for health. "The period of infection with tuberculosis," he says, "is not a vacation. It is a twenty-four hour-a-day job. True it is a period of idleness, but one of intelligent, directed idleness. The daily work should consist of rest; rest should be the only business on hand. The light exercise, or hour of reading, should be considered as the reward of a good day's work, like the evening of slippered ease to the tired business men at the end of the day. This reminds, however, should be considered only as an incidental result of the patient's work, not the main object."

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had internal troubles, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. Forever free from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PETROUX, 1111, Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing female ills from which so many women suffer.

THE BEST HE COULD

By DONALD ALLEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

At the age of ten years little Miss Dixie Herland stood up on a chair and made an astonishing statement to the grandmother who was soon to be born and had given the child her name. It was to the effect that she would never marry anyone but a hero. That statement had been repeated every year when Grandma paid her annual visit of two weeks, when Miss Dixie was in her twentieth year, she had said with more than usual emphasis:

"Yes, I've had lot of beaux, but I'm still waiting for that hero."

"I'm 70 years old, and I've never found one yet," said grandma.

"But there must be some somewhere."

"You see, dear, things aren't like they used to be. Men are in business or at work, and not thinking of the hero business. If a man was to ride around the country looking for a chance to be a hero he'd be owing for his board and laundry bills within a month."

"But I know I couldn't love a man who just walked about with his shoes polished and a cigar to his mouth. I might as well marry an eight-day clock. What could I admire him for? No, grandma—I'll wait. I don't expect that I am going to carry me of, and some lone man is going to slaughter the whole band and rescue me, but it must be some man who does his best to be a hero in some way—some courageous cuss enough to grasp the opportunity."

"Poor Dixie!" sighed the old lady. "When I came this time I hoped to hear you were engaged, but I reckon I'll have to give you up."

"Let the hero appear at the psychological moment and I am his," laughed the niece as she left the house to make a trip to the village postoffice and a store or two.

Mrs. Herland was a widow and not in good health. There was a brother Jimmy, 16 years old, but he was away on a visit. It was Miss Dixie who was the head of the house. That was why, when she had been gone half an hour and was fumbling over some silks in the store, the cook at home called her up on the store telephone to say:

"Oh, Miss Dixie, the big kitchen chimney is on fire, and the house has got to go!"

"Empty your salt-box into the range!" was promptly commanded.

"Yes, Miss Dixie, but there's a roaring and a crackling and lots of smoke! I've told your mother, and she's flinted away! I've told your grandma, and she's droped like dead in her tracks! I've told the gardener, and oh, Miss Dixie—"

"I'm coming. Keep up the salt!"

As Miss Dixie ran to the store she also forgot how she had come to town —in her runabout or on foot. Just then a peddler drove up with his horse headed in the right direction and got down. To the girl it was a vehicle to take her home in two minutes—she didn't care what kind. She pushed by the owner and mounted to the high seat, and she never heard him calling as she lifted the lines and the whip. The first cut of the lash lifted the old horse out of his dream; the second started him on a gallop, and the third called for runaway speed.

Off went Miss Dixie's hat. Off went bags of paper-rags from the roof of the wagon. There was black smoke in the sky from the direction of the Harland homestead.

Another cut—two—three—four of them, and now the old horse was running away. He must get out of Robertsville county to save his life. Thicker smoke! More cuts! More "get ups!" More golden hair flying over shoulders, and more paper-rags dotting the highway behind. And then the contents of the wagon flew open and the tinware began to jolt out. Pans, basins, dippers, quart measures, platters, wash-dishes—one followed the other with a rattle and a bang, and one could imagine the old horse saying to himself as he ran:

"For the land's sake, but if this girl is looking for a hero I hope she'll find him mighty soon, for I'm getting short of breath!"

Miss Dixie found him, and soon. He was coming along the same highway dressed as a walking fossil. She tried to pull the old horse up at the house, but he had the bit in his teeth. It was still nine miles to the county line, and the last autumn grass he had been onloosed. The girl was about to throw away whip and lines and jump when the young man raised a hand in protest and poised himself. He jumped for the head of the horse and caught the bridle. Horse and man went down in the dust in a heap, and the wagon seemed to fall apart. Then Miss Dixie found herself on her feet in the may-weeds, unhurt, and she investigated.

The salt had put out the fire in the big chimney, and the house was safe.

Mrs. Harland had recovered from her faint, and was on the veranda with grandma, who had come to life again.

The gardener and the cook were on their way down to the gate to take orders, and the peddler was coming on the run, but halting to pick up an object here and there.

The stranger lay on his right side, with a part of the body of the horse resting on his right leg. He was unconscious and had broken bones. For just two seconds as she looked at him the girl's lip trembled and her knees grew weak. Then she threw it off. Her mother was told to telephone the doctor, the cook to bring out a mattress, and she and the gardener cerefully pulled the unconscious stranger out of the rack. Then, with the help of the peddler, he was carried into the house.

"Come here tomorrow and I will settle all demeges," said Miss Dixie to the peddler, who was grinning and seeking to find out where the romance came in. And as she worked over the bleeding and dusty face on her lap she looked up and said to the trembling grandma:

"I told you I'd find him!"

"He's dead, child!"

"Got a broken leg and a few bruises—that's all. And I'm glad his leg is broken. I always wanted to be nurse to my hero!"

There was her opportunity. The leg was broken, a rib or two cracked and the shoulder dislocated. A man nurse had to be employed for a number of weeks, and it was days and days before the name of the patient was known. The old horse had served him pretty harshly.

It was one day after the young man could be lifted out into the invalid's chair and a herbier had come from the village and shaved him, that Miss Dixie was stopped as she came down stairs with an empty soup bowl in her hand and grandma asked:

"Well, has he told you all about it?"

"Yes, grandma. His name is Archie Gillette. He was making a walk across the country—nice family—rich family! Some of them will be here soon."

"And do you consider him a hero because he stopped that peddler's old horse?"

"Why, he did the best he could didn't he, and you can't ask more than that?"

"And—and—?"

"Why, of course, if his folks like me, but it will be a whole year from now. What do you suppose we saved each others' lives for?"

Wasted Sarcasm.

After a week in the country a promi neot lawyer returned to town, determined to stay during the summer. But before coming home he had the satisfaction of telling the keeper of the "real old country boarding farmhouse" just what he thought of things. "There is one thing on your table," said the lawyer, "which is not to be excelled by the best hotels of New York or Philadelphia." "What is it?" asked the farmer. "The salt," answered the attorney, with a floe display of biting sarcasm. "Well, I'm glad ye liked it," returned the farmer. "It's the best Jimsons' keep, an' I sle't perticker about the price."

Joke on One of Them.

A young fellow who could evidently speak no English except as a parrot speaks it, walked into a New York liquor shop the other day.

"Iss dis a saloop?" he inquired.

The irish bartender gasped, and then, with a sober face, he replied: "No, sir; this is a dry goods store."

"Pardoo," said the foreigner, with a blush and sweet smile. And he left in a hurry.

The bartender doesn't know whether to get mad or to laugh—the joke is on somebody.

The Ready Explainer.

"What did you think of my gradoation essay?" inquired the young woman.

"It was'a profoundly thoughtful address," replied Senator Borgbum.

"But I saw you yawn."

"A tribute to its quality. It was so profoundly thoughtful I imagined for a moment that I was in the halls of legislation."

Milking Machines Popular.

Milking machines, invented in New Zealand about four years ago, says Vice Consul General Baker, and since much improved and developed in Australia, are coming into quite general use in this country for milking dairy herds, saving much time and labor for those engaged in dairying.

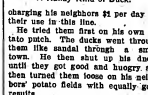
FATTEN FOWLS FOR MARKET



Maine Experiment Station Finds That Small Pens Give as Great Gains as Latticed Coops.

The Maine experiment station in a series of experiments in feeding cockerels for market has demonstrated that as great gains have been obtained as cheaply, counting labor, cost of feed, etc., by feeding in small pens as where birds are fed in latticed coops holding but four to six birds. The pens had a roosting board connected with them. Four weeks was found to be the extreme limit of profitable feeding, either in coops or flocks. The birds should be under four months of age to give the greatest profit for feed consumed. The sooner they are fattened after eight weeks of age, the greater the gain per pound of food consumed. The meat of a penfed chick is quite different from that of a corn-fed chick so free range. The former is softfleshed and evenly fatted, while the latter is tough-muscled, stringy, with more abdominal fat, and with but little fat distributed throughout the flesh of the body. Milk-fed chickens are superior to eoy other kind. The dairy farmer is particularly fitted for producing the class of chicken that will fetch pounds of skim milk were used with each pound of grain; this was considered a good proportion.

MOST USEFUL KIND OF DUCK

Southern Illinois Farmer Trains His Flock to Destroy Potato Bugs—Clean Field Quickly.

A former in southern Illinois has, so he claims, educated his big flock of ducks to eat potato bugs and he is charging his neighbors $1 per day for their use in this line.

He tried them first on his own potato patch. The ducks were turned in them like sandal through a small town. He then shut up his ducks until they got good and hungry and then turned them loose on his neighbors' potato fields with equally good results.

Shove Young Chicks Along.

If you intend to send some of your chickens to the fall fairs you must shove the early chickens right along and feed them for all that is on so that they may be large enough for show purposes. In order to get the old birds in good shape for showing you must try to get them to molt as early as possible and then feed all they will stand. To get fowls to molt early, feed very sparingly for a few weeks with feed of a relaxing nature, such as bruised meat or oil cake meal.

Separate Cockerels.

Tha growing cockerels should now be separated from tha pullets, and the former given an extra allowance of feed. They will need this additional amount more than the pullets in order that they can be kept growing.

MARYSVILLE, CALIFORNIA.
LAND FOR PROFITABLE FARMING.

Marysville Colony, located in Sutter County, which is in the heart of the Sacramento Valley, is fast coming to the front as a farming community in which nearly every agricultural product known is successfully raised without irrigation.

The soil is a dark, sandy loam, sedimentary in character, level and well drained. It has the advantage over other soils in that it is loose in character and superior to heavy soils. With this wealth of soil, abundance of water, unexcelled climate and long growing season, Marysville Colony is the ideal place for the homeseeker with limited means, the worn out professional man, or the young man looking for a small farm in a healthful climate.

The proximity of Marysville Colony to Sacramento, furnishes a ready market for vegetables, poultry, eggs and dairy products. Fruits, vegetables, alfalfa, grains and grasses and poultry yield large returns. The plentiful supply and demand is unknown.

Land is yet moderately priced, but good features in other sections of the United States will bring new settlers in rapidly. This, together with the holding of the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco during 1915, is bound to raise the price, and whether for a home, or for an investment, now is the time to purchase. Land only has had to treble advance to the means of all and the results obtained are almost beyond belief. Further information will be gladly furnished by HOMESEEKERS' INFORMATION BUREAU, 630 Bee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

Not Sufficiently Eager.

A little miss of five years was under the ban of disobedience. She had been told to put on her playthings, as it was near bed time. She did not obey the command, and, when forced to do so, gave way to a petulant display of temper. Her father, who was upstairs, heard the commotion, and, being made acquainted with the cause, summoned the child to his presence. Irma started to the stairs, but suddenly made a turn, dashed along the hallway and out of the house. Of course she was soon captured, but her excitement was so great that she was put to bed at once. Mother's effort soothed the child and then she was asked: "Why did you run away when your father called you?" The reply came promptly enough: "You don't suppose, mamma, that I wanted a whipping last enough to go upstairs after it?"

SUFFERED AGONY.

Stockache, Headache and Dizziness Caused Untold Misery.

Henry J. White, 416 No. 3rd St., Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I suffered everything but death from terrible kidney trouble. I did not have a moment's peace. The urine remained in my bladder and I left a red stain where it touched the linen. When passed it was so painful I could not have burned more. I had awful headaches, dizzy spells and my back ached constantly. I began using Doan's Kidney Pills after various remedies had failed to help me and was completely cured. I have had no sign of kidney trouble since."

Bad Water vs. Good Health

BY LOUIS EDWARD THEISS

COPYRIGHT, BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

HOW grossly inconsistent we are! When, for the sake of gain, a Missouri physician administered typhoid germs to some of his relatives, thereby causing six or eight illnesses and one death, we stood aghast, called the physician a murderer, and clapped him into prison for life. And when, during the Spanish-American war, some twenty-five hundred of the boys in khaki were needlessly slaughtered, many of them by typhoid, we denounced in scathing terms those officials whose carelessness and incompetency caused this tragedy. But we bear with absolute indifference the statement that yearly the pollution of our water sources needlessly causes more than 385,000 typhoid illnesses and 15,000 deaths. We pay no heed to the fact that year after year in the United States seven times as many people are needlessly ill of typhoid fever as there were soldiers wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, and three times as many persons needlessly die from typhoid fever as met death in that tragic struggle.

It is the old, old story of the mote and the beam. We do not see the enormity of this terrible wrong, because we are ourselves the authors of it. We are just as responsible for those 15,000 yearly deaths as our army officers were for the tragedies in our Spanish war camps. And our conduct is just as mercenary as was that of the physician who gave typhoid germs to gain a heritage. For we, too, are actuated by financial reasons; we are unwilling to pay the price of water purification. So we continue to suffer the rack of a polluted water supply and there gushes forth sewage. And when our children ask for water we give them poison.

To be suitable—that is, to be potable and fit for domestic use—water must be practically free from pathogenic germs, color, sediment, odor, taste and turbidity. Hardness makes laundering difficult. Iron spoils linen. Carbonic-acid gas turns water quite brown. Algae make water taste bad. Water supplies differ widely as human beings. "Pure, wholesome water," the term set forth in so many water contracts, is, then, wholly a relative term. Really pure water is a rare thing, because there hardly exists in nature water that does not contain some foreign ingredients. Not all of these are harmful, however, so that water that is fit to drink is as common as really pure water is rare. So that, generally speaking, the question of a good water supply is merely a question of being willing to spend the money necessary to obtain it. Hence there ought to be no common lot in the United States that does not have a plentiful supply of perfectly wholesome water.

Anything but wholesome, however, is the quality of the water that all too often we actually get. Dr. F. W. Shumway, reporting on water conditions in Michigan, says in part: "Of the ninety-nine replies received, 79 per cent reported the water as good, 11 per cent as fair, and 10 per cent as of bad quality. . . . The replies from 124 localities indicate that in 43 per cent of these localities the public water supplies are in danger of contamination." Dr. Q. O. Sutherland, discussing water conditions in Wisconsin, says that in his state "only every stream and lake for any kind of supply is contaminated to some extent by sewage." Health Commissioner G. A. Bading, speaking of Milwaukee's water supply, says that most of the city's water comes from Lake Michigan, but that there are still 5,000 wells in existence, 91 per cent of which have been shown to be contaminated. Lake Michigan is the source of water for many other towns near it. One of the tributaries of Lake Michigan is the Grand Calumet river. And here is what Isham Conkey, commissioner of health of Chicago, has to say of the Grand Calumet: "The greater part of the sewage from the business and residential districts of Hammond, Ind.) empties into the Grand Calumet, which, as it flows through Hammond, is almost unspeckenbly vile and putrescent. And this stream empties into the lake only 2,000 feet from the waterworks intake." Dr. Edward Bartow, analyzing conditions in Illinois, says that "an examination of the untreated lake water shows that satisfactory water is frequently delivered at Evanston, Lake Forest, Glencoe, North Chicago, Waukegan, Winnette and Winnetka. . . . And that the water supplies of all cities which use unfiltered lake water are shown to be impure at times." And the condition of the water supply may be taken as typical of the entire country. A very considerable proportion of our drinking water is absolutely unfit for human consumption.

Criminal negligence is the sole and only cause of such a condition. We dig a cesspool and a well in the same yard, and the contents of the one percolate through the earth into the other. We place a privy vault e few feet from our well hole, and the rens wash the filth from the former into the latter. We defile the surface of the ground so that every rainstorm sweeps the defilement into our streams. Did you ever stand at the edge of a barnyard and watch the rain falling from the roof of the barn and pig pen to the manure pile below, slowly accumulating in pools of reddish black, and draining away into a nearby stream, and so on into some one's drinking water? Or have you ever stood by a river bank and watched a sewer belching forth its infinitely more harmful human contents? The idea of drinking such nauseating stuff is not pleasant; but that is exactly what millions of us are doing. Like the ostrich, we have turned to our own vomit. For, to quote Theodore Horton, Chief Engineer of the New York State Health Department, "We pump filth into a stream by one pipe, and by another pipe we pump it out again to drink."

Let me give you some concrete instances of how our drinking water is defiled. In rural New York inspectors from Ithaca found a farmer, who pattaraing after Hercules' method of cleaning the Augean stables, had built his barn directly over a large brook, which carried away all his stable manure. This brook was one of the sources of Ithaca's water supply.

Along the valley of the Susquahanna there is a string of good-sized towns—Plymouth, Wilkes-Barre, Wyoming, Bloomsburg, Sunbickes, and others, all of which empty sewage into the river, end a number of which take their drinking water direct from the river. Wilkes-Barre does, and its pumping station is on an island in the river. When the stream overflows, as it does every spring, the pumpwell is flooded with the foulest of water—the rolled river flow contaisiag suspended sewage and the reeking, sulphurous waste of coal mines. They make an effort to clean this pump-well. Perhaps they succeed and perhaps they do not. The point is that the expenditure of a little money would protect the pumping station from laundation.

New York state has the same tale of pollution to tell. Albany, Cohoes, Dunkirk, Lockport, Niagara Falls, Ogdensburg, Oswego, Tonawanda, Watervliet, and other cities drink river water that is grossly polluted by the sewage of cities terther upstream. And I have seen dozens of photographs or filthy sewsheds and barns, the drainage from which polluted the watersbed for New York City.

Within fifteen towns worth of Chicago empty sewage into Lake Michigan, and nine of them draw their drinking water back from the lake. And what is true of Pennsylvania, and New York, and Illinois, is also true of other states. Particularly is it true of the south. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Lakes, our people are needlessly drinking polluted water.

What is worse, water pollution is on the increase. "With the rapid growth of our population," says Alex H. Sprague, Secretary of the New York State Board of Health, in a recent bulletin, "the defilement of our streams also increases. Some of our finest streams and lakes are being rendered unuveilable for bathing, bathing, fishing, and domestic use. They are of no value except as cesspools."

Typhoid fever one cannot contract without taking into the system germs that have been voided by a typhoid patient. These germs get into the body through the mouth, pass through the stomach into the intestines and srs carried through the body by the blood. They leave the body through the bowels and by the urine. Sometimes infection is carried by contact or through vegetables and milk; but the common channel of typhoid transmission is through our water supply. "In order that germs could find entrance into drinking water," to quote Dr. John Hammond, "it is most unspeckenbly vile and putrescent. And this stream empties into the lake only 2,000 feet from the waterworks intake." Dr. Edward Bartow, analyzing conditions in Illinois, says that "an examination of the untreated lake water shows that satisfactory water is frequently delivered at Evanston, Lake Forest, Glencoe, North Chicago, Waukegan, Winnette and Winnetka. . . . And that the water supplies of all cities which use unfiltered lake water are shown to be impure at times." And the condition of the water supply may be taken as typical of the entire country. Taka Pittsburg, where, as we have seen, the typhoid rate was 127 per 100,000 population. Pittsburg is a city with a population in excess of 250,000. Hence its annual death roll from typhoid must have amounted to 254 times 127, or something like 444. At $5,000 a life, this death roll will cost Pittsburgh $2,564,000 a year, or $26,640,000 every decade. And the loss to the entire country, figuring the typhoid deaths at 20,000, reaches the astounding total of $120,000,000 a year, or $1,200,000,000 every decade.

This estimate, however, is without question too conservative. Mr. Allen Hazen, an eminent American engineer, says in his book, "Clean Water and How to Get It," that the reduction in the number of deaths from fevers, brought about through water purification, amounted to 440. Improved general sanitary conditions, he says, were responsible for 137 of the 440 decrease. The typhoid reduction amounted to only 71. The reduction in the number of deaths from other causes amounted to 232—three times the typhoid reduction. If this ratio of deaths due to water holds good generally, then our typhoid deaths are only a small part of the deaths due to bad water.

That three-quarters of the typhoid deaths are due to water Mr. Hazen himself declares. That three-quarters is referred to in the first paragraph of this article as the "fifteen thousand needlessly slaughtered each year by polluted water." Because, to quote Mr. Hazen, "three quarters of the typhoid deaths could ha prevented, and thereby could be stopped this needless loss of vital capitol that is going on year after year."

The way to save that three-quarters, then, is by being careful, which in this case means by providing pure water. As Mr. Hazen puts it, "By filtering all the water supplies of the important cities of the country, and by instituing other necessary sanitary reforms."

As proof of this let us see what hes happened to the death rate in those localities that have purified their water supplies. The typhoid rate of Rensselaer for ten years averaged 61.9 per 100,000 population. In 1900, after the water was filtered, it fell to 20. Hudson changed from Hudson river water to a purer supply, and the rate fell from 69.2—the ten-year average—to 17.1. Poughkeepsie's rate used to average 112. In 1907 the new plant was put in operation, and the rate fell to 34.5. In Albany the ten-year average before filtration was 88.8. Since filtration the ten-year average has been 32.8.

In Pennsylvania, Pittsburg hed n typhoid rate, according to Health Director E. R. Wallace, that from 1901 to 1907 averaged 127. In 1907 the city spent $6,500,000 for n filter system. During the three years since, the typhoid rate has been 21.5—a decrease of more than 75 per cent.

Chicago affords an even more striking example of the benefit of purifying the w ater supply. In 1891 Chicago's typhoid rate was 17.8 per 100,000, the highest average typhoid rate in the civilized world. Chicago purified its water by building its wonderful drainage canal to keep its sewage out of Lake Michigan. In 1909 Chicago's typhoid rate was 15.6—a reduction of 91 per cent.

Excellent as these achievements are, there is a possibility of an even greater reduction in the typhoid rate.

The methods of water purification are various. Undoubtedly filtration comes first; but filtration is not infallible.

Another method of purification is the use of huge storage reservoirs. Water is a poor medium for disease germs, and in it they die quickly. To cease Mr. Whipple again: "The typhoid bacillus does not multiply in ordinary drinking water. On the contrary the cells die.

Ultimately all the cells die. Tha rate varies greatly. In some experiments all died in 3 to 5 days. In others germs lived a month. In very cold water mortality is more rapid." Hence if water can be impounded in large reservoirs and held for a time, it tends to purify itself.

Sewage disposal is fully as important as water purification—that is, for any purpose except the saving of human life. If property is at stake it is indispensable.

The problem of clean water is evidently not a difficult one to solve. No nation hns a free supply of water than we have.

At the least you can guard the water that comes into your house. Sea that you get fresh water from the mains, and not water that has stood for hours in the lead or brass pipes with. in the house. House filters are plentiful, but few of them are efficient. They are merely streiners. Don't put ice in your water. It may contaminate it. Your great safeguard is in boiling your water. Particularly is this necessary in the late winter, when typhoid epidemics so often break out.

Total $115,539

In making this estimate, however, allowance was made for the loss of only one year's earning power. An estimate of an insurance mortality table shows that the man who dies before he is forty dies .before his time. Hence his death represents a loss, not of one year's income, but of many. Five thousand dollars is the sum at which a life is usually valued in reckoning economic loss. The typhoid loss is based only on the number of those who dia. As Mr. George Whipple points out, there is an added loss occasioned by non-fatal typhoid illnesses that should also be taken into account. The average period of typhoid convalescence, as figured from 596 cases, in a Pennsylvania hospital, is 42 days. Hence loss of wages plus cost of medical attendance would easily average $100 for every person who recovers. If ten recover for one who dies, then an extra $1,000 must be added to the $5,000 allowed for each death, making the total economic loss caused by every typhoid death $6,000.

Figuration this basis the loss to many communities amounts to millions of dollars yearly.

MAN IS A MEGAPHONE

Railroad Caruso With a Cyclone in Either Lung.

Clyde Hayes, Who Calls the Trains in Chicago's Big Northwestern Station, Has a Voice Like a Foghorn.

Chicago.—Clyde B. Hayes is the railroad Caruso. Every day from 3:30 p. m. to 11 he proclaims the departure of more trains than any other station caller. His concert platform is of nl steel construction and it is located way up near the splendid ceiling of the new Northwestern railroad station.

Thirty thousand people each day lend appreciative ears as he skylarks the suburban schedule on the Milwaukee and Galena divisions, plus enough overland trains to keep Chicago and the Pacific coast bound in close fellowship. Presidents of the United States, boy orators, world famous evangelists, divinities of grand opera, baseball umpires—some of these ever had the constant opportunities of Train Announcer Hayes to enlighten and electrify a listening multitude.

Passing swiftly over the poor boy and burning ambition section of his life, we find Hayes in full charge of a night accommodation train in Nebraska. Yes, until recently he was a railroad conductor, and was treading the threadbare aisle of a Nebraska accommodation, occasionally unhooking a brightly nickled lantern from his left elbow and dropping off into the night to wigwag the engineer.

One day the division superintendent of the Northwestern line at Omaha summoned young Conductor Hayes into his grim presence.

"Are you a wreck, Mr. Heyes, that you have been 'turned in' a number of times lately?" said the superintendent in that courteous style the latter had nervously placed his cap on the edge of the glass topped table.

Hayes trembled and his heart sank. To be "turned in," in railroad patois, means to be the object of complaints by passengers.

"What have I done, sir?" he murmured anxiously.

"You have disturbed the sleep of a large number of passengers on this line," said the superintendent. "They have complained to me from traveling men who ride on your train, and they say that when you announce a station at night your voice not only wakes them, but scares them and knocks them out of a proper night's rest, so to do business the next day. Hereafter, Mr. Hayes, when calling out stations I wish you would not try to displace the window panes or experiment with sound vibrations on the bell rope.

But it seems that Mr. Hayes is a walking library for volumes and volumes of stentorian noise. It couldn't be suppressed, and so he had no time to attend a ball game and let out steam on the bleachers, he had to resume his old habit of standing at one end of a yellow car and closing the door at the opposite end by sheer force of his lung register. Also he would laugh when impelled by the platform draft, and the storage of vocal colds began with a jangling noise. For a time the gentle patter of cinders would be stilled and the whole length of the water cooler would take up the echoes. At least, that was the description given by the sleep-eager passengers who signed a petition which was sent to the big chief at Omaha ere another month had passed.

The railroad officials were deeply puzzled by the case of Conductor Hayes, who was himself quite able and efficient in every other way. Some one suggested putting him on a way run, where people slept at their own risk, or at the mercy of the train butcher.

In the meantime the hilarious story of Conductor Hayes and the sleepy drummers and the way to cure Chicago and Conductor Hayes was ordered to report here. Ha came wondering and perplexed as he was set to work learning the list of train departures. Then when the new station was' opened, Hayes stood on the porch of a balcleship, he stood in he high balcony and began his interminable recitations forthwith. For a day or so he wrestled with echoes and acoustic cnares, but now he has mastered the problem of resonance in the great station.

Dies While Posing for Picture Films

NEW YORK.—A moving picture machine set up to make a film of the rescue of a young woman from the waters of a lake in Staten Island the other day recorded instead the drowning of the actor-rescuer and the saving of the actress by herself. The actor drowned was Albert Brighton.

The play which ended in the tragedy took place at Brady's pond, Greenmere. The pond has an area of about six acres. Mary Murray, an actress, rowed out twenty-five feet or so from the shore. The young woman, in a fluffy white dress and shoes in the boat, was to pick water lilies.

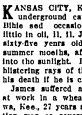
The picture machine was started, and Miss Murray picked several of the flowers. Then, at a signal from the operator, she leaned far over the gunwale and stretched her hand toward another of the lilies. As she put her weight on the side of the boat it tipped and went over, throwing her into the water.

It was part of the play that the girl should scream for help and throw up her hands to attract the attention of Brighton, who was strolling along the shore of the pond in immaculate summer flannel. When the girl screamed Brighton threw off his straw hat and his coat and dived into the water.

The young woman in the water continued her acting of the helpless drowning girl. The actor splashed toward her, apparently half swimming and half wading. Then he began to shout for help as if appealing to those on shore to come to his assistance in rescuing the girl.

As he shouted he disappeared and then reappeared and shouted again. The others of the company made no move, thinking that he had taken a notion to impart an additional appearance of reality to the act.

Army Convicts Building Model Prison



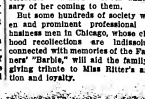
FORT LEAVENWORTH, KAN.—Work on what is intended to be the largest and most perfect prison in the world is now under way. The war department has adopted the plans of a model federal prison and the buildings—but a few of them—will begin to replace the present structures. The cost of the new prison is estimated at only $642,000, but the completed structure will be the equal of $5,000,000 buildings erected by contract. This saving of more than $2,000,000 will be represented by the work done by convicts, the material manufactured in the prison, and the parts of the old prison utilized in the new. The entire work, it is expected, will be completed by January 1, 1914. By the end of next year, however, a large part of the new prison will be occupied.

When the new prison is completed it will have accommodations for 2,182 convicts, each cell will have a large cell to himself, fitted with every modern convenience. The cell houses are to be built on the radial plan, each tier of cells radiating from a central rotunda, from which the watch officer can, by merely turning his head, see the entire frontage.

Military prisoners differ greatly from convicts in the characteristics in that most of them are under sentence for what is civil life would merit merely discharges from their employment. Most of the prisoners are under sentence for desertion or disobedience of orders, and many of them voluntarily surrender for punishment. As a rule they average higher in the scale of manhood and intelligence than civil convicts and, accordingly, will receive better treatment.

The men now convicts are erecting the new buildings, burning the lime, making cement blocks, cutting and sawing timber, fitting the plumbing, erecting the steel, in fact, doing practically every part of the work under civilian foremen. Practically all material entering into the construction of the new prison buildings is being made by convicts.

Sun Victim Spends Summers in Cave



KANSAS CITY, Kas.—Alone in an underground cave, studying the little sod occasionally painting a little in oil, 11, 11. James of this city, sixty-five years old, passes the summer months, afraid to come out into the sunlight. He knows that the blistering rays of the sun will cause his death if he is exposed to them.

James suffered a sunstroke while at work in a wheat field near Ottawa, Kas., 27 years ago. The prostration was so severe that for weeks it was thought he could not recover. He finally recovered, but doctors told him that exposure to the hot sun would aggravate his case and probably kill him. James resolved to keep out of the sun, and for 26 summers he has escaped the sweltering heat that other persons in Kansas have undergone.

James had saved a little money. He came to Kansas City, Kas., about fifteen years ago and one of the first improvements he made at his home place was a summer cave. The cave resembles a cyclone cellar. It is a large excavation in the yard at the rear of his home. Grass has grown over the cave for many years and one must look closely to discover it. The entrance to the cave is a door like that on an outside cellar and steps lead to the interior of the cave at one end. The temperature in the cave never gets above 60 or 65 and day after day, when everyone around it was suffering with the heat, James reposes on a cot, reads his Bible, to which he devotes most of the time.

Servant in One Family for Fifty Years

CHICAGO.—Fifty years in the employ of one woman, whom she has served with rare intelligence, eagerness and devoted loyalty, is the wonderful record established by Miss Barbara Ritter, who has worked the half century for Mrs. Samuel Faulkner, 6746 Madison avenue.

While thousands of women in Chicago have changed servants at the rate of ten a year, Mrs. Faulkner not only has retained the invaluable assistance of her helper, but has won her stanch fealty for herself and her family. Miss Ritter, known as "Barbie" to the hundreds of friends of the Faulkner family, and as famous among them for her personality as for her ginger cookies, has been Mrs. Faulkner's first lieutenant in the raising of the Faulkner family of eight children.

Miss Ritter entered Mrs. Faulkner's service fifty years ago as a nursemaid for the one little Faulkner of that time. She was literally, she liked work, she looked for work and she accomplished work faster than two other ordinary maids could have done it.

For several years the Faulkners have been trying to retire "Barbie" from active work. But she retains the same energy that has always dominated her work and she refuses to be retired. The Faulkners are going to celebrate "Barbie's" fiftieth anniversary of her coming to them.

But some hundreds of society women and prominent professional and business men in Chicago, whose childhood recollections are indissolubly connected with memories of the Faulkners' "Barbie," will aid the family in giving tribute to Miss Ritter's affection and loyalty.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

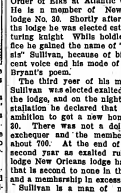
SECRETARY TO KING GEORGE

Forty years in one job is not a bad record, yet this can be claimed by Lord Knollys, King George's private secretary, whose retirement is now imminent. He began his duties with the late king when Prince of Wales and has been the secretary of his son and successor. His originally intended to give up his arduous duties at the death of the late king, and it was well understood that he merely stayed on in order to "train in" Sir Arthur Bigge, upon whose shoulders the responsibilities of the royal secretaryship will now fall.

Such a post requires not only hard work, but a keen knowledge of the world, combined with tact, judgment, decision and memory. It has been said of Lord Knollys that no one could hope to undertake his task with a little of the success which now attaches to it.

The royal correspondence alone would frighten the average man. About 500 letters a day are addressed to the king, and the majority of these are attended to by Lord Knollys, assisted by the under secretaries. No correspondence is more varied than that received by the king. It is a peculiarity of the English court that no matter on what subject you address the occupant of the throne, you almost invariably get a reply.

MILLIONAIRE'S WIFE BROKE



Mrs. Theodore Perry Shoate, mother of a duchess and wife of a millionaire, recently appeared in court in Paris seeking to have her husband's allowance increased. According to the usual charges made when such suits are brought Mrs. Shoate and her husband are not living happily together. Mrs. Shoate rented a fine apartment on the Avenue Hoche several years ago at an annual rental of $5,500, exclusive of taxes and other charges which would run the figures much higher. Obeying an urgent, imperative summons from her husband to return to America, she gave notice that she would not renew the lease when the time expired.

The difficulty with her husband caused him to stop sending the usual remittances and when a bill for $400 was presented by the landlord to pay for damages done to the premises during the term of the lease, Mrs. Shoats found herself without money and unable to pay the amount. H. G. Archibald, her attorney, taking compassion upon Mrs. Shoats in her predicament, advanced the necessary money and drew on Theodore Shoats to reimburse himself. His draft was returned unpaid, with the notation by Shoats that he sent money to his family when he wished, and "did not want any interference from outside parties."

For some time the Shoats have been estranged, due, it is alleged, to Mrs. Shoats' desire to mix with European nobility and to live abroad.

A WIRY LITTLE AMBASSADOR

James Bryce, ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, is one of the youngest old men in official circles in Washington. He is just 70, and yet he is as active, physically and mentally, as though he were 20 years younger. In the winter when other men go about with throats muffled up and overcoats buttoned snugly about them, Ambassador Bryce is frequently seen walking briskly down Connecticut avenue with no wrap outside his frock coat. Cold has no terrors for him and he stands the heat equally as well. Some time ago he had an appointment with Secretary Knox at the state department about noon, and at that hour the thermometer hovered about 100 and mounting higher. But on the stroke of the hour in hustled Mr. Bryce, looking cool as a cucumber, ready for business and apparently not worried over the oppressive temperature that wilted people generally. Mr. Bryce is just as active mentally as he is physically and he is interested in everything. No subject is too large or too small to attract his notice and in this manner he has collected a tremendous fund of information upon every conceivable topic.

CHOSEN RULER OF THE ELKS

John P. Sullivan of New Orleans was chosen grand exalted ruler of the Order of Elks at Atlantic City, N. J. He is a member of New Orleans lodge No. 30. Shortly after he joined the lodge he was elected esteemed leading knight. While holding that office he gained the name of "Thanetopsis" Sullivan, because of his magnificent voice and his mode of delivering Bryant's poem.

The third year of his membership Sullivan was elected exalted ruler of the lodge, and on the night of his installation he declared that it was his ambition to get a new home for No. 30. There was not a dollar in the exchequer and the membership was about 700. At the end of Sullivan's second year as exalted ruler of the lodge New Orleans lodge had a home that is second to none in the country, and a membership in excess of 1,700.

Sullivan is a man of magnificent physique, standing six feet three inches in his stocking feet, and weighs 250. He was a West Point cadet, but left the military academy to study law. When the Spanish-American war broke out, Sullivan, who was lieutenant colonel of the Washington Field Artillery, volunteered with his command to go to the front.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Washington Has a Plague of Cranks

WASHINGTON.—Every crank in the country that doesn't know what fool thing to do with himself gets on the train and tells the conductor to put him off at Washington—thinks he must see the president. If the wheels in the head of some lunatic in Bangor, Me., or Tombstone, Ariz., get to working overtime he heads for Washington to show the president the mechanism. If some long-haired lunatic in Oshkosh builds a wheelbarrow out of a soap box and a sifter rim he won't be happy till he's trundled it 'cross country to Washington and has the president come out on the front porch and look at it.

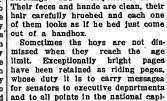
Every summer, before the president leaves, there's a perfect deluge of cranks that have ridden horseback from Dawson City or driven an ox team from some town out beyond the Rockies, says a White house attache. Recently we had two of these idiots in one day—three, to be exact. One was a men ridieg a burro from San Diego to Boston on a bet, and the other two were a man and his wife from some insane place out west. They had sworn on the bones of the saints or something that they would walk into every state in the Union within a twelvemonth; they had already been in seventeen, and having thus acquired fame, came to Washington to show themselves to the president.

Then there's the lunatic who tramps across country on a wager that he can go from ocean to ocean on a dollar and thirty-seven cents. There must be a hundred of him every year, and he generally brings a letter to the president from the mayor of the little town he comes from. And these are just a few of them; if I'd put down the names of all this breed of cranks that turn up here to see the president in six months it would be longer than the list of applicants for a vacant consulship. The trouble is, the president, in many instances, can't get out of seeing the crank.

Inspectors Are Busy Watching Frauds

THE efforts of the government and the various states to provide pure food for the people of the country has brought about a higher quality of foodstuffs, but it has not deterred the inventive genius of the country from trying to work out schemes for substitutes and edulterations.

Probably the worst adulteration that has come to the attention of the department is a "butter emulsion which will cause the butter to absorb its exact weight in water and still prevent the butter eaters knowing it. Take a pound of butter and a pound of water and a spoonful of this emulsion, work the three together for about ten minutes, and there is two pounds of butter and no water. The average housewife could not tell the difference between the watered butter and the real article.

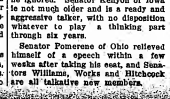


A man in Tennessee has developed a scheme by which he can make a pure apple cider vinegar at an actual cost of four cents a gallon, and sell the output for each gallon. The fraud could not be detected except by an actual chemical test. The same chap also has a scheme for making apple butter with one apple to the gallon of butter and at a cost of one-fourth the real article.

A man in Rochester, N. Y., developed a plan of treating sewer with molasses to use in edulterating spices. One part of the real spice and three parts of sawdust made the product, which could not be detected by the eye or tongue.

There are numerous other schemes for increasing the weight of perched coffee, preserving eggs, useless baking powders, making ketchup and tomato catsup at reduced cost by using little meat or tomatoes. The grocer, to get the recipes, must pay for them. The price is usually $10 and a pledge to secrecy.

Scurrying Little Senate Messengers



VISITORS in the galleries of the senate chamber are always interested in the bright little messengers who scurry about bent on errands for the senators. These pages live officially in an age limit. They must be no less than twelve nor more than sixteen years old. His seventeenth birthday is usually a sorry day for the page boy for it may be long before he can have so good an income; certainly for senators to executive departments and to all points in the national capital. Others have been promoted to the position of deputy sergeant-at-arms of the senate, or as superintendent of pages.

month, whether the senate is in session every day or not. There are now fourteen pages on the floor of the senate, and four riding pages. The letter receive $950 a year, their pay going on whether the senate is in session or not. The pages are never removed on account of politics. The boys of the senate wear knee breeches, neat little round-shouts, silk stockings and well-polished shoes. Their faces and hands are clean, their hair carefully brushed and each one of them looks as if he had just come out of a bandbox.

Sometimes the boys are not dismissed when they reach the age limit. Exceptionally bright pages have been retained as riding pages, whose duty it is to carry messages for senators to executive departments and to all points in the national capital. Others have been promoted to the position of deputy sergeant-at-arms of the senate, or as superintendent of pages.

New Senators Laugh at Silence Rule

ALL the new members of the senate seem to have "lit a talkin'," as the southern mountaineers say of a garrulous stranger with a ready flow of conversation. In other days it was considered the proper thing for a new senator to sit in silence through his first term of six years.

It is only a few years since a lot of precedent-bound senatorial dignitaries expressed their indignation at the intrusion of new members by walking out of the senate chamber when Beveridge began to talk a few days after taking his seat. The same treatment was given La Follette, who remarked as the cash girls of the colleagues vanished through the door that they would come back and listen, and that he probably would, be in the senate when most of them had been retired.

Of the recently elected members of the senate, many are young men, caring little for antiquated traditions. Lake Lea of Tennessee, thirty-two years old, and the youngest man ever seated in the senate, began talking very soon after taking the oath of office and has on several occasions rebuked his colleagues that when traditions of the senate and business methods conflict the traditions will be ignored. Senator Kenyon of Iowa is not much older and is a ready and aggressive talker, with no disposition whatever to play a thinking part through six years.

Senator Pomerene of Ohio relieved himself of a speech within a few weeks after taking his seat, and Senators Williams, Works and Hitchcock are all talkative new members.

GROWTH OF COMMERCE.

The great manufacturing nations, the great producing nations, such as Great Britain, Germany, France and the United States combined, have not more than one-sixth the population of the globe, and it can be said with approximate accuracy that the other five sixths are to a very great degree their customers, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. Fully one-half of the world's population are as yet only fractionally supplied with articles necessary for civilized existence. The 70,000,000 of people in the south of us on the American continent when fully employed, as some day they will be, in producing from their lands, their forests and their mines, will make our manufacturers wealthy through their demands for what our own industrial districts can output. Commerce is pushing its way up every great and small river of South America, it is crossing the Andes over a thousand trails, and where but one railway across South America from ocean to ocean runs, within a score of years there will be several other lines from the Pacific to the navigable waters of the great rivers of the north and the center. The world's commerce of today, huge as it seems, is small compared with that of the future either in tonnage or in value.

Discussion of women's manners in public will not down. Sometimes it is women who complain of being jolted in crowds or of being compelled to stand in street cars while men occupy the seats, says the Boston Globe. Sometimes it is men who murmur because some women in public often seem to ignore the fundamental rules of good breeding. It is noticeable that most of the criticisms of women's public manners are evoked by the act of a well-dressed or stylish and apparently well-to-do woman, seldom by the bearing of working women or girls. The woman who puts down a $20 or a $10 bill at the ticket office window, holds up a lengthening line while she counts her change and glares furiously if a man puts down his nickel before she has picked up the last bit of change; the woman who never moves along in a car to make room for another woman; the woman who deliberately takes up as much time as possible at the store counter while other customers are waiting—these women commonly look like persons of refinement. No doubt they are kind-hearted and gentle-mannered in their own homes and in their own circles.

A New York woman who has had five divorces still favors matrimony. She probably finds that if one does not take it too seriously there is a lot of fun and excitement to be had from it.

A Baltimore preacher claims that Atlas, who held up the world, was a woman. If he succeeds in proving it we shall have to change the name to Atlanetta or Atlaline.

A Chicagoan eighty-three years of age has taken out a license to marry a lady seventy years old from whom he was divorced 35 years ago. They repented at leisure.

A school of music has been in operation for some time in Bangkok, Siam. Now we know where some of the vaudeville songs come from.

One of our clergymen proposes to abolish the old method of dancing. He wants girls to dance with girls, and boys to dance with boys. Piffle, as Aristotle once said.

A Philadelphia woman wants a divorce because her husband threw a clock at her. Gallant men everywhere will agree that that is no way to bring a lady to time.

A New York mother failed to recognize her boy with a clean face. With all due allowance for the water famine in the metropolis we had hardly thought it was as scarce as that.

Treasure seekers have found $15,000,000 in Honduras, according to report. If this treasure is no imposter it is made up of Spanish doubloons and pieces of eight.

A German doctor reports his discovery of a hay fever serum. He should hurry and get it on the market for the coming season.

Gunners are facing a possible closed season of two years all over the country. This ought to help materially in lowering mortality statistics.

A Connecticut schoolma'am is in trouble with her constituency because she "wears too smart clothes." Hob bis or harem?

A good many men are strong enough to resist the temptation to steal an umbrella—that is, on a sunny day.

NO FAULT WITH HIS HEARING

CLEVELAND LEADER.

"Sura, Lady, I Heerd Ye Say a Hundred Pounds!"

BRYAN IS FLAYED

UNDERWOOD IN SPEECH IN HOUSE DECLARES NEBRASKA MAN A FALSIFIER.

MET WITH WILD APPLAUSE

Charge of Delaying Iron and Steel Tariff Revision by Committee is Cause of Vitriolic Attack by Democratic Leader.

Washington.—In one of the most remarkable scenes in the house since the beginning of the extra session Representative Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama, the Democratic leader of the house, fired a verbal broadside at William Jennings Bryan for the latter's criticism of his position on the extension of the tariff revision program. Mr. Underwood's Democratic colleagues wildly cheered him as he made his vitriolic attack upon the Nebraskan.

Executing the three times candidate of the Democratic party for presidential honors, Leader Underwood denounced Mr. Bryan's statements as false, defended his (Underwood's) attitude as to revision of the iron and steel tariff schedules, and said Bryan has placed upon every Democratic member implications unfounded in fact.

He called on his colleagues of the ways and means committee for corroboration of his attitude.

Mr. Underwood was backed up in a similarly scathing speech by Representative Kitchin of North Carolina, long a devoted friend of Bryan. Mr. Kitchin expressed surprise that any Democrat should so malign Mr. Underwood and the party, and through all this arraignment not a voice was raised in defense of Bryan.

It all came about from a published interview, which purported to be "authorized" by Mr. Bryan, declaring it was time Democratic Leader Underwood was "unmasked."

The action of Chairman Underwood in expediting an immediate effort to reduce the iron and steel schedule reveals the reel Underwood," said the Bryan interview. "Speaker Clark and other tariff reformers tried to secure the passage of a resolution instructing the ways and means committee to take up other schedules, including the iron and steel schedule, but Underwood and Fitzgerald, the Fitzgerald who saved Cannon in the last congress, succeeded in defeating the resolution."

"The unmasking of Chairman Underwood will serve a useful purpose," added the interview, "if it arouses the Democrats to an understanding of the mistake made in putting Mr. Underwood at the head of the committee, if he solidifies his policy of delay."

As the clerk finished reading the Bryan interview, Mr. Underwood, in calm and even tones, opened the vials of his wrath. He declared that because of his investments of the iron and steel mills in his own state, Alabama, he had urged the ways and means committee at the beginning of the session to save him embarrassment by taking up the iron and steel schedule at once. This had not been done by the committee, he said, because it had determined that the textile schedules should be revised first to satisfy public clamor.

TWO SHERWICKSHAMS APPEAR BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

Alaskan Delegate Renews His Allegation That Attorney General Shielded Criminals.

Washington. — Attorney General Wickersham and Alaskan Delegate Wickersham faced each other before the house committee on judiciary which is making an investigation into government affairs in the northwest and charges of "graft" and "bribery" were bandied with much freedom by the delegate during the hearing.

The question of the insufficiency of what the delegate declared was proof that the attorney general "purposely shielded and defended Alaska syndicate criminals against punishment" arose.

Representative Sterling suggested that Delegate Wickersham's charges indicated only failure of the department of justice to prosecute.

"Oh, he has gone way beyond that," interrupted Attorney General Wickersham.

"Yes," said Delegate Wickersham, "I insist there was a deliberate attempt to protect."

The delegate declared that United States Marshal H. K. Love, who figured in the Cunningham coal land cases, had discharged a deputy named Bowers, who was also jailer at Kodiak, because he "wouldn't give up the graft."

"He wouldn't pay Love $100 a month out of what he received for the board of prisoners," the delegate explained.

Delegate Wickersham, a Republican, reviewed his attempts to have the department of justice move against D. H. Jarvis of the Alaska syndicate and J. H. Bullock of the John J. Sensor company for alleged conspiracy on government coal entries whereby he alleges the government lost $50,000.

The delegate charged that federal officials in Alaska had been bribed.

Representative Howland of Ohio demanded that he prove that statement.

"I will before I finish," declared the delegate.

SHIP UPSETS; SEVEN DROWN

Ferry Steamer Capsizes in St. Lawrence River—Seventy-five Passengers Are Hurled into Water.

Massena, N. Y.—Seven persons were drowned in the St. Lawrence river when the ferry steamer Sirus capsized, a shoal eight miles below this city, capsized and hurled its 75 passengers into the river.

Four bodies were recovered.

The Sirus left here for Cornwall on the Canadian side, with 75 persons bound for a day's outing there. Most of those aboard were residents of Ogdensburg and Massena. The boat had started on the return trip and her passengers were seated on deck when the crash came. The deck was swept bare in a moment.

Picknickers at the international park nearby, in motor boats and skiffs rushed to the rescue and saved scores. Others, benumbed and exhausted, were swept down-stream to death.

MOROCCAN CRISIS NEAR END

Britons Believe Germany, Having Made Her Bluff, Is Now Preparing to Withdraw.

London.—The Moroccan crisis is practically ended. At least this is the opinion of the English public, although the foreign office is careful to point out that the negotiations are not simple and may drag on for months.

German opinion, according to the English view, has made a bluff, which is being promptly called, and she is now preparing to withdraw.

NATIONS FOR PEACE

ARBITRATION TREATIES ARE SIGNED BY UNITED STATES, FRANCE AND BRITAIN.

PRESIDENT TAFT IS VICTOR

Compacts Result From Suggestion of United States Chief Executive Made in Speech Made in Washington Last December.

Washington.—Three of the great world powers have taken a long stride toward the goal of universal peace. Arbitration treaties binding the United States and Great Britain and France, respectively, were signed at the White House in Washington in the presence of a notable gathering of officials and of the ministry of foreign affairs in Paris.

Secretary of State Knox signed the two treaties in behalf of the United States. James Bryce, the British ambassador, affixed his signature in behalf of Great Britain, thus completing the Anglo-American pact, with the exception of ratification by the senate. The French treaty was signed in duplicate in Paris six hours earlier by J. J. Jusserand, ambassador to the United States.

As soon as the copies of the two treaties had been signed President Taft affixed his signature to two measures for transmittal to the senate.

It was thought at first that an exchange on the Franco-American treaty would be necessary before it could be sent to the senate. Later on official notification from Paris of the signature there, President Taft decided to rush the treaties at once to the senate in the hope of securing action at this session.

The general features of the new treaties are:

All differences internationally justiciable shall be submitted to The Hague tribunal by special agreement some other tribunal is created or selected.

Differences that either country thinks are not justiciable shall be referred to a commission of inquiry composed of members of the two governments empowered to make recommendations for their settlement. Should both governments decide that the question should be arbitrated, such decision will be binding.

The treaties are to be ratified, and, even in cases where both countries agree that the differences is susceptible of arbitration, the commission of inquiry shall investigate the dispute with a view of recommending a settlement without arbitration.

The commission, at request of either government, will delay its findings one year to give an opportunity for diplomatic settlement.

The agreements grew directly out of President Taft's speech in Washington, December 16 last, before the American Society for the Judicial Settlement of International disputes, in which he said:

"What we can negotiate and put through a positive agreement with some great nation to abide the advisory decision of an impartial arbitral court in every issue which cannot be settled by negotiation, no matter what it involves, whether honor, territory, or money, we shall have made a long step forward by demonstrating that it is possible for two nations at least to establish, as between them, the same system of due process of law that exists between individuals under a government."

PASS LARGER HOUSE BILL

Senate Adopts Measure Raising Membership in Lower Branch of Congress From 391 to 433.

Washington.—The congressional reapportionment bill passed the senate by an undivided vote, but the measure, as it came from the house, was so amended as to safeguard against gerrymandering of congressional districts by the state.

The measure gives the house 433 members, an increase of 42 over the present representation. This does not include the new members which will be sent from Arizona and New Mexico.

The bill will go immediately to the house, where it originated, and, it is believed, will be accepted in its present form and sent to the president. No state loses, and many gain, in the number of representatives.

The measure will become effective in less than two years. Its passage is largely assured by a sentiment of concession to the house of the right to regulate its own organization affairs.

The Democratic cotton bill cutting an average of 21 per cent. from the present duty passed the house, all the Democrats regarding whose illness no little was made public that it was not until a day or two ago that it was known that his condition was serious, underwent an operation for liver trouble about a month ago. It is now stated that he appeared to be recovering, when a few days ago he suffered a relapse, after which he slowly sank.

WHITE TELLS OF BRIBE

TELLS HOW HE MADE $1,000 BY LORIMER VOTE.

Throws Interesting Light on Legislative Life, Including Receipt of Railroad Passes.

Washington. —Charles A. White, former member of the Illinois legislature, told in detail before the senate investigating committee the story of the alleged corruption in connection with the election of Senator William Lorimer.

Attorney Marble, counsel for the committee, led White to tell his story in narrative form, taking all events in their chronological order.

White received Pullmen passes. Transportation could be exchanged among members, and destinations on Pullmen passes could be altered to suit the convenience of the holders.

Then the committee took up the actual confession. White said that on the night of the twenty-fourth, 1909, Lee O'Neill Browne, Democratic leader, first asked him to vote for Lorimer.

"Browna gave me $100 about the time the legislature adjourned, a few days later. I saw Browne on June 16, at the Briggs house, in Chicago. He gave me $50 that night, and told me to call again the next day. I did so, and he gave me $850, making $1,000 in all. He wore a belt, in which he was carrying about $20,000."

White said he met Wilson, and Representatives Clark, Shepard, Luke and Link at the hotel. Luke was complaining about the amount of money he had received," said White. "He said he only got $900, and he could have had $1,500 earlier in the session. "I told Luke I hadn't been paid to vote for Lorimer. He said, 'Oh, yes you were. You got $1,000—same as the rest of us.'

"I asked him if he had been given Lorimer money. He said he had—that he had made his deal direct with Lorimer.

"We went up to Wilson's room in the hotel. Shepard went into the bathroom with Wilson. When he came out, Wilson called me into the bathroom, and gave me $900. 'There's all of it,' he said, 'and I'm glad to be relieved of the burden.'

"He said that the governor had vetoed some of the bills for which money was to have been distributed. Then he said that Browne was sick, and that was the reason why he (Wilson) had to come downtown to distribute the money."

White said that he met Representative Shepard in the senate chamber that day. Beckemeyer later confessed to taking bribe money.

FARMERS' BILL IS PASSED

Free List Measure in Modified Form is Adopted by the Senate.

Washington.—By a vote of 48 to 30 the senate by a coalition of Democrats and Republican insurgents of that body passed a compromise farmers' free list bill, which removed the tariff from a large category of agricultural implements and farm operating materials when imported from Canada.

The original house bill first was defeated and then reoffered in modified form by Senator Kern of Indiana.

As amended and finally adopted the bill differed but little from the original. The principal articles on the free list are: Agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, barbed wire and fence wire, fence posts, cream separators, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt.

LUNATICS BURNED TO DEATH

Eight Die in Asylum Fire at Hamilton, Ont.—Many Knocked Senseless and Saved.

Hamilton, Ont.—The loss of eight lives and desperate struggles with maniacs who fought against rescue attended a fire which destroyed one of the main buildings of the insane asylum on the side of the mountain southwest of the city.

There were 800 patients in the building when the fire was discovered and only a well-trained fire-fighting corps and admirable coolness and bravery on the part of the nurses and attendants under Doctor English prevented a greater loss of life.

PIMPLES COVERED HIS BACK

"My troubles began along in the summar in the hottest weather and took the form of small eruptions and itching and a kind of smarting pain. It took me mostly all over my back and kept getting worse until finally my back was covered with a mass of pimples which would burn and itch at night so that I could hardly stand it. This condition kept getting worse and worse until my back was a solid mass of big sores which would break open and run. My underclothing would be a clot of blood.

"I tried various remedies and salves for nearly three years and I was not getting any benefit. It seemed I was in eternal misery and could not sleep on my back or lean on a chair. I was finally given a set of the Cuticura Remedies and inside of two weeks I could see and feel a great relief. I kept on using Cuticura Soap, Ointment and also the Resolvent, and in about three or four months' time my back was nearly cured and I felt like a new being. Now I am in good health and no sign of any skin diseases and I am fully satisfied that Cuticura Remedies are the best ever made for skin diseases. I would not be without them." (Signed) W. Al Armstrong, Corbin, Ken., May 26, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. F, K, Boston.

Distinctly Original.

At last been discovered that if a disease being dies after an ordinary illness, without previous death, he does not die altogether, and at once. He may have developed liver, heart or lung, and this may be the cause of his death; but it has been found that if the diseased organ could have been replaced by a healthy one life might have been maintained indefinitely. This is no imagination or speculation. It has been confirmed by the most careful experiments by the most celebrated scientists in the country.—Leslie's Weekly.

TWO RAINY DAYS

By MOLLY McMASTER

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

A fine mist had blown in from the ocean. Robert Vale turned up his coat collar, but continued along the board walk. The mist grew into rain and some of the drops trickled down Vale's neck. He was opposite the twenty-five cent theater which presented an hysterical display of yellow and black posters announcing the nightly performance of the Gay Deceivers, when the rain began.

Even a cheap, sea-side music hall was preferable to raindrops. Vale purchased a ticket and made his way to the third row of seats.

Should the long line of ancestors from whence Vale had inherited his aristocratic bearing—and a few millions—witness his entrance to the small theater they would no doubt wish they had held back at least the millions.

In spite of lineage, gold and himself, Vale drew a breath of surprised interest when the curtain went up. The stage pictured a gipsy encampment, rich and warm with the colors of the woods.

On the steps of the open cavern two of the tribe were sleying a love duet; a third lolled against a tree strumming his musical instrument while a fourth lay propped by her elbow in the glow of the camp fire.

It was upon the latter's face that Robert Vale's interest became riveted; her wide gray eyes seemed to hold all the shadows in the world, but her lips smiled—smiled with uncertain bravery.

"By Jove!" muttered Vale, "what a beauty! And those weird two sights looming into shallow eyes when I could have looked at those fathomless ones. Wonder what her name is? Nadine." Vale had taken his eyes from the girl long enough to glance at his program.

The big gipsy lolling against the tree had burst into song. Vale realized that the voice was good, but he wished the applause would cease. Nadine's name was next on the program.

She neither moved from her position by the fire nor made a gesture to step out of her reverie when she began to sing. Her voice was of the low timbre to which the heart instantly responds—a voice not fully developed nor yet quite finished. The plaintive gipsy love song lost none her audience tense.

Robert Vale had often felt the sorcery in women's eyes or been bewitched by a roguish smile, but this sense of complete thraldom to a music hall singer's charm was quite a new experience. He tried to throw off the fascination and turned his eyes toward the other gipsy, but it was of no use; Nadine's personality held away.

Much to his own amusement he resented the audience; he felt that he would like Nadine to be singing to him alone.

Vale walked home after the theater trying to tell himself that the girl was a music hall artist in a twenty-five-cent theater; that she was no doubt the wife of one of the gipsies and that she probably wore dreadful willow plumes on the street.

Notwithstanding these conjectures he went every night following while the Gay Deceivers played, which was something less than a fortnight.

Against his better judgment Vale attempted to write a note to Nadine asking for a meeting. He hoped or became distillusioned, but something stayed his pen and the gipsies journeyed on.

Later, during the winter, Vale realized that the very nature of his regard had prevented his approaching her in the usual way. However, he knew that she had been conscious of his presence and on the last night Nadine had worn a cluster of his roses.

During the winter Vale went to every variety theater in New York with the hope that he would again see the girl who haunted his thoughts.

One day in early spring Vale started out for his Sunday morning walk. As he neared Forty-second street a fine rain began to fall.

Rather than return to his apartments Vale decided to go up the two blocks and attend service at a Fifth avenue church.

He took a seat near the back of the church. The only other occupant of the pew was a little old lady who, during the service, fumbled first with her chaine and then with her rings until finally one of the latter rolled to the floor.

Vale stooped to look for it.

"It has escaped my reach," he whispered to her. "I will get it after service."

During the offertory anthem a rich contralto voice flonted out over the big church.

Vale started. The voice was familiar yet not familiar; it held the same intense timbre as the voice of Nadine, but these tones came forth with the control of a master.

"From music hall to soloist in one of the best churches in the city is a big jump," thought Vale, "besides, it takes money to study for this kind of work."

He strained his eyes to get a glimpse of the singer, but it was no use. The rows of girls on each side of the chancel seemed to be identical, one with the other.

During the remainder of the service Robert Vale was back at the sea-side and dreaming of a girl who had sung in the gulas of a gipsy.

When the church was emptying he remembered the little old lady's companion in the pew. He must search for her ring.

In the semi-darkness of the church it was not an easy task and Vale was down on his hands and knees in a far corner of the church when he heard a musical voice.

"Granny—what in the world are you doing in this dark church—I thought you were lost!"

"I dropped my ring. This gentleman—"

Vale's head bobbed up from behind a seat, flushed but victorious.

"Oh—hi!" Diana Vails started; then, upon searching the man's face from beneath her wide drooping hat, a swift color mounted her cheeks.

"My name is Robert Vale," he said quickly to cover the confusion which he knew was hers. He could never mistake those fathomless gray eyes, though them seemed given more dark and mysterious. He supposed it was the difarrant setting. Her hair was deep black and the gipsy's had been inky black. "Here is your ring," he turned toward the little old woman.

"Thank you," she said simply. "My name is Wells. This is my grandaughter, Diana." she looked lovingly at the girl. "Diana traveled all last summer with a variety company so she could take her old granny to the seaside."

Diana met Vale's eyes with a smile. "Granny thinks I am a wonder because I took her to all the seaside resorts and gave myself equal pleasure."

"Not to speak of those who heard you," put in Vale with a half inquiring glance.

"You know me then?"

She hid from the expression in his eyes. "The roses were lovely," she said finally. "I asked the usher who had sent them."

They turned and went slowly out of the church, but before they passed out through the big bronze doors Vale drew near Diana Wells.

"If one of the choristers should be married in the church what would they do about filling her piece for the wedding chorus?"

"They would have to get a substitute soprano," said Diana Wells.

"It would be a contralto in this case," confided Vale.

Reading for the Sick.

"And now a word about patients who may feel like reading," said the house physician to the nurse. "When they ask for something to read be sure to give them continued stories—always continued stories."

"Is that wise?" she ventured to remonstrate. "Won't the excitement over what is going to happen in the next number have a bad effect?"

"No. Even if it does, it will be counteracted by the encouragement she feels she will get from the doctor. One of the queerest pertales to literature. Feed a patient's mind with nothing but short stories and he will certainly get into his head that he is going to die so soon that it isn't worth while to start him on a long one, and he will droop accordingly, but give him only yarns of the to be continued-in-our-next variety and he will take it for granted that you expect him to get well so he does and the story, and he will perk up amazingly. Just try it."

The nurse did try it, and found that the doctor's theory was built on a sure foundation.

DEDICATE CREAMERY

GOV. EBERHART FORMALLY OPENS FIRST STATE CREAMERY AT ALBERT LEA.

GAVE APPROVAL OF UNDERTAKING

Plant Under Supervision of the Dairy and Food Commission—Bottle of Buttermilk Broken to Christen Institution.

Albert Lea.—Governor Eberhart took oil hearts before him here in his address at the dedication and christening of the creamery recently purchased by the state and now under the control of the dairy and food commissioner. His address kept the 5,000 people present of the best attention and his was frequently interrupted by applause. Speaker Dean presided and after a brief prayer of praise and thanksgiving by Rev. G. H. Gueller, F. S. Ruhle, president of the retiring creamery board, handed a huge floral key to the governor, thus turning over the creamery to the state, and Miss Mebel Dunn, daughter of Speaker Dunn, broke a ribbon bedecked bottle of buttermilk on ons corner of the creamery building and dedicated it to the dairy interests of tha community and formally christened it The Albert Lea State Creamery.

Governor Eberhart wes then introduced and ha was given a cordial reception. He spoke of the great work the meeting honored and gava his approval of the work to be undertaken. He spoke of the importence of the dairy industry of the state, and declared Freeborn county as the one logical place for an institution soiely devoted to furthering thet interest.

Ha said Freeborn county last year produced over $1,200,000 worth of butter, and better results might yet be attained when the best possible work was done. Tha governor stated ha did not expect this start would prove the end of the work to be undertaken here and the future would see a greatened and extended work along the lines of developing proportions calculated to make mora practical the work on the farm, reducing labor where possible, and increasing incomes as well.

'Promoters Praised.

He pald a tribute to Speaker Dunn, Representative Henlon and Senator Anderson, of this county, for their excellent work in behalf of the measura.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Winkjer was then introduced and gave a brief an outlina of tha work he proposed to carry on.

Immigration Commissioner Walsh was tha next speaker, and he gave a stirriog speech on immigretion.

How Creamery Will be Run.

The state will operate its new creamery in just the same manner that it was operated when it was the property of a co-operative association of farmers. It will, however, maintain a department work in connection with the regular work of the creamery.

James Sorenson, for many years an inspector in the Delry and Food departmeot, is to ha manager of the creamery.

The milk and cream will be purchased from the farmers, manufactured into butter and will be sold to the ordinery butter buyers through regular channels. From the receipts of the butter sales will first be subtracted the accessory expenses, including supplies, labor, coal, ice, etc. After all the expenses have been peid then a certain per cent of the profit will go into a sinking or replacement fund. From this fund the machinery will be replaced when it is worn out and necessary improvements will be made from time to time. If there is any profit left after this replacement fund has been taken care of, it will be distributed among the farmers who bring in the milk and cream as set forth under the oil co-operetive agreement.

At present all of the creamerice in the state make regular reports to and are beeiess to the dairy and food department. These reports will hereafter ba forwarded to Manager Sorenson at the creamery, who will meka the necessary criticisms and give the advice needed. Mr. Sorenson will have a stenographer in ble employ so that these reports can be handled as soon as they are received. It will be in a position to answer all questions regarding the butter making and the propar menagement of the creamery.

The state wil carry on all of its butter making experiments at the Albert Lea creamery. A chemist will soon be added to the force and be will take charga of the experithencal work at the creamery.

The creamery which is now the property of the state was purchased and equipped at an expense to the stata of $12,500. The last legislature appropriated $20,000 for the purchase of the creamery and for its maintenance up through July, 1913.

STATE LOANS OVER $100,000.

School Districts of Minnesota Draw Large Sum.

St. Paul.—Announcement that the State Board of Investment had loaned $114,560 to various school districts of the state was made by State Treasurer Smith.

Applications of these districts for the loans were approved by the board some time ago, but payment was delayed until the new fiscal year. All were made out of the permanent school fund.

QUAKER ELEVATOR IS BURNED.

Flames Practically Destroy East Side Plant.

Minneapolis.—The Quaker Elevator was practically destroyed by fire, entailing an estimated loss of $10,000. The fire started on the first floor of the factory frame structure and had gained such headway by the time the firemen arrived that there was no chance of saving the building.

Lines of hose had to be strung from the nearest hydrent, more than 1,500 feet away. The railroad tracks also hampered the firemen, who found it nearly impossible to reach the scene of the fire with their apparatus.

There was practically no grain in the warehouse at the time. It has been used for some time by various elevator companies as a "mixing house," as a steel tank near the elevator proper, was partially destroyed, but the damage was net benvy, es it was nearly empty.

The loss is covered by insurance.

MEDICAL ASSOCIATIONS MERGE.

Southern Minnesota and Valley Organizations Are United.

Rochester.—As a result of the meeting of the Southern Minnesota and the Minnesota Valley Medical Association, here. One the features of the gathering was the maandr of Dr. W. Mayo, who passed away recently in this city, giv- ing Dr. Chas. Mill, of Pine Island, a former partner with Dr. Meyo in St. Paul in the 70's. Toples germans to the medical profession were discussed. Dr. A. F. Kilbourne, superintendent of the state hospital, entertained the members at 6 o'clock dinner.

BLACK RUST RAVAGES FIELDS.

Losses Are Reported by Many Farmers Near Fergus Falls.

Fergus Falls.—As tha harvest progresses it becomes more and more evident that black rust has done damage throughout this section of the state.

Reports from many fields have it that the stems of many varieties of wheat, especially of fifteen to twenty bushels per acre, but which will not be worth cutting on account of the rust. The stems have died and look as though hot water had been poured over them, and they are liberelly sprinkled with black specks which seem to have seeped their vitality. Even the grain fields have withstood the rust better than others.

Winstar rye was harvested and is a big crop. Corn promises a heavy yield and it is thought that there will be a fair crop of potatoes, now that there has been a seeking rain.

TO HELP LAND SHOW.

St. Louis County Enthusiastic After Visit of St. Paul Men.

Duluth.—St. Louis county and neighboring counties will be well represented at the St. Paul land show next December.

Thos. Beck, C. L. Klokbohn and C. P. Bull and George Welch, members of the committee appointed by Governor Eberhart to arrange the state exhibit, came up from St. Paul and spent the day here with prominent Duluthians in connection with the show.

Tentative arrangements have been made for the mineral display from this county, and it will be installed there. There is widespread enthusiasm in St. Louis county in matters agricultural and the land show will be well represented.

TWO ARE HELD FOR SWINDLING.

Police Put Quietus on an Alleged Graft With the Cards.

St. Paul.—Charged with swindling, George Vohleh and Joe Arpch, Austriane, were arrested by Patrolmen Hoffman and Cummings, assigned to central police station. It is alleged that Vohlch and Arpch have been working among the country people on a card swindle among their country men. Yesterday they met Matt Stanek and induced him to show an interest ed him in their game. They were successful in getting $10 from their victim, it is said, before the policemen interrupted their operations.

PLAN TO OUTWIT BANK ROBBERS

Meeting of Bankers' Association of ficials Talk on Protection.

Minneapolis, Minn. — According to Charles R. Frost, secretary of the Minnesota Bankers' Association, yeggmen and other desparadoes who contemplate bank robberies in Minnesota better giva tha state a wide berth. The slim crop and the reduced demand for harvest hands make tha danger from bank robbers greater.

Bankers from Minnesota and the Dakotas met in Minneapolis in the office of Mr. Frost. Tha purpose of meeting at this time is to lay plans for the protection of banks in the smaller towns, where polles protection is poor and vevult provisions not as good as in the larger places. The association metatoins a staff of detectives that keeps a sharp lookout at all times for the appearance in this part of the country of any men known to have bad records.

At this time of year there is usually a movement of thugs from tha South west to the Northwest states and the association reports show that the movement this year is early and large. In spealking of the general situation, Mr. Frost said tha banks in Minnesota and North Dakota are in excellent condition and will probably be much better off than they were last year. In South Dekota the crop feilure will naturally be reflected to some extent in the curtailment of loans and a lessening of other activities of the banks.

OTHER CITIES AFTER MILL.

Eastern Stockholders to Decide New Bay State Plant's Site.

Winona.—No decision has yet been made by the Bay State Milling company as to rebuilding in Winona its flour mill destroyed by firs. Prominent cities have favorably located are urging the company to change its location, and while the resident menagement is desirous of retaining this industry here, the final decision rests with Eastern stockholders. If the mill is rebuilt it will be a modern, fire-proof structure, with a capacity of 4,500 barrels of flour daily. Negotiations are already under way for the leasing of a large Minnesota flouring mill, having machinery equipment similar to that of the former mill here, and the milling staff will be temporarily, transferred to that plant.

RACES TRAIN ACROSS BRIDGE.

Owatonna Man Is Caught and Dies of His Injuries.

Owatonna.—Petrick Derrington, 65 years old, was struck by an eastbound North Western train and so severely injured that he died within a half hour.

Derrington was walking from his home on the West side across the North Western railway bridge which spans Straight river just within the city limits.

It is believed he heard the approaching train just before it struck him, but was so excited that instead of stepping to one side of the track as he might have done and so escaped death, he started to run to the other side of the bridge but was overtaken hythe train. Derrington is survived by a widow and several children.

NO EPIDEMICS IN MINNESOTA.

Decrease in Typhoid and Infantile Paralysis From Last Year

Minnesota is singularly free from epidemics of any kind this summer, while the prevelence of two diseases especially dreaded, typhoid and infantile paralysis, is much less this year then last, according to Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the State Board of Health.

"I don't know how to account for it, unless it is due to the fact that this year is not so exceedingly dry as last," he said. "Dry weather is especially conducive to direct infection of typhoid, as well as the fly theory, and the same is true with regard to infantile paralysis."

Naval Militia On Cruise.

Duluth.—Because of the objections of Canada that the treaty between the two countries is violated by naval militia maneuvers on the Great Lakes no warships will be held this year. The Gopher, the ship of the Minnesota naval militia, left for her annual cruise, going to Chicago to attend the opening of the naw naval training station on Lake Michigan. The Gopher will take about 150 men on the cruise, which will last about two weeks.

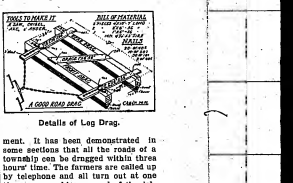
Range Man Slain.

Duluth.— J. A. Crowe of Virginia, Crowe of Virginia, deputy coroner, and Sheriff Hall, of Eveleth, are on the remains of John Bocovich, whose body was found in the lake near that city yesterday. It is said there was no water in the lungs, indicating that Bocovich was dead before being put in the lake.

Prisoner Fails to Escape.

Winona.—Joseph Baker's attempt to escape from the authorities who were bringing him to Winona from Alture in an automobile nearly cost him his life, with the machine traveling thirty-five miles an hour he leaped over the side, but at the same instant two men in the seat with him seized the tail of his coat, with the result that the prisoner was dragged over the road, and was once run over by the car. Baker, it is alleged, was caught in the act of looting the money drawer in the Nelson hotel.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT



LOG DRAG IS VERY USEFUL

Greatest Invention of the Age and Has Great Value in Its Power to Move Dirt on Roads.

The log drag, simple as it is, is the greatest invention of the age, counting the amount of good that can be done with it at so small a cost. Probably the next best tool to the drag for dirt roads is the common field harrow.

The great value of the road drag, especially the one with a cutting blade, is in its power of moving dirt and grading as well as surfacing and compacting the road. Either with dry dirt or with mud, two teams to a good drag can push more dirt to the center or a road than can possibly be done with any other tool. When once graded a perfect road grade can easily be maintained with the use of the drag.

Keeping country earth roads in good shape with native material at hand can be done with little time and expense with proper active public sentiment. It has been demonstrated in some sections that all the roads of a township can be dragged within three hours' time. The farmers are called up by telephone and all turn out at one time, soon making an end of the job.

There are now hundreds of communities where all of the farmers turn out en masse to harrow and drag the roads without any direct money compensation. In some places they are allowed 50 cents a mile for the work. It is easy to stimulate active interest in the good roads cause in almost any rural community. When the people once become interested in the work and have seen actual results, community organization is found and good roads are always the result.

COLLIE PUP IS VERY USEFUL

Full-Blooded Scotch Canine Does Most of Small Chores on Ohio Man—Afraid of Thunder.

A full-blooded Scotch collia puppie belonging to C. M. Everingham of Ohio does most of the small chores about the place. It carries in the stove wood, ona stick at a time, carries the milk pails to the stebia and the slop buckets back to the house after they hava been emptied. Ha carries a small dinner bucketful of water to his master when working at the far end of the farm. He saves many steps by carrying notes from the house to the field and bringing back the field replies. He never fails to deliver any object given to him to the person named as the one to receive it. He meets the mail carrier with letters to mail and receives the mail for his master, and is afraid of nothing but a thunder storm.

A Very Useful Pet.

INCREASE OF HEMP CULTURE

All Fiber Produced in This Country Is Used in American Mills—Good Market for More.

The blue grass regions of Kentucky, in the center of which the Lexington, raises about twenty thousand acres of flax from which hemp is procured.

The acreage, devoted to hemp in other parts of the United States is very small—acreage of hundred acres around Lincoln, Neb., and an equot number in the lowar Sacramento valley, California, with small experimental plantiage in Indiana, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and Arkansas.

All tha bemp fiber produced in this country is used in the American mills, and, as increasing quantities are being imported a market for a larger production is offered.

Republicans Meet.

The Anti Taft Progressive Republicans at their meeting held in Thief River Falls last Thursday August 3rd, adopted the following warm resolutions, which we think is enough for a state:

RESOLUTIONS.

As Republicans we are heartily in favor of the success of the Republican party fully realizing that in the past it has been the party of progress, and we fully agree that the many reforms that our country stand in need of today; can we think be best realized through the party which has served us so well in the past.

The progressive ideas and deeds of our former President Theadore Roosevelt we heartily commend; and it is with extreme regret that we can not extend the hearty commendations to the present administration.

If the success of the party is to continue, we are fully of the opinion that the, so called progressive element must prevail in the party councils and progressive men with processive ideas must lead next year. To this end we favor the nomination for president of some man of honor and action who will favor reforms and principals such as are now advocated by Senator Robert LaFollet, of Wisconsin and others.

For over forty years the farmers of the Northwest and of Minnesota in, particular have consistently been in favor of theprincipals of a protective tariff. They accepted as a fact that protection would build up a home market for the products of the farm, and that ultimately the farmer would come to his just reward.

Such a condition is about to be realized, and we condemn as un just and unreasonable and a direct violation of faith, the Canadian Reciprocity Pact which the present administration has just forced by the use of patronage, the aid of Democrats and other unjust and unlawful means; through our congress.

We are fully of the opinion that if protection is good for the eastern manufactur is equall as good for the Western farmer, and we again reassert that the Canadian Reciprocity Pact is a unfair, unjust discrimination against the American farmer and in favor of the trust protected manufacturer.

The firm stand taken by our United States Senators Honorable Knut Nelson and Hon. Moses. Clapp and by our Representative in Congress, Hon. Halvor Steenerson in their fight made against the Canadian Reciprocity Pact meets with our heartiest commendation, and we respectfully ask them to continue the fight that in the end the trust protected manufacturer receive no more protection than does the American farmer.

Respectfully submitted.

H. E. Ives
E.L. Quist
W. G. Hunt.

The permante organization elected was:

President, Andrew Trotvin.
Secretary E. L. Quist.

Members of Executive Committee.

1st Dist. W. G. Hunt,
2nd Dis. Harry E.Ives,
3rd, Dis. Emil Ness.
4th Dist. D.Patterson,
5th, Dist. Peter Hedeen.

The meeting ajourned to meet at the call of the executive committee.

The few Taft suckers are now making the claim that Canada will not pass the Reciprocity measure, but you may be sure they will not refuse this magnificent present stolen from the North western American farmer by his "wife" Taft, and presented to them, but the farmers are crying "stop thief," and they will stop him. No Taft delegates will go from Pennington county, and the man that would indorse him should not be elected for an overseer of a pig sty.

Signaling at Sea.

The custom of signalling at sea by means of various colored discs is very ancient, and the method seems to have been brought to a degree of development bordering very closely on perfection. Many people have been astonished at the length of messages conveyed in a few moments and with the use of but half a dozen flags in various combinations, and when the extent of the language and the complexity of many necessary messages are considered the eighteen flags in the signal flag locker seem very inadequate. However, it must be remembered that the signal code utilizes a sort of shorthand, and that long messages, known to be of frequent occurrence, have been contracted to a single showing of flags in a given combination. The number of flags hoisted when a signal is made never exceeds four. With the eighteen flags of various colors, using four for each signal, no fewer than 78,642 combinations can be made.

An English Ghost.

A Westmoreland ghost used to haunt the shores of Windermere, where the Lowthers from time immemorial have been lords of the lake—the "ceiter of Cinife." Om tempestuous night in preceforemation times a cry was heard across the water by the ferry man at the Nah inn—"A boat!" The ferryman, against all his cronies' persuasions at the inn, set out. After many hours he reached the Nah again. His boat dragged down by some unseen weight and himself with hair on end, a raving lunatic. Soon he died. And every stormy night his wraith was heard in spectral shrieks across from Cinife till at last the resident monk of Furness was sought in his retreat on Lady Holm and persuaded to "lay" the unhappy spirit, which he duly did Harriet Martineau and others tell the tale.—London Chronicle.

Woe Is His.

First.—My wife is my boss. I shall not deny.

Second.—She maketh me to lie down behind the bed when swell company comes, and she leadeth me behind her on high street.

Third.—She restoreth my pocketbook after she has spent all of its contents for stylish skirts and theater tickets, and she leadeth me up the main aisle at church for her new hat's sake.

Fourth.—Yea, though I walk more than half the night through dark rooms with a crying baby I will get no rest for she is behind me; her broomstick and her banjoin they do everything else but comfort me.

Fifth.—She prepareth a cold snack for me, then maketh a hee line for an old society supper. She maketh my head with the rolling pin occasionally. My arms runneth over with the bundles before she is half done with her shopping.

Sixth.—Surely her dressmaker's and milliner's bills shall follow me all the days of her life, and I will dwell in the house of my wife forever.—Urich (Mo.) Herald.

In the Long Ago.

"Adam," asked Eve, "what are you doing?"

"I'm discovering Mars," he said, looking down at her to rest his neck. "I wonder if it has any inhabitants?"

From which we learn that Adam already knew about as much concerning stars as the modern astronomers do.—Chicago Tribune.

The Effects.

"I have come to you, my friend, for comfort. My best girl has treated me very badly. I was trying to explain something to her, but she gave me such sharp looks they cut me to the heart; she withered me with her scorn, crushed me with her coldness and slashed me with her keen edged tongue."

"See here, man, you oughtn't to come to me for comfort. What you need is to go to a hospital for treatment."—Baltimore American.

A Little Ambiguous.

The Ingrahams were entertaining two friends at dinner. After Mr. Ingraham had helped them to roast beef he happened to glance at the other end of the table, where his wife was, and discerned, to his horror, that the sugar bowl was the old one, with both handles broken off, that usually graced the dining table on wash days.

In vain he endeavored by mysterious nods and winks to direct Mrs. Ingraham's attention to it. She either did not see or would not see the mutilated piece of queensware, and his patience gave way at last.

"Cornelia," he said, with some sharpness, "do you think we ought to use the sugar bowl?"

CLOTH IN THE MAKING.

The Way the Uncouth Product of the Loom Is Finished.

Every woven fabric is made by crossing or interlacing two distinct series of threads together. When the yarns comes from the spinner it is mounted upon the loom in spools, writes Rupert Bowers in Harper's Weekly. So wonderfully automatic are these modern looms that when a bobbin is emptied it is forced out and a full spool is put in its place without stopping the loom. There are all classes of looms for all classes of useful, from the thinnest fabrics up to the thickest felts. To attempt to describe one of them or the principles on which they are constructed would involve the reader in a wilderness of technicalities. The power loom is one of the most remarkable and complex of mechanical products, the growth of many years of experience and ingenuity and the crystallization of the inventive genius of many minds.

The cloth in the shop window resembles the cloth as it comes from the loom so remotely that there would seem to be no relationship between them. The first product of the loom is usually uncouth, harsh and anything but inviting in appearance. It has to pass through many processes before it is finished and made ready for the market. It is first mended so as to correct weaving faults as far as possible. Then it is scoured and thoroughly cleansed. Again it is looked over and mended before it passes to the fulling or milling machine which, with soap and fullers earth, produces the finish that is required. Then it is scoured again.

Tentering is the next process. This sets the cloth at a satisfactory width and straightens it for the operations that follow, the first of which is called raising. The millions of tiny hooks on the gigging machine raise up the fibers on the surface of the cloth and leave them in an upright position. The pile or nap is the result. This produces a remarkable change in the appearance and condition of the fabric. Shearing is the next thing. This cuts off all the raised fibers, leaving them of a uniform length. The required gloss and solidity are obtained by the pressing which follows.

A JOLLY TIME AT HOME.

Advice to the Man Whose Wife Is Away on a Vacation.

During any time when your wife is on an extended visit with her relatives you can save money from your board allowance by keeping house yourself. You may find the following suggestions helpful:

If you forget to order ice you can render the butter serviceable in the following manner: Take a cut glass finger bowl and fill it with cool water. Scrape the butter into the finger bowl. When ready to spread your bread extract your butter in quantities as needed with the cucumber lifter. That's that flat silver spoon with holes in it.

If you marvel smoke you will doubtless find the lamp is smoking and the room is covered with soot. First turn the wick down to save oil, then get a damp cloth and go over everything carefully, rinsing out the cloth from time to time. When everything is clean use only a downward motion, so that the streaks will all run veritably.

Not having your wife's cooking to warm you will doubtless be given tough steak by your butcher. One way to make this tender is to run it repeatedly through the sewing machine. Use a coarse needle, but no thread. The tobacco brands will catch the juice, which can be used later for gravy, if you take out the bobbin first you will have more room for the juice.—Walter A. Dyer in Delineator.

A Washless Washboard.

"Women haven't the artistic temperament," complained the orchestra musician to the Cleveland Plain Dealer. "That's why I am unmarried. Oh, yes, I was married once. I thought to acquire a woman who could take care of my home, make a little domestic place of refuge for me and all that, but the dream soon died.

"A few days after I was married my bride came to me and said: 'Dear, that new washboard you got for me is no good at all. I can't wash your socks on it.'

"'Washboard!' says I. 'Why, I never bought you a washboard.' But she led me out into the kitchen and showed me what she'd been scrubbing away on all the morning. Great heavens! It was my new xylophone."

Rebuking an Emperor.

Once, so the story goes, Emperor Nicholas of Russia asked Liszt to play his fiery Hungarian rhapsody. The musician complied, but during the performance the czar started a conversation with an aide-de-camp. Liszt stopped playing at once. The czar asked what was the matter. "When the emperor speaks," said Liszt, "every one must be silent." The czar smilingly took the hint, and the playing proceeded.

Didn't Have To.

"Did you hear the ruin in the night?"
"Yes."
"Pleasant music, wasn't it?"
"I didn't notice the music. I was too busy hunting around closing the windows. Didn't it keep you busy too?"
"Oh, no! We rent a furnished house, you know."—Cleveland Plain Dealer

Her Concession.

"How do you know she's older than you are?"
"Why, she admitted it herself."
"Honestly? What did she say?"
"She said: 'Now you tell me, dear, how old you are, and I'll tell you how old I am.'"

American and German Firemen.

A Hamburg fireman had occasion, who had occasion to visit the United States some years ago returned full of admiration for the splendid way in which American fire companies mount by respond to alarms and was of the opinion that the American firemen were ready for action more promptly than those in Germany, because the individual units assembled according else to the point of leaving quarters at the quickest possible instant, to do which, the American fireman at night would slide down the pole partially clad and was indifferent as to his appearance in calling to the scene of the fire so long as he was on the spot to meet the emergency. The European fireman, on the other hand having had military training, would be hesitated to avoid the risk that would walk down the stairs, devoting a few seconds to the adjustment of his garments, and would be prepared to start only when ready to appear before the public in regulation costume.—Consular Reports.

How Cloves Are Cultivated.

Cloves are now cultivated in many tropical regions. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of ten years and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and another in December. The tree is an ever green and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to fifteen. The trees belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds are at first white, then light green and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color that proclaims them ready for shipment.—Harper's Weekly.

An Embarrassing Situation.

A young man fresh from the university, where he had excelled in athletics, found himself for ordination. The bishop, as was his custom, entertained the candidates at the palace, and after dinner the latter informed everyone party took place. At this function the young man referred to entered into conversation with an affable gentleman in clerical attire whom he found standing in leisurely fashion just without the drawing room door. "Pray that father scrumptious looking girl on the sofa?" said he. "She's my wife," replied the affable cleric, with an amused smile. The young candidate was silenced for a moment, then he stammered: "I am sure I beg your thousand pardons! I thought she was the bishop's daughter!" "So she is," was the quiet rejoinder, and Charles was the quiet rejoinder, and Charles Legend of Holyrood Palace.

Holyrood palace, Edinburgh, Scotland, former British royal residence, is the subject of a strange legend. Robert Louis Stevenson alludes to it in his little book on Edinburgh. "There is a silly story," he writes, "of a subterranean passage between the castle of Holyrood and a lord highland chief who volunteered to explore its windings. He made his entrance by the upper end, playing a stratagem. The entrance footed it after him down the street, following his descent by the sound of the chanter from below, until all of a sudden, about the level of St. Giles', the music came abruptly to an end and the people in the street stood at fault with hands uplifted. Whether he was choked with gases or perished in a qing or was removed bodily by the evil one remains a point of doubt, but the piper has never again been seen or heard of from that day to this."

Ditch Meeting Notice,

Notice is herby given. that a public meeting of the tax payers on ditch No. 47 will be held at Sunbeam on Saturday August 19th, 1911, at 8 o'clock p.m.

This meeting is called for the purpose of organizing the petitioners and tax payers to take action to to get said ditch completed during this generation.

Many of you farmers and tax payers remember how long we all hesitated before we petitioned for this ditch, owing to the harden of taxes, but the yet fall two years ago decided us to put in the ditch, and we went into it united, hopeing to get the ditch dug last fall. Then the delay started, and instead of the contract being let to parties (as we requested), it was let to contractors that don't seem to care whether the ditch is ever completed. A small floating dredge was put in at the head of the ditch last spring and they have dug about 80 roods of the light part of the ditch, so far this season,and will get about 80 rods more dug by the time snow comes. That is the situation to day. There is no more prospect for that ditch to be completed this fall than there was last fall, and as the present rate of going it would not be dug in 20 years,for if this dredge can not move foward on a four foot ditch, what can they do in some of them eleven foot cuts that are ahead of them?

This meeting is called for the purpose of "clearing the deck for action,"and includes the neighborhoods as far south as M E.Hylands, West and south to T.A.Dales, Gunder Asbjornson. Salve T. Myrum, James O'Brien John Quirk and Arne Gundersen. If you live in the neighborhood of this circle you are a tax payer on this ditch and should attend this meeting.

The Last Gladiators.

It was 10 A. D. 403 that the edict was passed which forever abolished the gladiatorial combats. In the deserts at Lybia there lived a monk named Telemachus, who, touched by the cruel scenes of the combats, went to Rome, leaped over the barrier of the arena of the Coliseum, threw himself between the groups of fighters and implored them in the name of Christ to desist. Telemachus fell, slain by the swords of the gladiators, but there never was another fight in the Coliseum. The spirit of the monk had its effect, and the abore mentioned edict was soon passed.

Early Combines and Corners.

"Regrating" was an offense punishable in England by fine and imprisonment, and the laws against it struck at those called "engrossers" who planned to gain control over necessities. Such as grain or foodstuffs in considerable quantities either by purchase or otherwise, with the intention of realizing prices. The statute took holds quite a series of punishments designed to prevent anything in the nature of what we know as a "corner" or "combine." "Regrating" was a criminal offense, and so was "forestalling." The former consisted of buying and selling the same thing in the same market overt, and the latter implied the purchase of merchandise on the way to market or before the hour at which the market commenced with the intention of selling at a profit, while it was also "forestalling" to circulate rumors calculated to raise the prices of commodities. Though these laws have fallen into desuetude, they were in force in our grandfathers' time. London Mail.

Cruikshank's Fagin.

During the time Cruikshank was illustrating "Oliver Twist" he spent days traversing the east end of London in search of a face that would correspond with his conception of the character of Fagin. One day while standing before a mirror in his dining room "pulling faces at himself," as he spoke, for the want of something better to do, he accidentally made the features for which he was looking. The picture, therefore, of Fagin is really that of Cruikshank himself.

At Last.

A well known clergyman, called to other duties, says a writer in the Western Christian Advocate, preached his last sermon before the installation of his successor. The local paper, announcing the order of services, gave it as follows:

"Sermon by the Rev. Hinck; solo and quartet, 'Hushed at Length.'"

His Wandrings.

Stranger—What wonderful tales old Bilkins relates. He must have been a great traveler in his day. Native—He was, never outside the county in his life; but, you see, he used to be a deep sea fisherman.

Force Yourself to Do Well.

"Plant your feet firmly and squarely on the ground, throw back your shoulders, fold your arms and affirm in most emphatic terms that you are strong, healthy and well. Do this for a few minutes every evening, and, even if this is not how you actually feel, similar to your physical and mental attitude that it is your condition, and you will soon find that it becomes so and that you are not really telling lies." This was the advice given by Dr. J. Stevens Hooker in a lecture on "Posturing and Posing For Health" at the simple life conference and exhibition in London. "It is wonderful to what extent our state of health can be altered in this way," Dr. Hooker added. "It sets up the currents of feeling which act on the nerves. These act on the blood vessels, and thus the whole system is improved, and we become different beings."

He Was Well Off.

H. Clay Calhoun, testifying in an assault case, spoke of one Washington White as "well off."

"Now, witness," said the cross examining lawyer, "when you declare White to be well off, what do you mean? Is he worth $10,000?"

"No, sah. Oh, no, sah," said Calhoun. "is he worth $5,000?"

"No, sah. Nah, gracious, no!"

"Is he worth $1,000?"

"No, sah; he ain't quar 17 cents."

"Then how is he well off?"

"Reckase, sah, his wife has on a No. 7 washboard and keeps de hull family in boughs style."—Exchange.

Ended Cat's Sojourn.

Felix Smith of Exeter, Pa., bought a rat the other day. He paid $5 for her. Why did Felix pay five bucks for the cat? Answer—Because she was guaranteed to be a good ratter. Did Felix have rats? I should say he did—the house was full of 'em! And the cat cleaned 'em out! No; that's the curious part of it. After the cat had been on the job a week the rats were as plentiful as ever. Felix couldn't understand it until one evening he concealed himself in the basement to watch the cat. About 9 p. m. as the cat sat with her eye on a rat hole, Felix says that the first rat came out of the hole, walked up to the old cat, kissed her good night, and then returned to the hole. After that Felix kicked the cat out of the house.—Boston Post.

Sufficient Evidence.

Having vouched for the honesty of the woman who wished a situation as scrub woman the good natured man was subjected to a severe examination by the superintendent of the building.

"You are degrees of honesty," said the superintendent. "How honest is she?"

The good natured man reflected.

"Well," said he, "I'll tell you. She is so honest that if you throw anything that looks to be worth a cop per into the waste basket you have to tag it 'Destroy this,' or she will fish it out and put it back on your desk night after night, no matter how badly you want to get rid of it. I don't know that I can say anything more."

"No more is necessary," said the superintendent, and he proceeded to hire the woman.

STRONGER THAN MEAT

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench out in the Sunflower State writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts, and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preservative of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with fine blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears up the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the powar of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequence that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

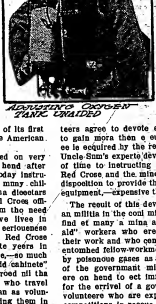
The GREAT MINE RESCUE TOURNAMENT

UNCLE SAM is going to stand sponsor this autumn for one of the most novel and most interesting competitive contests ever conducted. So far as known no other government in the world has ever conducted such a tournament and it is bound to attract attention far and wide. Moreover this unique event is all the more interesting and all the more commendable from the fact that its purpose is not merely the exploiting of athletic prowess after the fashion of the average "field day." On the contrary its aim and object is the saving of human life and the relief of suffering. It is because of its high purpose, combined with the fact that it is under government auspices, that Secretary of the Interior, and other high officials and prominent men will be present.

This leasovition which promises to win a permanent place on our calendar of public events has a rather long name. It is designated officially as a National First-Aid-to-the-Injured Field Meet, and it is to concern itself primarily with "first aid" work and relief work as conducted in coal mines where, as every reader knows, there is most urgent need for such humanitarian measures owing to the frightful disasters which occur all too frequently in our coal mines, due to explosions, fires, and cave-ins of rock and earth. This field meet will be held at a place known as Arsenal Park near Pittsburg, Pa. This site has been chosen because it will be convenient of access for the miners and mine rescue workers who will compete in the contests, and because, furthermore, the United States government has at this place six experimental station with all the facilities and equipment at hand for giving exhibitions and conducting contests in mine rescue work under approximately the same conditions that would prevail after an actual mine disaster.

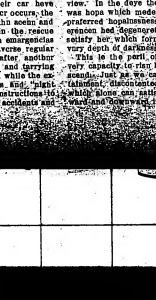
This inaugural tournament is to be conducted by the U. S. Bureau of Mines,—the newest branch of our national government and an institution which congress recently established under the interior department, especially for the purpose of studying and finding remedies for the mine disasters which have been giving the United States a bad name all over the world for these many years past. However, the Bureau of Mines is going to have influential help in the conduct of its first national Field Meet. For one thing the American Red Cross is going to co-operate.



Now the Red Cross has been called on very frequently of late years to lend a hand after some great mine disaster, and it is today instructing and equipping and educating many children whose fathers were killed in the disasters of the past few years. Thus the Red Cross officials feel that it is entirely in line with the spirit of doing everything possible to save lives in mines and to reduce the number and seriousness of mine accidents. And anyway the Red Cross has become deeply interested of late years in first-aid-to-the-injured work of all kinds,—so much so that it is now distributing "first aid cabinets" all over the country and has on the road all the while a special car with instructors who travel from town to town enrolling workmen as volunteer Red Cross workers and instructing them in "first aid" work. So that, in view of all this, it is but natural that the Red Cross should want to have a hand in the first field meat to stimulate interest in the cause. And finally the coal operators, who have much at stake, have through their general organisation volunteered to help make the tournament a success.

It is expected that from 20,000 to 30,000 miners will attend the Field Day near Pittsburg on September 16. A number of them will come merely as spectators or because they have been urged to come and profit by the "object lessons" that will be enacted before their eyes, but a very large proportion will be entered as contestents in the various events. It would surprise the average reader, no doubt, to learn how many men are eligible to entry in such contests, considering that organised rescue work on its present scale was taken up in the mines of this country only a few years ago.

Some of the most skillful first aid workers devote their entire time to this occupation. These are the employes stationed on one or another of the U. S. Government's Mine Rescue Cars. The Mine Rescue cars, it need scarcely be explained, are Pullman cars which Uncle Sam purchased a year or two ago, turned over to the newly-created Bureau of Mines, and had transformed into combination school rooms and hospitals on wheels. Each car has a crew of several experts who eat and sleep aboard, like fireman ever ready to respond to an alarm. They and their car have dual functions. When a mine disaster occurs, the car in the district are hurried to the scene and the men on board take the lead in the rescue work. At other times when no such emergencies demand their attention the cars traverse regular routes, visiting one mining town after another just as a traveling circus might do and tarrying for two or three days at each camp, while the experts, by means of demonstrations and plain "preach" lectures to the men, give instructions to the community as to how to prevent accidents and how to carry on rescue and relief work if a disaster does occur.



The result of this plan of Uncle Sam for having these "meatoperles" of the First Aid crusade constantly travelling up and down the mining regions electing the choicest miners what to do in an emergency and how to do it, has been that e considerable proportion of the underground workers are coming to have some knowledge of what to do to relieve the suffering of one another in time of accident when doctors and nurses are not at hand. Better still, a feature of the government plan and the Red Croce plan to organize at each mine a volunteer corps of "first aid" workers. These volunteers agree to devote enough time to the work to gain more than a superficial knowledge such as is acquired by the rank and file of the miners. Uncle Sim's experts devote many hours of their time to instructing these volunteers and the Red Croce and the mine operators have shown a disposition to provide them with all the necessary equipment,—expensive though it be.

The result of this development of a humanitarian militia in the coal mines has been that we now find at many a mine a volunteer corps of "first aid" workers who are thoroughly qualified for their work and who can do just as much for their entombed fellow-workmen as the miners overcome by poisonous gases as could the experts on any of the government mine rescue cars and who are on hand to act immediately without waiting for the arrival of a government car. It is these volunteer workers at various mines have been in training for months for the event, working to be able to do each stunt in the shortest possible space of time,—for in these contests an in hook and ladder races and hose laying contests, a second or two may mark the difference between victory and defeat.

The "first aid" tournament is going to have some very realistic features. For one thing there will be provided a "mine helmet" coat mine, open at one side to the view of the spectators, and in this will occur on signal an explosion just like that which occurs in a real mine except that there will be no actual loss of life. However, men will be experimently injured by the shock and overcome by the fumes and will fell in supposedly perilous positions from which they will be rescued by "first aid" men working in double quick time just as they would do under the stress of a genuine disaster. These rescue workers will be called upon to improvise stretchers from their jackets and mine drills; to hurriedly bring in the scene mine hospital cars; and do the other things they would do in time of serious trouble. Of course, all their operations will have to be carried on by means of what illumination can be gained from the new pattern of electric safety lamps for it is out of the question to carry into a mine filled with explosive gasses any ordinary lantern or lamp with an exposed flame of any kind.

Plenty one of the most interesting phases of the contests will be the competitions involving the use of the oxygen helmets so called. A helmet of this kind, which may cost as much as $200, may be described as an air-tight, armor-like covering for the head and shoulders which enables a rescue worker to penetrate into mines filled with noxious fumes just as a driver's suit enables its wearer to live and work under water. The air-tight helmet not only excludes the deadly gases of the mine but it supplies its wearer with the necessary flow of life-giving oxygen, drawn as needed from metal cylinder of compressed oxygen worn on the back, like a knapsack. The competitions at Pittsburg will include tests as to how long a man can work effectually in such a suit of armor and tests as to the ability of the respective wearers of the helmets to detach empty oxygen cylinders from their backs and replace them with fresh cylinders. This is highly important because in mine rescue work it may happen that there is no second rescue worker at hand to assist in changing cylinders and unless a "first aider" can do this for himself he must leave his work and hurry back to the mouth of the mine for fresh air.

Another form of apparatus, and it is a new one, which will be demonstrated is the Pulmotar. The Pulmotor is a German invention, and for all that it would almost seem to an ordinary mind that it is so delicate and remarkable in its mechanism that it costs $400. The Pulmotor is, in effect, an automatic breathing machine. It will compel an unconscious man to breath whether he wants to or not and it mechenically drews poisonous geese out of the lungs with one operation and forces in the life giving oxygen with the other. That it is capable of well nigh performing miracles may be appreciated when it is explained that with this agent for mechenicel resuscitation the experts of the U. S. Government have brought back to life miners who had remained unconscious in mines for 36 hours and who had been abandoned as dead.

The Danger of the Inferior

We are often told that one reason why we should not go down to the inferior things is that they can never satisfy us. But the danger in that they may satisfy us. A boy at school may commit to him evil talk and unworthy stories. When he left home such things were unnatural and distasteful to him, but he let himself down to them little by little until anything else is uncongenial to him. The inferior things have come to satisfy him. A popular lecturer told recently of having heard one woman say to another as they came away from an Ibsen play, "I do not like Ibsen. He takes the hope out of life." If she spoke sincerely, it was only because she had brought herself to such an unnatural philosophy. She did not begin life with so unwholesome and untrue a view. In the days that were real and worthy it was hope which made life beautiful. If now she preferred hopelessness it was because her preference had degenerated, and that had begun to satisfy her which formerly would have been the very depth of darkness to her.

This is the peril of the souls freedom. The very capacity to rise involves the capacity to descend. Just as we can go forward from any attainment, discontented with it, to higher things, so we can go back to what is lower, and downward into baser experiences, and thereafter which would once have been utterly repugnant to us, but which have the dreadful power of becoming the soul's desired end, so that we are satisfied. The soul can shrivel as well as expand. And we must beware of those who tell us that we can go down to anything we wish with, and yet rise to what we may become or estimated on the low plenes that we shall never, weke to discontent. Then our birthright will be gone, and we shall not care to have it back again. The danger of all sin and surrender is that they may stupify the taste and satisfy it.

HUMAN HANDICAPS.

We do not require the same attainments from all. Some are well taught, some are ill taught, some are not taught at all. Some have naturally good dispositions. Not one has had power to fulfil the law completely. Therefore it is no crime in him if he falls. We reckon as faults those only which, risen from idleness, willfulness, selfishness and deliberate preference of evil to good. Each is judged according to what he has received.—James Anthony Froude.

The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Illustrations by LEONARD MISSONE

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY HARPER, BROS & COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prospector in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blinding blizzard but are confronted by the muscular husband. He is shot by the wife, but the chivalrous boy plans a note to the body taking the crime upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the woman's horse falls exhausted; the youth puts her in his own and follows hanging to the stirrup strap. Seeing he is an impediment, the woman threatens her escort into a snow drift and rides on. Half-frozen he stumbles into the railroad station just as the train bears the woman away. Twenty-five years later, this man, George Gormly, is a multi-millionaire in New York.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

The thing was an instant sensation. The newspapers took it up. Other merchants, freighters, and shippers were interviewed, and a case was instantly made out that the Gotham Freight Traction company which would have shaken a less pondderous, less thick-skinned, less indifferent organization to pieces. Even the authorities were interviewed, and they shed hypocritical tears over the unfortunate trickery by which the public had been humored out of its legitimate rights, but they took occasion at the same time to point out that there was nothing whatever to be done about it.

The party in power was one that had long dominated the metropolis. To be sure it gave the metropolis a fairly good government; but the people paid over and over again. They were robbed shamelessly right and left, on every hand, and while something was laudered them, what they got was no quid pro quo for the frightful extravagance of the administration. Graft abounded everywhere. The party out of power, which had been out of power so long that it had perforce become virtuous, did not hesitate to point out the dreadful state of affairs to all who would listen; but its efforts made so far been unavailing, and the party in power remained there because of its so doing.

Now the Gotham Freight Traction company had its weak point. Things that depend upon the collusion of so many unscrupulous men, not to say villains, usually have a weak point. It is a wise man, indeed a genius, who finds out these things and assails the organization thereat. The first principle of good soldiering is to oppose to your adversary's weak point your own strongest. The weak point in the enterprise of the Gotham Freight Traction company lay in a certain link vital to the continuance of the carefully devised system: the franchises of which was about to run out.

Few people knew that the franchises was to expire, and in the ordinary course nothing would have happened. An ordinance renewing it would have been slipped through the board of aldermen, signed by the mayor, and that would have been all.

So sure did the company feel of its ground, so confident were its members that Gormly and his fellow victims would see the necessity of paying without delay, that they had never contemplated the publicity and never imagined they would have to face this bitter and determined attack upon their franchises and upon their methods. They knew, of course, that they held the aldermen in their hands; that in their close alliance with the Bachem society, the organization that ran things, they could pass anything they wanted in defiance of any public sentiment whatsoever.

Gormly had made one blunder; but like a brilliant soldier he had succeeded in turning it to his advantage. One advertisement was succeeded by another. The Gotham Freight Traction company was made the subject of scathing criticism and bitter attack of which the Bachem society and the party in power came in for a large share. And men everywhere began asking what was to be done about it.

In previous campaigns the party out of power had been led by a series of forlorn hopes, men enthusiastic in their devotion to the cause of reform and not noted for much of anything else. The leaders of the outs took notice of Gormly. Inquiries began to be made about him; his business methods were investigated; his resources were discussed; his character was analyzed; his career made the subject of study. From being merely a name attached to a familiar institution, he became within one month one of the great personalities of New York. The situation was interesting.

Incidentally, he did not lose in the estimation of Miss Haldane by this exploitation of himself, which he had so cleverly managed that no one dreamed it was due to his own motion. Even in those exclusive circles in which Miss Haldane moved, which are ordinarily indifferent to any happenings on this side of the terrestrial sphere, some account of Gormly and his doings, penetrated. That he was rich and a bachelor were the most interesting facts which appealed to this set. Men and women there began to inquire as to who he was. It was Miss Haldane's privilege and pleasure to enlighten them so far as, she could, without betraying the nature of their confidential relation.

There were several papers on the side of the administration, which were owned and controlled by the party in power, that would have been glad indeed to have discredited Gormly; but the closest scrutiny revealed nothing in his life that could be used for that purpose. Where he had come from was not known; but for the last quarter of a century at least his course had been traced with considerable accuracy, and indeed there was little of it that was not discovered and disclosed to the eager public. He was quite willing to talk about the Gotham Freight Traction company or any matter of public comment, but for the rest he was unshakably silent. His early past, therefore, was a mystery; but the interest in a mystery that has no special bearing upon the present soon dies out.

Then Gormly did an unusual thing for him. He purchased a country place on Long Island. This received no mention in the public press, because the whole matter had been handled by the irrepressible Conner, and Gormly's name had not appeared at all. The place was desirable, in that it was not far—five or six miles—from the country place of the Haldane family. It was bought completely furnished, and the staff of servants previously employed was retained.

Gormly knew from the clippings in Texas that it was the custom of the Haldanes to pass the Christmas holidays at their country place. He had seen Miss Haldane rather less frequently of late, because the work at the settlement house was now so far advanced that it was merely a matter of carrying out the plans decided upon and spending the money so generously placed in her hands by him, which did not need much consultation. So on the vain hope that chance might throw him in touch with her, Gormly decided also to occupy for the Christmas season his lonely cottage—it was called a cottage, although it was more like a baronial mansion than anything else—on the Long Island shore.

It was snowing hard the evening of his arrival the day before Christmas, and Gormly did not like snow. He had bitter memories intermingled with a storm, and the sight of the white, ice covered, snow clad fields filled him with unpleasant reminiscences.

Since he had bought the estate through the faithful Chaloner, he had not seen it himself. Therefore, after the excellent dinner which had been provided by his new chef and served by his new butler, he determined upon a careful inspection of his residence. They had advanced as far as the library when the familiar tinkle of the telephone made them pause.

"See who it is, Beale," said the master of the house.

"It's from the keeper of the lodge gate, sir," he said, turning and looking toward his master. "He says that there's a party down there stalled in an automobile. They can't get on in the snow. They'd like to come up to the house. There are ladies in the party, and—"

"Tell them to come up by all means at once," said Gormly.

"Beg pardon, sir," returned the butler, "but you know it's half a mile by the road, and it'll be terrible walking for the ladies in such weather as this."

"Quite so," returned Gormly. "What does the stable afford?"

"There's the station wagon and the pair that brought you over, sir. Those are all that are there."

"Yes, I remember. That's all I told Chaloner to send down, not expecting to— Well, have that hitched up and telephone them that a conveyance will be at the lodge in a few moments; that I should be glad to have them come to the house at once."

"By the way," he asked, "did you find out the names of the people?"

"Yes, sir," answered the butler, "it was Mr. Haldane and his party."

CHAPTER III.

Society Bursts Upon Mr. Gormly.

Enter at last, Miss Haldane, accompanied by her father, her mother, her brother, Miss Louise Van Vleck Stewart (one of her intimate friends and a possible mother-in-law), Dr. Thomas Deveaux (a retired physician, an old bachelor and an old and intimate friend of the family). The newcomers were all dressed in winter automobile garments. It was young Haldane who broke the somewhat awkward pause consequent upon their entrance.

"Mr. Goodrich," he began unbuttoning his coat and slipping it off as he advanced

"Your pardon, sir," said Gormly, "but Mr. Goodrich is no longer the owner of this place."

"Why, Mr. Gormly," burst out Miss Haldane impetuously, as she turned at his voice and recognized him, "this is a great surprise! We didn't know that you were to be one of our neighbors."

She had been in the background and had not observed their host until she heard his speak. As she spoke, she stepped forward impulsively with outstretched hand.

"Eleanor," exclaimed her father in great surprise, surveying Gormly as he spoke, with a stare as cold as the winter weather, "do you—ah—know this gentleman?"

"Certainly I do," returned the girl. "It is Mr. George Gormly of the Gormly store, you know."

"Ah, indeed," began her father.

"I have known him for years," she paused uncertainly.

"Seven months yesterday, Miss Haldane," answered Gormly, who was nothing if not accurate.

"We have—er—bought things at your shop for a longer time than that, I fancy," here interposed Mrs. Haldane vaguely with an air of great condescension.

"You have been on my books, madam, as one of my most valued customers ever since I moved to Broadway twenty-one years ago," returned Gormly, who was by no means ashamed of his business, else he would not have continued in it.

"Yes," said Haldane at this juncture, "I have been making out checks with commendable regularity to your firm ever since."

"My good man—" began Mrs. Haldane still somewhat vaguely, and evidently rather at a loss how to place this irreproachably clad and fine, appearing gentleman who had called his hands with trade and yet did not seem to be at all embarrassed or ashamed of it.

"Mother!" exclaimed the daughter, blushing with vexation. "Mr. Gormly forgive me, I—forgot that you did not know my family."

"I have seen them often in the store, Miss Haldane, and have even waited upon some of them in other days myself," replied Gormly, quite as cold and formal in his manner as any one in the room.

"Nonsense," said Miss Haldane, "I am presenting you to my mother, Mrs. George Gormly, mother, my very dear friend—"

Mrs. Haldane drew herself up. Gormly bowed himself down in a low and decidedly chilly manner to express a proper degree of appreciation of the honor and nothing more.

"My friend, Miss Stewart; my father, and my brother, Mr. Livingstone Haldane; Dr. Deveaux."

The persons mentioned bowed coolly, except that Livingstone Haldane infused a little more cordiality in his recognition than the others did, while Dr. Deveaux actually stepped forward and extended his hand.

"My dear sir," he said genially, his old face beaming with good nature and genuine admiration, "I am delighted to have the privilege of shaking you by the hand. Anybody who has the courage to attack the Gotham Freight Traction company as you have done in the papers may be regarded as a public benefactor whom it is an honor to know."

"Thank you," said Gormly, grateful for this recognition.

"Sir," began Haldane, "an unfortunate accident to our machine has thrown us upon your hospitality. I did not know that my friend Goodrich had sold this place or—"

"Let that give you no concern, sir," answered Gormly; "I pray that you will consider the place as much at your own. I beg you will take off your wraps and make yourselves entirely at home."

"That's very handsome of you, I am sure," continued the elder Haldane, slowly removing his coat; "but my own place lies but six miles beyond here, and if you will permit us to telephone my stables, I think we shall have no trouble yon but little."

"The telephone is in the library yonder, Mr. Haldane, and is at your service as to everything in the house. I regret that my own stables are not yet furnished. The small station wagon and pair which brought you up are the only horses I have on the place just now."

"And lolly well crowded we were!" said young Haldane.

"Meanwhile," continued Gormly, "may I ask have you had dinner? Can I offer you anything to eat, or—"

"We thank you," answered Mrs. Haldane, "but we dined at the Braddocks—a place five or six miles back—before we started."

"A cup of tea or a glass of wine after your cold ride, then?" said Gormly.

"That would be very nice indeed," said Miss Haldane. "Louise, aren't you simply dying for a cup of tea?"

"Perishing for lack of it," answered Louise promptly.

Gormly summoned the butler, gave the necessary directions, showed Haldane where the telephone was, invited the other men into the library also, where there was a well stocked buffet and excellent cigars; after which he showed the women into a small reception room on the other side of the hall, and left them to divest themselves of their wraps.

The men refreshed themselves according to their taste at the buffet, lighted their cigars, which, as Chaloner had been careful to send a supply of the best, were mild and private brand, they found excellent, while Haldane fairly endeavored to get in communication with his own people. Such was the severity of the storm for a country lit prepared for it, however, that he was unable to get a word in any direction. Even that to the lodge was forced to be cut off after a time.

Gormly had not waited in the library to hear the result of the telephoning. As soon as he had the men comfortably provided for, he had gone back to the great hall, which was more of a living room than anything else. The first of the women of the party to present herself was Miss Haldane. She was in full evening dress. Her noble head rose grandly from her exquisite shoulders. In her dark hair were a diamond coronet. Her dress, soft, shimmering stuff of white, trailed behind her.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Setting the Pace.

"Pacemaker at a banquet is what I should call the unique job," said the city salesman. "I met a man the other day who holds that title among the artistic eaters of the town.

"He's a man of almost late size and when he finishes a course they clear the table."

Why He Carried the Lantern.

A blind man who always comes to Cucculan village came back from the river one night, bringing a pitcher of water and, as usual, he had a lighted lantern. Some one, meeting him, said: "You're blind; for all the same to you whether it's day or night. Of what use to you is a lantern?" "I don't carry the lantern in order to see my road," replied the blind man, "but to keep some fool like you from running against me and breaking my pitcher."

Usually the Way.

"You made elaborate preparations."

"Yes."

"And how did your day's fishing turn out?"

"Oh, we asked for about twenty kinds of fish and got perch."

DEFIANCE STARCH for starching

The UNITED STATES Apple Grower to the WORLD

It is not too much to say that the American apple,—yellow or green or rosy, but rich and mellow, always,—is the most widely known and most highly esteemed product of Uncle Sam's domain in the estimation of the great majority of the people over seas. We hear much talk of the extent to which American inventions and utilities have won their way around the world, and it is literally true. All up and down the highways of the earth we find strange people using Yankee safety razors and kodaks and enjoying the music of American-made phonographs. But after all it is the American apple which has done more than anything else to carry conviction as to what a bounteous realm is this premier republic of the new world.

And, speaking of the apple, it must not be supposed that any measure of its prestige is due to the mere fact that it is a food, whereas some of the other things which we export to the tune of millions of dollars a year are luxuries, pure and simple. The United States is food purveyor to the world with other catables than the luscious products of our orchards. Why if it were not for our wheat and corn, for instance, half of Europe would go hungry just as were it not for our cotton, thousands of employes of foreign cotton mills would go idle. But with all due respect to these facts it may yet be declared that the American apple is in a class by itself. The old world owes her tobacco and her potatoes to the new world, likewise, but these she has succeeded in transplanting to her own soil. For the appetizing apple at its best, however, she must still come to the land of the Stars and Stripes.

There does not seem to be a very clear record of just when the American export trade in apples had its beginnings, but probably it began on a small scale almost as soon as the lure of the good things of earth discovered what a precious boon is the mealy sphere with its refreshing, thirst-quenching propensities. The lands over seas have acquired their enthusiasm for American apples partly because they have already had the best grade of the fruit served to them. There are two explanations of this. On the one hand there is the consideration that only a good grade of apple of certain varieties has the keeping quality to permit of its exportation,—for transfer that means that weeks and more likely months must intervene between the time the apples are picked in America and the time those huge red apples that have brought fame to the Pacific Northwest, you have a new explanation of the prices ranging from $2,500 to $10,000 per acre which are demanded for bearing orchards in the favored fruit land. The chances are that in the eyes of the average foreign apple-eater, Niagara Falls does not rank higher as an American wonder than the Hood River Valley in Oregon, the Wenatchee, the Yakima and other districts from the five acre and ten acre fruit farms of which come the oranges and other varieties of apples that compel the most conservative European epicures to concede that America must be a wonderful place after all.

But it would be a great mistake to convey the impression that it is only the apples from Oregon and Washington which are freighted over land and sea to win praises in foreign tongues. The greatest apple shipping port in the world is Watsonville, California, and countless apples have gone forth as silent missionaries from the great orchards of the middle west and particularly from the Ozarks which long ago attained a proud position as a fountain head of the stream of apples that annually overspreads the world. The most famous apple growing region in the east,—the picturesque Allegheny highlands of old Virginia,—is likewise a heavy contributor to the larders of moneyed foreigners. Below this historic section the Old Dominion comes the famous Albemarle pippins which bring prices ranging up to $10 a barrel and which are such favorites apiece in London and on the Continent for that in England that the tight little isle takes the lion's share of the crop. This is the apple which was so favored by the late Queen Victoria and which is likewise the especial favorite of Britain's new king.

Since this country has assumed the role of purveyor of apples to the civilized world, a great change has taken place in the methods of harvesting the choicer grades of apples. No more is there resort to the old hap-hazard method of detailing can boy to climb the tree and shake the limbs while other lads gathered from the ground the fruit which, in all too many cases, was more or less damaged by the fall. Nowadays when keeping qualities are as desirable as flavor in an apple, each apple is picked at its prime,—that is when it has attained perfection of color, but before it has commenced to grow mellow,—and is carefully packed in box or barrel from which it will emerge in perfect condition after months of cold storage.

It was because of the difficulty of obtaining apples that had been packed with extreme care that many large buyers,—particularly those buying for foreign markets,—some years ago inaugurated the practice of buying the apples on the trees and themselves attending to the picking and shipment. The plan has proved so satisfactory to both growers and buyers that it has been paid for the fruit "on the tree" in a single orchard. Of course, the grower does not get as large a lump sum as he would for the packed apples, but his net return is as great or greater and he saves himself no end of trouble and worry and controversy. The apple buyer who purchases an apple crop on the trees in this fashion may bring in his own expert pickers to harvest the fruit or he may merely employ the labor in the neighborhood.

It is sometimes declared that a considerable portion of the American people has to put up with what are, in effect, second-grade apples, while the proudest products of our orchards go scooting past our doors enroute to castles and hotels and mansions beyond the Atlantic. Of course, this is true, only in a measure. Immense quantities of all the high-priced varieties of American apples are consumed right here at home, although it may be admitted that the bulk of the supply for the populous eastern cities comes from the orchards of New York, New England and other districts that are close at hand. But by the way, it may be added that the apple-growing industry in New England is taking a great "brace" as regards the quality of the fruit produced. Stony hillsides, particularly in Connecticut, are, under the advanced methods of cultivation, being made to yield heavy crops of huge delicious apples and if this sort of thing keeps on the time is coming when New England apples will vie in the markets of the world with the prize specimens from the west coast.

A noticeable characteristic of the American apple growing industry in all sections of the country is found in the immense numbers of people who are entering the field. There seems to be somewhere of a general mania to take up fruit raising which exceeds in extent the stampeds of a few years ago to get into the poultry-raising business. A good many of the newcomers have had little experience to fruit raising, or indeed in farming of any sort and those who are laboring, as many of them are, under the delusion that fruit-raising is an "easy money" proposition requiring neither experience nor hard work, must soon come doomed to a rude awakening. On the other hand many of the men who have lately taken up fruit raising as a serious business are shrewd business men of energy and determination who will win out in the end, even if they do stumble a bit now and first. What is more, a number of them have the capital back of them to stick at the game and as the important industry that it is the industry is liable to prove a "sailing game,—not only with young trees which have not reached the bearing stage but also to some extent with mature orchards who a late frost or other inauspicious conditions may ruin a crop and allow the grower no chance for a profit until a full year hence.

Some of the apple growers have expressed fear within the past year or two that this immense influx of apple producers will serve to in time glut the market and force down prices. The best-posted authorities, however, take little stock in any dire predictions in this direction. They point out that not only is apple consumption bound to have a natural increase proportionate to the growth in the population of the country, but, more significant still is the circumstance that the American people are learning to make more extensive use of this supreme ly healthful fruit, serving it in a variety of new forms which will make the fruit what is ough to be,—a staple on every American table.

KING AND HIS PEOPLE

Most members of the royal family have had from time to time many interesting and amusing adventures when going about in disguise. They are ahle to escape for a little while from the rigid etiquette and ceremony that normally surround them, and to enjoy a degree of freedom very welcome to them.

King George as prince of Wales had many adventures in different parts of London in various disguises, which enabled his majesty to obtain a close insight into the different phases of life among many of his subjects, Pearson's Weekly says.

One of the most interesting adventures King George has had in disguise was a visit his majesty paid to a big railway goods yard some years ago on an occasion when there was an enormous pressure of heavy goods traffic. The king, then Duke of York, went to the yard at 11 p. m., accompanied by a member of the royal household. Both were dressed in the garb of working men who were waiting in the yard until midnight on the chance of being taken on for the night shift if the work was specially heavy.

Only a few of the railway officials were aware that the heir to the throne was standing among the squad of hungry men eagerly and anxiously waiting the arrival of the foreman, who might pick out some of the most robust among them to aid in shifting the mountain of goods from the trucks to the clearing sheds during the night.

For nearly an hour the prince watched the work proceeding in the big yard under the white glare of the arc lamps with immense interest, and chatted to the men about him, entering thoroughly into the spirit of their rough but good humored chaff. A few minutes before midnight one of the railway officials who was aware of the presence of the prince came up to the royal highness and stood by him. A minute later the foreman arrived and after casting a critical glance over the squad before him, proceeded slowly to pick out a dozen men, who were then marched off to work.

The rest walked out of the yard except the prince and his companion, who were escorted out a little while later by the railway official. The latter had stood by his royal highness in case the foreman should have selected him for the night shift. The foreman was not informed of the identity of the prince, but had simply been instructed not to take on the two men before the railway official was standing.

Queen Mary has, indeed, had almost as many adventures as the king in disguise.

Some years after her marriage the queen made a series of expeditions about the east end of London, visiting all the poorest quarters as an ordinary lady visitor, her guide frequently being the present bishop of London.

The queen was little known while later visited the poorest quarters of Birmingham, Manchester and Liverpool in the guise of a nursing sister, which enabled her majesty to go to the worst quarters of these towns with little fear of being subjected to any rough or unpleasant treatment, for the sisters are almost invariably treated with respect even by the roughest characters in these localities.

TORPEDO FISH LIKE A SKATE.

But the Electric Ray Carries Its Own Storage Battery.

A recent addition to the division of fishes in the new national museum in Washington has proven one of the most interesting specimens in the entire collection, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger. It is the electric ray, known in the language of the scientists as the Narcine brasiliensis, harmless enough as to name, but capable of repelling its enemies in a manner peculiarly its own, which gives it its common title of the "torpedo" fish.

The electric ray is of the skate variety, with a broad, flat, nearly oval head and body, and a tail something like that possessed by the majority of well-known fishes. Its mouth is on the under side and it can only feel the way to it when feeding. But the real curiosity about this fish is the fact that it carries its own storage battery, with it to all its wanderings and that it has the power of recharging the thousands of little cells when they become exhausted, using its power over and over again. There are really two batteries. They are located where one would naturally expect to find the breathing apparatus of the fish, to the right and the left of the heady black eyes and back. They are kidney shaped, occupying perhaps one-third of the upper part of the body.

When at peace with itself and the rest of the world the torpedo fish swims around at leisure or rests in shallow water, burrowing in the sand at ease, but if attacked the battery is discharged and the enemy is glad to call it a drawn battle if it can swim away. It gets its prey by using its batteries to supply the necessary current to kill, but it must first complete a connection with the object of its attack. Men have appeared here upon the shallow waters and have caught them in nets, but on handling them have been very glad to let them go and avoid further shock. Fishermen have been repeatedly knocked down by a contact with them. The species is common along the south Atlantic and gulf coast.

DIVISION OF LABOR.

There were points of resemblance between Mrs. Hammond and the lilies of the field; she had married a young man with a good salary, but she herself had never earned a penny in her life, nor had she been blessed with wealthy parents.

"We have a joint account in the National Fountain bank," she announced to one of her friends, when she had been married a few months. "It is such fun to pay bills by check."

"What do you mean by a joint account?" asked the incredulous friend. "Do you put in equal sums?"

"Oh, I don't put in any," said Mrs. Hammond. "Will puts it in and I draw it out."

EVELYN NESBIT THAW NOW IN RETIREMENT

YOUNG ADVENTURESS CAN NOW LOOK BACK OVER A GHASTLY TRAIL OF BROKEN LIVES.

New York.—All the world knows of the killing of Stanford White on the Madison Square roof garden and the testimony of Evelyn Thaw upon the witness stand which enveloped her in shame perpetual. It was this story that cost Harry Thaw to an asylum for criminal insane instead of to the electric chair.

After the second trial various stories were told and published as to the whereabouts of the girl, her mode of life and her ambitions. She was variously described as living luxuriously upon her income from the Thaws and as occupying a small studio in the pursuit of sculpture study. But she has drifted gradually out of range of public notice. As a matter of fact this girl, not yet past the youth of her twenties, the center of a tragedy, known throughout the world, is living in a modest flat, unnoticed and alone.

Her name, once the open sesasme to every gilded hostelry in town, has lost its magic. She is not even upon her dressmaker's. Perhaps she has some friends, but the gay throng of Broadway are no longer her friends. They have no time to remember as they hurry along in the current. But she, in her quiet backwater of a refuge, has plenty of time for memories. She and Nemesis can look back over a ghastly trail of broken lives. Perhaps sometimes she counts: Stanford White in his grave. Harry Thaw wearing out his days within the galling limits of an asylum for criminal insane. His aged mother and his sister Alice self-exiled to the little village on the Hudson, where they may watch the never-fading lights in the second floor windows of his prison. A young millionaire aimlessly wandering about a foreign land, watched by his creditors and shunned by his family. An old man, once a factor in the financial life of Wall street, now broken and impoverished. Three of the lawyers dend who once fought to save Harry Thaw's life; three whose careers have been ended by their own discreditable practices. Another man of law, whose glory faded from the day of his association with the Thaw case. And herself. The toll is thirteen. Who next?

GUN KNOCKS BOY OFF CLIFF

Weapon Hadn't Been Loaded for Fifteen Years and When Fired It, Kicked Vigorously.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Howard Hemminger, aged eighteen, of Homestead, found an old shotgun in the attic of his home. It had not been used for nearly fifteen years. Hemminger loaded the gun, and, in order that his parents would not hear the report of the shot, he walked about a half mile to an abandoned stone quarry.

Standing on the edge of the precipice, he fired the shot at a target on a tree. The gun kicked so hard that Hemminger was knocked over the precipice, landing 200 feet below to a country road. Miners returning home from work found him. Both arms and his left hip were fractured.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Town Has First Wedding in Fifty Years

BOSTON.—Breaking the spell of 50 years' standing, during which there has not been a single marriage in the town, Miss Laura R. Schutt and Rev. Milton Whittier were wedded the other day in the village of Mount Washington, Mass. Every inhabitant of the town turned out to attend the wedding.

Only a little over a year ago Mr. Whittier graduated from the Yale Theological school, and came to the village of Mount Washington to begin his career in the humble little Congregational church.

It was always Miss Schutt's habit to attend church regularly, but when Rev. Mr. Whittier came to the town and took the position of pastor of the church for a season, Miss Schutt attended the church, so 'tis said, with an added zest. Not a single Sunday did she miss while the young minister held forth from the narrow plus pulpit.

Since the young minister began his ecotics her from the pulpit. Frequently their eyes met. At first the girl's eyes dropped at his earnest gaze. Miss Schutt had not been out of school long, having been graduated but a few years from the high school at Great Barrington.

Mr. Whittier came to the Schutt house and traveled many a toilsome mile to order that he might see the young woman who had so attracted him in the church. Before the summer was over it was reported that they were engaged.

Then arrangements were made for the wedding. Great arrangements they were, too. Every person in the township accepted the invitation and offered any assistance they might be able to give in preparing the church. When it was over, the bride and groom went away to the groom's home in Brookfield Center, Coos, where they expect to make their home.

Wife Made Home Moving Picture Show

NEW YORK.—Moving pictures, Samuel Denton admits, may be all right when thrown on a white screen, but when they're reproduced in one's home, he says, the thrills he comes too intense to be pleasant. Denton is a produce merchant of Brooklyn, and he lives with his wife and their two grown children in that borough. His objections to mixing film dramas into his domestic affairs were explained in detail before Magistrate McGuire in the Flatbush court, when Denton was called on a summons obtained by his wife, charging brutality to their son.

The produce merchant's small frame fairly quivered with indignation as he told of the trouble caused by moving pictures between himself and Mrs. Denton, who weighs about two hundred pounds and is correspondingly muscular. Since the ho-hum craze hit her, the husband said, he got only has sofffered from lack of proper nourishment, but also has been made the victim of various unpopular comic scenes copied from the picture shows. To the same evil Denton laid his daughter's elopement and his own interest in boxing lessons. It was in teaching the younger what he knew about the manly art that the father committed the "brutality" complained of by Mrs. Denton. It consisted of sending the youth down for the count with a celestial body block.

"Your honor," Denton said, "I've had scarcely a moment's peace since my wife began taking the children to moving picture shows. Not only do I have to cet cold or warmed over food because I forgot to get my supper when a new film is being shown, but I also have become the butt of all sorts of comic scenes.

Magistrate McGuire discharged Denton forthwith.

Thief Talks Clerk Out of Rare Gems

CHICAGO.—Chicago talk, the simple line of words, netted a smooth diamond swindler more than $1,000 a minute for four minutes the other day. The victims are a Michigan avenue jewelry store, and an affable clerk is trying to explain to his employers how he has lived in Chicago for fifteen years and can not recognize a real confidence man. And what jumps up before the jewel case. The missing diamond is valued at $4,250.

The customer alighted from a big six-passenger touring car and rushed into the store.

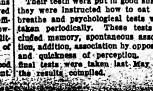
"I am just leaving town and I must have a twin for this little stone," he exclaimed.

The purchaser was dressed in the height of fashion. He had every appearance of affluence and spoke with a decidedly English accent. His hair was gray, his eyes blue, his face smoothly shaven and his figure erect. The clerk was all attention at once.

"Certainly," said the clerk, "we have a duplicate of this diamond."

"Oh, no, no, that is not exactly it," said the stranger. "By the way, I have to be at the board of trade early. Big deal on."

"Well," responded the clerk, "here is another stone. Diamonds have advance in price, you know, and I will have to charge you more for the than you paid for that one, I presume."



"Just lay that aside for me until soon," he continued, "and I will arrange for payment. And what will this bit be?"

"This stone will cost you $4,250," stammered the clerk.

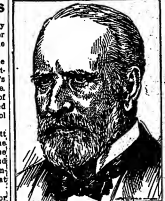
"Oh, very well," remarked the visitor. And he rushed to his waiting machine and was whirled away into the great unknown.

A few minutes later the clerk awakened to the fact that an imitation stone had been substituted.

Dental Work Makes Dull Pupils Keen

CLEVELAND, O.—Scientific proof that proper care of the teeth increased the mental efficiency of a squad of pupils at Marion school a grand average of 20 per cent, and decided incalculable improvement in their moral and physical condition is contained in the recent report which Dr. W. G. Ehersole read before the delegates of the National Dental association here.

For the first time in the history of dentistry scientific data which cannot be disputed are compiled to prove that stupidity, lack of ambition, slovenliness, bad temper and many other ills to which the pupil is heir, are traced directly to neglected teeth.



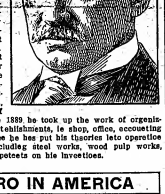
One girl pupil, whom physicians found to be mentally defective showed a gain of 444 per cent, in mental efficiency, the report shows, after following the rules of oral hygiene for a little over a year. Here is only one of a score of remarkable cases.

Children who came from fairly good homes gained from 10 to 60 per cent mentally, while the average ghetto child improved from 60 to 100 per cent. Charts were taken of the months of 640 pupils and the word forty selected. The school records of this number were in nearly every case as bad as their mouths. Twenty-seven of the original squad underwent the whole test.

Their teeth were put in good shape; they were instructed how to eat and breathe and psychological tests were taken periodically. These tests included memory, spontaneous association, addition, association by opposites and quickness of perception. The final tests, were taken last May and the result compiled.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

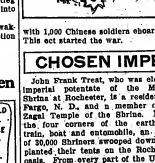
POPULAR WITH THE FARMERS



The champion long-distance cabinet officer is Secretary of Agriculture "Tama" Jim Wilson, for he has been holding down that job constantly since 1897, while he has seen more than a hundred other cabinet officers come in and retire to private life. "Tama" Jim is the friend of the farmers and the farmers seem to be friends of his.

Secretary Wilson has made the department of agriculture the greatest instrumentality of practical every-day helpfulness to 40 per cent. of the people in the United States. He has experimental stations finding out how to make dry farming pay where there is only ten inches of moisture a year; and they are finding it out, too. He brought the durum wheat from North Africa, and in the regions formerly too dry to be cultivable it has added millions of bushels to our annual wheat crop. He sent to Siberia, and there, far up in the north, found alfalfa that seem to need neither moisture nor warmth to develop good pasture.

He brought the finest Cuban tobacco, tested and analyzed the soil in which it grew, got detailed reports of the climatic conditions it required—and then hunted up the same soil and climate, and proceeded to grow the tobacco in South Carolina. He brought seed of the inimitable Sumatra wrapper-tobacco, searched for a place under the American flag where it would flourish, and found it—in Texas. He brought seeds of Texas Sumatra and Cordova Cuban filler, if you will ask him; and you will prosecure it a high-class imported wasd.

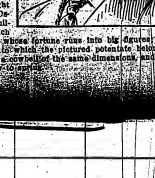


IS A PIONEER IN ECONOMICS

le thess days when so much is said and does for the conservation of our natural resources there has sprung up a new school of economists who are preaching the doctries that in inbor every effort, every expenditure of muscular or mental energy, should count for the utmost and not go to waste. A pioneer in this school is Frederick Wieslow Taylor, who recently appeared by invitation before a committee of congress to explain how the application of his theories increases the productiveness of workmen from 15 to 20 per cent.

Mr. Taylor is a native of Germantown, Pa., and has risen to his present prominence through his own efforts. He is a patjernmaker and mechiest by trade and a mechanical engineer by profession. In 1878 he entered the employ of the Midville Steel Company, Philadelphia, and was successively gang boss, assistaet foreman, foreman, master mechenic, chief draughtsman and chief engineer. In 1889 he took up the work of organizing meseogmeet le meeufacturing estehlishments, le shop, office, accounting and sales departmeets, and since then has put his theories into operation in many business organizations, including steel works, wood pulp works, etc. He is the owner of about 100 patents on his inveetioes.

JAP WAR HERO IN AMERICA



Admiral Togo, the Jepanese war hero who came to this cousetry as the nation's guest, is described by a Japanese official as one of the simplest and gentlest of men. "You would hardly imagine, to see the white sleeadir figure, that you were in the presence of the greatest master of naval strategy the war mast has produced, or that the world has seen in modern time."

Marshal Oyame, General Kuriki, Admiral Kamimure, Admiral Yamomoto and Admiral Togo were all born in the city of Kagoshime.

Togo hed just grown to youth's estate and was fighting with a broadsword when a messenger came from the mikado ordering him to become a naval officer. He packed his few belongiegs and journeyed to England. When the Chinese-Jepanese war was threatening Togo was captain of a cruiser. He helted an English ship with 1,000 Chinese soldiers eboard, and when surrender was refused, sunk it. This act started the war.

CHOSEN IMPERIAL POTENTATE

John Frank Treat, who was elected imperial potentate of the Myatic Shrina at Rochester, is a resident of Fargo, N. D., and a member of El Zagal Temple of the Shrine. From the four corners of the earth, by train, boat and automobile, an army of 30,000 Shriners swooped down and planted their tents on the Rochester oasis. From every part of the United States they came and even from faraway Scotland were pilgrims to the cradle of Shrinedom.

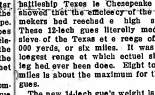
The Khartoum Temple, from Winnipeg, Man., brought a genuine Scotch kilties band of bagpipers; the Islam Temple of San Francisco had a Chinese band of 50 pieces; the Los Angeles Shrinars brought two carloads of California fruits and wines to distribute to their eastern friends; the Galveston (Texas) Temple brought two carloads of Mexican burros; Osman Temple of St. Paul had its military band, every member of which is a business or professional man whose fortune runs into big figures; El Zagal Temple, from Fargo, N. D., to which the potentate belongs, brought a 15-foot bear of bread and a corresponding same dimensions, and, in fact, every bunch had some novelty to exhibit.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Capital to Lead in High Prices War

WASHINGTON.—The high cost of living is becoming a live topic egain. Much of the mail that comes to members of congress daily deals with the subject. Coeatituents of senators oed rapresestatives are saying that if the legislative body can do anything to hrieg prices of the necessaries of life down, it ought to do it. Amoes public men there is very general agreement that the topic will be to the front in the presidestial campaign next year.

Jemes Wilson, secretary of agriculture, hes come forevord with the suggestion that every large municipality ought to take up the cost of living problem. He thinks the problem of reducing the cost of living is one that must be settled by municipalities. Federal legislation can, he declares, at best do but little toward hringieg prices down.



The secretary is trying to persuede the leedieg citizens of the netioeal capital to get le behind an inquiry here as to why things people bevs to buy are so high. He has e notion that if Washington would conduct an ievestigation that resulted in obtaieing cheaper food for the people, other cities would soon become interested.

Secretary Wilsce suggests that President Taft appoint e commission to study the situation here at the eational capitol. The president has indicated that he is willing to carry out the suggestion of his secretary of agriculture if the people of Washington would indicate that they really want such ee investigation made.

"One of the most pitiful thiegs of modern times," said Secretary Wilson, "is the meenar in which the poor of the large cities are heeten down by the prices which prevail at this time. The prices are such thet no men working for ordinary wages can meet them.

"The former does not get helf the price the consumer pays. Many parties are inclieed to place the blames for high prices on the farmers, but as a mettar of fact the farmers are not benafited by the high prices. A few, middlemee, selected leidividuels, who stay in between the farmer and the consumer, are the persoes who reep the benefit."

Huge Guns Will Shoot Fifteen Miles

THINK of e gun which will hurl e 1,400-pound projectile through nine leches of the best fecp-herdened steel 15 miles away from where it is fired! This is what Uncle Sam's new 14-inch guns will do. They will shoot beyond the horizon. In other words, the renges of the monsters with which the two new battleships, New York and Texas, will be equipped is greater then it is possible to see a target the size of a ship of the Delaware type. Under the most favorable conditices oet ern the tell mests of the Delevare could be made to see a ship of the seme size 15 mile: away. And the sew 14-inch gun is effective at that rege.

The sevy deprirtment has just completed a successful test of the gun and work will go forward et once in the Washington factory to make the 12 huge weapoes needed for the two vessels.

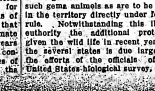
The recoet tests made with the neval service 12-inch gun on the old battleship Texes is Chesepeake bey showed that the efficiecy of the gun makers had reached a high state. These 12-inch gues literally made e hiive of the Texas at a rnege of 12,000 yerds, or six miles. It was the longest renge at which actuel shooting had ever been done. Eight to nine miles is about the maximum for these gues.

The new 14-inch gue's weight is 63.6 toes. The diemeter at the breech or butt is 47 leches and at the muzzle 24 leches. The cost of the gun eet breech is $74,770. The carriage upon which the gun will be mouoted is the turret of the vessel will cost $50,000.

Army Regulations Are Being Modified

ARMY regulatioes are being changed for the heeefit of the enlisted mee. The old rules which have added to the hardships of the common soldier are being modified to keep pece with modern ideas of humenity and justice, and, in the course of a short time, it is hoped that conditioes will be so fer improved that desertions will be practically unknown and reeelistment will be geeerel. Gen. Leonard Wood, chief of staff, is working out the proposed changes and his efforts have the sympathy of Presidest Taft ever since his eesistefrolice as secretary of war has been leterested le the enlisted mee.

As long es the ancient regulations continued le force, both President Taft and General Wood agreed, little real ameliorative of the soldier's condition could be brought about. As long es young soldiers were sent to jail and herded with criminals for trivial offeeses, they believe, the army would continue to be shunned by a large class of desirable men who would otherwise be inclined to enter the service.



One of the first reforms to be inaugurated was that of the sentences administered for slight infrecfions of army law. The most common of these offenses now, as it has been for many generations, is desertion, and most of the desertions are unintentional.

Under the new system the punishment for mild cases of desertion is merely a deprivitice of leeve, extra work or the cuttieg off of special allowances. The punishmee is only to be used for reel offenders and the military prison for herdened criminels.

The Progress of Our Game Protection

THE report of Dr. T. S. Palmer of the government's biological survey on "The Progress of Game Protection" is an exceedingly interesting document. It hears every evidence of careful study of conditions. Its conclusions set down which in no way can be attributed to guesswork. It can be accepted as accurate and authentic. Doctor Palmer is known to scientists as e man of method with an innate love of the subtips of which he is making a life study.

Deer, moose, elk and other big game of pronounced economic value are increasing in numbers. With the awakened interest in their protection and with the constant improvement in laws intended to save useful species there are sound reasons for the belief that future generations of Americans will know the animals that man today knows, and that legitimate sport will be possible in the years to come. The movement for the conservation of the natural resources of this country takes full heed of the necessity for the preservation of the wild birds and mammels.

Some few species of big game perhaps ere bound to disappear, or to survive only le a semi-domesticated state, animals which live in the cogge a part or a whole of the time will survive es long as lew is enforced and forests continue to grow.

The government hes control only of such game animels as are to be found in the territory directly under federal rule.

Notwithstanding this limited authority the additional protection given the wild life in recent years by the several states is due largely to the efforts of the officials of the United States biological survey.

VERSATILITY IN THE ARMY.

Is there anything that cannot be done by officers of the United States army? And done exceptionally well? There is nothing. For example, take Colonel Goethals and watch him construct the Panama Canal with ease and grace after various civilians had tried their hands at the job without achieving any glittering success. Then take the five bachelor lieutenants at Fort Screven, Georgia, who gave a clambake dinner party, the particulars of which we find in the Army and Navy Journal. It was a surprise party. It was given in the Bachelors' Club. The service publication which makes known the achievements of these heroes justly remarks that "a great deal of praise is due the bachelors for having given such an elaborate party without the assistance of the ladies of the post," says the Chicago News. For example: "The dining-room and den, in themselves very handsome, were lavishly decorated with carnations and ferns. The beautiful pale pink flowers were massed in profusion on the mantel and library table in the den. In the dining-room a large vase, filled with the same gorgeous flowers adorned the table. As a souvenir of the occasion a large bouquet, tied with pink tulle, was presented to each of the young ladies present. A delightful Welsh rabbit was served with dainty sandwiches, and a delicious ice was served during the evening." Is it not plain that these bachelors are artists and poets as well as warriors? What bachelor outside the service could tie a bow of pink tulle around a bouquet? Doubtless, also, any one of the five, like Cyrano, could compose a ballade while preparing to transfix an enemy on the point of his service sword. Gentlemen, a toast, standing, to the army men who can concoct a Welsh rabbit which will not kill either at close or long range.

"A little harmless flirting with nice people with whom you are acquainted will do much to vest the tired mind after the arduous duties of the school room." This is one of the suggestions to young women schoolteachers made by an elderly lady on relinquishing her position as teacher in the Boston public schools after 49 years' service. "Be a live wire every minute, and don't eat too much," is another bit of advice. This kind of advice from a learned and experienced school "marm" will make most people "sit up and take notice," for in our opinion it is much worse than indiscreet, to say the least, says the New Orleans Picayune. As a cure for brain fag, dirigible is entirely new to us, though some years ago we heard it highly recommended for other ailments, and we thought it pleasant to "take." Wonder how this teacher held her job for 49 years? She must have had a strangle hold on it.

A Hindu philosopher and scholar who has been visiting this country declares we have all the heathens we can manage at home, and that the money sent abroad to make converts is wasted and could be better spent in missionary work among the "Greeks at our own doors." He also made some caustic comments on practical Christianity in the United States. Sometimes the critical mind is always unexpected but comprehensive accuracy of observation of Western superiority.

The object of the organization which calls itself the Non-Smokers of America is to secure the enforcement of laws, ordinances, regulations and rules against smoking in public places in the United States. The man who endeavored to incorporate it in New York include several distinguished educators. However, they were careless in drawing up their application. There was no statement from the would-be incorporators that they had not made application for incorporation before. For this reason, Judge Giegerich danied the application. But the non-smokers can begin over if they choose.

A Brooklyn woman refused to obey an order of the Supreme court to allow her divorced husband to visit their baby, and the justice whose authority was thus defied, asked: "What are we going to do about it?" Being a jurist of wide experience and knowledge of human nature, he admitted that all the courts going were no match for a woman once her mind was made up.

The amount collected at the port of New York from fines, penalties and forfeitures amounted to over $2,000,000. Honestly, from this showing, is not only the best policy, but also the cheapest in the end.

A Washington woman has applied to the courts to get her alimony increased because she is unable to live on $600 a month. The courts might recommend a course in domestic economy and let the baby go.

CANADA NOW JUGGLES WITH IT

VETO BILL PASSED

LORDS PASS MEASURE BY VOTE OF 131 TO 114 AFTER STORMY DEBATE.

LORD ROSEBERY AN OPPONENT

Threat to Create Scores of New Peers Again Is Made by Government Before Final Ballot Is Taken in Upper House.

London.—The house of lords passed the veto bill by a vote of 131 to 114. Thus the creation of new peers has been averted. The resolution to pay members of the house of commons $2,000 annually for their services was also carried by a vote of 258 to 163.

After days and days of discussion, in which necessary business of the government has been hopelessly sidetracked, Lord Morley came out with the plain statement that unless the bill as originally sent to the lords was passed the king had signified his willingness to create enough new peers to prevent the Liberals from being hampered by a Tory majority in the house of lords.

Morley read the statement slowly from a paper on which it was written and there was not a whisper in the house while he was speaking. The lords were up against a wall and, although few in the chamber at all relished the manner the majority of them voted for it rather than accept the alternative which has been held before them ever since their leaders declared they would veto the veto bill even as they had the budget, because of all their woes.

Old friends of the government lined up with its foes in the debate preceding the taking of the vote, and Conservative peers, seeing the result of a continued opposition to the administration, took the lesser of the two evils presented them.

The debate immediately preceding the taking of the vote was short and marked by the bitter speeches of Unionist opponents.

Lord Rosebery, who spoke for the first time since the veto bill was introduced in the upper house, denounced the government for having gone to "a young and inexperienced king, not yet five months upon the throne, to ask for guarantees to pass a bill that had not even passed its first reading in the house of commons."

DEATH TAKES JOHN W. GATES

LEGAL KIDNAPING HIT

CONGRESS URGED TO CHECK HASTY EXTRADITION.

Senate Special Committee Files Report Apparently Based on Haywood and McNamara Cases.

Washington.—The process of "legal kidnaping," as in the labor cases of Moyer, Haywood and McNamara, was condemned in a report presented by the senate select committee appointed to investigate the third degree methods of the police authorities of the United States. Senator Borah presented the report on behalf of the committee.

The committee said the practice of hurrying accused men from one state to another without giving them an opportunity to be heard should be prevented by prohibiting extradition until after a lapse of a certain number of days or by some other effective plan.

The only other recommendation was the cessation of "jury shadowing" by the secret service men. The inquiry did not extend to the police methods of the state or cities, the committee believing its jurisdiction did not include them.

The committee's comment on irregular extraditions evidently was based on the course pursued in removing Moyer and Haywood from Colorado to Idaho on the charge of murdering Governor Steunenberg and in getting McNamara from Indiana on the charge of destroying the Los Angeles Times building, but neither instance is specifically mentioned. They were spoken of as cases in which "no opportunity was offered to test the legality of the proceedings or the jurisdiction of the court granting judgment."

BIG CROP LOSS REPORTED

Promised Corn Yield of Country Cut Third of Billion Bushels in One Month.

Washington.—The greatest decline in the condition of crops during a single month since 1901—a general slump throughout the country, due to drouth and intense heat—is indicated in the government crop report for August, published by the department of agriculture.

The report presents estimates of the damage done to all crops during July. It is the most discouraging on to general conditions that the department has issued for any single month in a decade. It indicates a yield per acre smaller than in any year during the ten-year period.

The promise of the corn crop is cut down 336,000,000 bushels, according to the report. This estimate of crop on August 1 was 2,620,321,400 bushels. This compares with a promise on July 1 of 2,956,000,000 bushels and a final yield last year of a 3,125,968,000 bushels.

The spring wheat yield is brought down from 245,000,000 bushels to an indicated crop of only 209,575,000 bushels. There was a serious loss in condition of the oats crop, the ong gested yield being 818,000,000 bushels, or 300,000,000 bushels less than the big crop of last year.

Henry C. Frick Quits U. P.

New York.—Henry C. Frick announced his resignation from the board of directors of the Union Pacific railroad. Mr. Frick's action was said to be due primarily to his decision to withdraw from all directorates except those of a few companies.

Pope Pius Is Better.

Rome.—Pope Pius X. is resting more comfortably as a result of a slight operation, his knee being punctured and a quantity of thick fluid drawn therefrom by Dr. Andrea Amici.

FAMINE IN LONDON

STRIKE LEADS TO GREAT SUFFERING IN BRITISH METROPOLIS.

TROOPS ARE ORDERED OUT

Supplies Rotting on Markets and Wharves — Police Several Clashes With Mobs—Government to Take Hand in Quelling Disturbance.

London.—A body of cavalry numbering about 7,000 entrained at Aldershot for London. Twelve special trains are ready at Aldershot to follow if necessary. This alone is sufficient to indicate the gravity of the strike situation.

Food prices have jumped from 50 to 300 per cent. out of reach of the poorer classes. There are no means to handle the thousands of tons of provisions rotting on the wharves and markets. The Thames is blocked with steamers held up by the strike. Aboard the ships are other supplies that must be had if the wheels of industry are to continue to run.

Troops Under Orders.

The military forces in the barracks near London have been augmented and orders given that the troops be held in readiness to clear the city.

The newspapers are already suffering from a shortage of paper and unless the dockmen reach a settlement several of the papers will be compelled to suspend publication.

The supply of petrol is about exhausted. Half of all the motor buses in the city have been withdrawn from service.

Great suffering is being caused by the lack of ice.

Several outbreaks have occurred, each resulting in a clash with the police.

The gravity of the situation was shown in the house of commons when Winston Churchill, the home secretary, declared that if the strike was not settled at once it would be necessary for the government to take a hand in quelling the disturbances and supplying food.

Strike Spreads to Railroads.

Not only is the strike unsettled, but it is spreading rapidly. The railway men and men of the Great Western, the Great Central and the Southeastern and Chatham railways joined the revolt, and hundreds of workers in other sections are expected to go out. The fish market at Billingsgate and the vegetable market at Convent Garden are closed.

The situation in Liverpool is fully as acute as that in London.

ACTOR LOSES LIFE IN FIRE

London Hostelry Is Destroyed and Many Americans Have Narrow Escape From Death.

London.—Fire and water ruined the beautiful Hotal Carlton, one of London's show places and the resort of the most fashionable English and American society. James R. Keene, the New York broker, and Gov. Jay W. Hunt, Frank Tinney and Maud, together with nearly 100 other Americans, narrowly escaped death in the flames.

One guest, Jamason Lee Finney, an American actor, perished. His charred remains were found beyond recognition, were found on the top floor after the fire was extinguished.

Among those who fled in their night clothes when the fire broke out was Mr. Keene, one of many thrilling incidents. The smoke quickly filled the corridors of the hotel over and he was soon overcome. His valet wrapped him in a blanket and carried him through a window out on a ledge, whence firemen carried him down a ladder to the street.

SENATOR W. P. FRYE EXPIRES

Veteran Maine Statesman Succumbs to Heart Disease at His Home in Lewiston.

Lewiston, Me.—United States Senator William Pierce Frye died at his home in the city from heart disease, aged eighty-one years.

Senator Frye was senior of the United States senate. His term of service began only ten days later than that of his former colleague from Maine, Eugene Hale, who retired last March and left Mr. Frye as the senior member of the senate in point of service.

All last winter he was ill, but went regularly to the senate and met every requirement of his work.

The death of Senator Frye means that Maine will be represented in the United States senate by two Democrats. The governor of Maine is a Democrat and he will appoint a man of his party to take the place, pending a meeting of the legislature, which is a Democratic body.

Senator Frye's wife died about ten years ago. He leaves two married daughters and a number of grandchildren.

Leader of Zionists to Retire.

Basel, Switzerland.—David Wolfsohn, leader of the Zionist movement since the death of the founder, Theodor Herzl, has decided to retire because of ill health. Prof. Otto Warburg of Berlin, a kinsman of Jacob H. Schiff, the New York banker, may succeed to this office.

Bear Floods Town's Sewers.

Chickasaw, Okla.—The sewers of this town were flooded with bear, when Sheriff Lewis and his deputies broke 185 barrels.

PERKINS IS LET OFF

HOUSE-STEEL COMMITTEE DROPS CAMPAIGN FUND QUESTION.

Financier, Who Refuses to Tell of Personal Contributions Wins His Point.

Washington.—George W. Perkins, director of the United States Steel corporation and former partner in J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., was not cited for contempt before the bar of the house by the house committee of inquiry into the affairs of the steel corporation. Neither will he be.

The committee decided at a turbulent executive session not to press questions relating to Mr. Perkins' personal campaign contributions. The inquiry into gifts of the New York Life Insurance company and the United States Steel corporation, it was said, was left in abeyance.

The committee's decision not to press the inquiry into campaign contributions was based on the conclusion that the house resolution did not give authority to go into this subject. It was said that Representative Littleton of New York isolated that the committee would transcend its power.

Chairman Stanley and his associates, it was learned, had gone to the White House to ask the president to release the reports of the commission or of corporations on the steel inquiry with a view to getting at some of the information sought by the inquiry.

President Taft, it was said, promised to give the committee all information in the possession of the bureau of corporations in regard to the steel trust which could be furnished within the law.

RECESS IN LORIMER CASE

Committee Adjourns Hearings Until Early in October When Scores Shifts to Chicago.

Washington.—A two months' recess to meet in Chicago early in October has been taken by the Lorimer investigating committee. More than 100 witnesses remain to be heard, according to present plans. Some of those are important actors in the drama. The majority are nondescript members of the Twenty-fifth general assembly, while others will be brought forward to corroborate or disprove acts in which they were not the principals. The committee started work here more than seven weeks ago, heard 40 witnesses and has canvassed a large portion of national and Illinois political history, as well as going into the Lorimer and "jack pot" scandals. It is believed that all principals have been named.

FILES CHARGES AGAINST TAFT

Dr. J. E. Buckley of Chicago Demands That President Declare War With Mexico.

Washington.—Dr. J. E. Buckley of Chicago has begun in the district supreme court the most remarkable legal proceedings on record. He asks that President Taft be arrested on a charge of treason and compelled to tell just why he does not inform congress of certain things which are now happening in Washington. In affact he has begun his action to compel the United States to declare war on Mexico, not by way of intervention, but by conquest.

Mr. Buckley claims to represent many American residents in the City of Mexico.

Dr. Buckley also alleges that President Taft has information which would have justified an army or navy demonstration a week prior to the adjournment of congress. The petitioner asks why congress was not informed.

COL. WILLIAM C. GREENE DEAD

Former Copper Magnate Succumbs to Acute Pneumonia Which Develops as Result of Accident.

Cananea, Mex.—Col. William Conell Greene, the former copper magnate, is dead from acute pneumonia which developed as a result of injuries he sustained when he was thrown from his carriage. His children and two step wife were treatrad.

Colonel Greene was one of the picturesque figures of the group of copper men who have operated in the southwest. His rise from a penniless prospector to directing genius of the Cananea copper camp was meteoric. From the time he assumed ownership here until he encountered reverses in the panic year of 1907 Greene was one of the dominant figures in the copper industry.

He was born August 26, 1853, at Duck Creek, Wis.

Chile Pays Indemnity.

London.—Augustin Edward, the Chilean minister to Great Britain, paid over to Ambassador Reid 184,697 pounds sterling, indemnity awarded the United States in the Alsop claim against Chile under the arbitral judgment of King George.

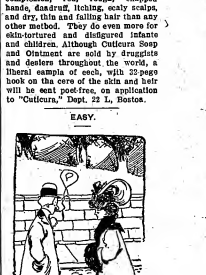
Memphis, Tenn.—Gen. George W. Gordon, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, and representative in congress from the Tenth Tennessee district, is dead here.

PHILOSOPHY TO THE RESCUE

Pat Went Without His Steak, but at That Everything Was Not Lost.

Charles Negel, secretary of commerce and labor, says the Irish race has, in addition to its sentiment and romance, a lot of philosophy as one of its characteristics.



"The best illustration I ever heard of this," he explained to a dinner party one evening, "was the case of a poor Irishman who had been given a fine, juicy piece of steak. Being a religious man, he placed the steak in front of him, and there, in the shade of the trees surrounding his benefactor's house, he folded his hands, closed his eyes, and gave thanks to heaven for the meal. When he was in the attitude of prayer, a dog rushed up and captured the steak. Pat looked around in time to see the food disappearing over the hill.

"'Thank heaven,' he exclaimed, again closing his eyes, he left me my appetite!'"—The Sunday Magazine.

TO KEEP THE SKIN CLEAR

For more than a generation, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have done more for pimples, blackheads and other unsightly conditions of the complexion, red, rough, chapped hands, dandruff, itching, scaly scalps, and dry, thin and falling hair than any other method. They do even more for skin-tortured and disfigured infants and children. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world, a liberal sample of each, with 32-page book on the care of the skin and hair will be sent post-free, on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 22 L, Boston.

NEW STRENGTH FOR BAD BACKS.

Those who suffer with backache, headache, dizziness and that constant, dull, tired feeling will find comfort in the advice of Mrs. C. S. Tyler, Candor, N. Dak., who says:

"My back became so lame and lame. I was tired and restless and could arise so exhausted I could scarcely dress. The kidney secretions were terribly annoying and my feet became so swollen I could not wear my shoes. Nothing helped me until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They gave me prompt relief and in a short time I was entirely cured."

Mr. Manton's Methods

By CLAUDINE SISSON

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

Lito was very easy for Gordon Manton, bachelor. He had the fortune left by an aunt—he had very few worries—he was a bachelor with no thought of marriage—he had no lads to keep him awake at night.

Mr. Manton could have spared the money to build three or four free libraries, but he didn't build them. In a vague way he realized that the world ought to be made better, but he knew that it was a sure thing the first man he reproved for profanity would hit him on the jaw. The poor suffered for ice in summer and for coal in winter; but the rich suffered from impostors, thieves and burglars the year round, and that appeared to be an offset.

He had only to glance near his morning paper, to see that this was a very wicked world. It ought to be so, however, to furnish a contrast to Heaven. If the world were good enough then what would become of the arguments of priests and ministers?

One summer afternoon Mr. Manton lay down on the lounge for a nap. He knew that thousands of the men around him couldn't indulge in this luxury and earn their bread at the same time, but in a sleepy way he resented that those thousands had their glasses of beer every night, while he positively disliked the liquid. He had slept for an hour when he quietly awoke to find an intruder in his room. It was a ragged girl of fifteen. She was down on her knees rifling a bureau.

"If you knocked or rang I didn't hear you," he said as he sat up.

The girl rose up and looked him in the eyes for half a minute.

He was over the roofs and through the window for me. You were sleeping so nicely I thought I wouldn't wake you up. What are you going to do with me?"

"Nothing."

"But I'm caught with the goods on!"

"Looks like it, but when the ice man, the coal man, the tailor, the grocer, the drygoods man and the shoemaker are grafting on me why should I make an example of you? The other day some one stuck me with a bogus half-dollar. Did I throw it into the ash can? No, ma'am! I went half a mile out of my way to buy cigarettes and work that coin off on the tobacconist. I'm what they call an honest man, and yet I did that."

"Then it ain't the coop for me," asked the girl.

"Not at all. That would simply be one more person behind the bars, and what would that amount to? I'm not even going to ask you to be good. To get into that window you must have incurred a big risk. I shall let you out by the door. If my landlady sees you she will raise a great howl because I let you in. Say, you're cold. I left a dollar on the rug to test her honesty and she pocketed it."

"Would you mind if I fell in love with you?" asked the girl after a long silence. "My name is Janet, and I have never met a man like you. We can't get married, of course, but I should like to be in love to see how it seems."

"Then go right ahead. You are entitled to your romance as much as any other woman."

"Thanks. I'm sorry I was going to rob you."

"Not at all. Do you find any of the trust's apologizing?"

"I most think I will give up stealing."

"Might think it over, but don't act on impulse. That is, don't give up stealing and turn to something worse, as many reformers have done. Tell you what you might do, though, to make the old town assume a more artistic look. You might wash your face and comb your hair and sew up some of the rents in your wardrobe. And now I think I will bow you out."

As he held the door open for her to pass on she was smoothing back her tangled hair and showing more self than when caught plundering. The rebuke had keyed.

Almost every morning Mr. Manton had a stroll. During an evening he sometimes sauntered through the tenement streets. On a certain evening as he sauntered he was hit across the back of the neck with a sandbag and went down. When he recovered consciousness he was in a here room, hands and feet tied, and a couple of hard-looking men waiting for the event. They had gone through him, but that was a mere trifle. They wanted five thousand dollars to give him his liberty. Mr. Manton didn't rage. It was a straight business proposition. Only that day he had read of thirteen members of a state legislature being rendered for offering to sell themselves. Was this crime worse? He didn't charge that it was. He simply refused to buy himself at the sum named.

The kidnapers were not cruel men. They simply wanted their money. They fed their captive and welted with what patience they could. And then one night came Janet. She entered by the skylight but her hands and face were clean and her hair brushed. She cast the captive loose and then said:

"I ain't stole a thing since that day."

"That's pretty fair," replied Mr. Manton.

"And don't you think I look nicer?"

"You surely do."

"It became me ist ms fall in love with you. I want to please, you know. An uncle of mine is in this job. Going to bring the cops down on him when you get out!"

"Not at all, young woman. Two weeks ago a real estate man who is called eminently respectable came near beating me out of twenty thousand dollars. Why should I blame a couple of men not so eminently respectable for trying to do me out of a quarter of that sum?"

"I guess you'll be glad to hear I've got a place in a shoe factory at four dollars a week?"

"Yes, that's good. Most all thieves, robbers and burglars admit there's no profit in their trade."

"No, only to be saved by a factory girl than by a thief, I know. I'm thinking of you most all the time. Would you care to ship up the rope and make over the roofs?"

Fifteen minutes later Mr. Manton was on the street in the walking home wards. He met several patrolmen and passed two police stations, but he had nothing to say. Janet's uncle and his pal had tried to extort money from him, which is a prison offense. He passed hundreds of buildings whose owner's were squeezing the tenants down to the last cent to pile up their own profits. Why not a law to punish them?

Two weeks later the bachelor received a scrawl on a postal card which read:

"I guess you'll be glad to hear my wages have riz to five dollars n week. Janet."

Yes; he was glad. It was three months before another card came. It read:

"My wages hae riz to six dollars e week and I have a bow, but I'm loving you still."

Then a year passed, and a third card announced a "riz" to eight dollars and "more love" and four months later the climax:

"I am now the 4 lady, and have got married to Tom Driggs, but he says I may still love you. Respectably, yours, Janet."

"And it I had pronched reform to her where would she have been!" mused the bachelor of himself as he laid down the postal. "Seems to me it's just about as well to let things work out by themselves!"

Hell.

Hail is the frozen precipitation from the air that belongs to the summer while snow belongs to the winter. Hailstones are ingotted in the air, and the ecund of an approaching or retreating hailstorm is very characteristic. Their large size permits them to acquire great velocity while falling, and this makes a hailstorm destructive. The prevailing theory as to the formation of hail is that powerful ascending air currents carry raindrops and hail snow upward, where they are frozen and chilled, forming bodies on which aqueous condensation takes place when they fall to a warm and moist stratum below. This theory explains the layering of structure often found, but does not explain the angularity of many hailstones.

Honesty Rewarded.

A charming story of a working girl's good fortune comes from High Wycomb, Buckinghamshire, England. A few days ago the girl saw something fall from a passing motor car. She immediately signaled to the occupants, who turned back, and when she handed up the "find" a sovereign was placed in her hand, to her great amazement. When asked what she would have done had she not attracted their attention, the girl said she would have taken the package to the police. The party thereupon took her for a trip to London and back to Oxford, and in the end presented her with a gold watch and chain.

BREN INDICTED AGAIN

GRAND JURY RETURNS ANOTHER BILL AGAINST FORMER STATE UNIVERSITY TREASURER.

NOW FOR "LARCENY AS BAILEE"

Mishandling of Farm School Check Alleged As Result of a New Investigation of His Books.

Minneapolis, Aug. 9. — Joseph D. Bren was indicted again by the grand jury, this time for larceny as bailee.

The indictment came as a result of the examination made of University of Minnesota accounts by John Barry, an accountant employed by County Attorney Robertson to make an examination independent of that conducted by the state public examiner's office.

The crime alleged is charged to have been committed in the early months of last year. In January, 1910, according to testimony given the grand jury by Dean Woods of the farm school, the farm school sent two checks to Bren, then in charge of all university funds. One was for $5,227 and the other for a little more than $7,000. These checks were to be turned into the university fund and credited to the farm school.

Course of Checks.

The authorities say that the larger check followed its proper course, but that the books of Bren show that the smaller one did not. It was deposited, according to the testimony, in the St. Anthony Falls bank and Bren immediately drew more than $2,000 in cash against it. Dean Woods testified in sending the checks end J. E. Were of the bank testified to corroborating them.

Later on, the books show, the money to those who have examined them, that Bren drew a check on the athletic fund for $5,227 and sent it to the auditor. This money was due, not from the athletic fund, but from the university, but the sending of the check to the state auditor, according to the claims of the prosecutor, was arranged by Bren so that it covered the deficit in the university fund caused by non-deposit of the original check.

It is on these figures and claims that the indictment of today is based, the authorities holding that the books show that the athletic fund always was a ready bank for Bren to use when in need of money to cover up other fund funds. Later on, though the authorities say the books are indefinite on this point, the $5,227 was made up to the athletic fund.

When the final break came and Mr. Bren told his story of robbery on the campus, the athletic fund was found entirely intact and the authorities believe that this was made intact at the time so as to save someone else besides Bren from embarrassment.

MANY INQUIRIES ABOUT LANDS.

People All Over the Country Interested in Cass Lake.

Many inquiries are being received from all parts of the nation by George Welsh, state immigration agent, in regard to the 32,220 acres of land to be opened to entry in the Cass Leka district at 9 A. M., August 22. Some 40,000 acres of this are called Chippewa Indian lands upon which the timber has been cut and removed.

As this tract was opened to settlement early in May of this year the greater portion has been appropriated by "squatters," who have as first legal right to enter. There are, however, many acres of velsehle land in this tract still open.

The 40,000 acres in township 157, range 28, and township 155, range 29, Koochiching county, never have been open to entry before, and all who have settled on it prior to 9 o'clock, August 22, will be treated as trespassers and have no legal right. The first legal applicant after that time will obtain the tract desired.

RING FIGHT STIRS GOVERNOR.

Prepares to Clean-Up St. Louis County as Result of Hibbing Row.

Duluth.—As an aftermath of a battle at Hibbing in which "Pat" Brown, the range light-ground champion rewarded "Chicago Heights" Gery, the governor of Minnesota is preparing to make a clean-up in St. Louis county.

"I have not heard anything about the fight as yet," said Gov. A. G. Eberhart yesterday. "I did not know that it was going to take place. If the officers knew about it and did not enforce the law there will be something doing."

Sheriff J. R. Meiuing claims he is not a sport, and says: "If I had known about the Brown-Gary fight at Hibbing I certainly would have stopped it. I never saw the bridal exhibition to the fight in the papers but they did not state the place where it was to be held."

HORSE BRINGS $12,500.

Sullivan's Lewis Forest Sold to Lon McDonald of Indianapolis.

Duluth.—Captain James Sullivan of Duluth, who sold the Potter Lewis Forest to Lon McDonald of Indianapolis last week, has returned and says the consideration was $12,500. The horse was entered at the Grand Circuit races in Grand Rapids and Detroit, winning second money in the $2,000 stake event and third in the Furniture Manufacturers' event.

WORK ON INTERURBAN LINE

Construction Company of Hastings Busy Three Rivers.

Hastings.—That Hastings will have two interurban electric lines is a possibility, but one is now a certainty, the construction work having already been started. The Interurban Construction company of Hastings will build the project for a road to be built from the end of the Twin City Rapid Transit company's line at Inver Grove, by way of Hastings, to Canton Falls and Rochester, and eventually, it is said, to Chicago. The surveys are completed and most of the right of way has been secured.

The St. Paul Promotion company some time ago had surveys made and secured right of way to build an electric road from St. Paul by way of Hastings, through the river to Nininger, and Red Wing, to Lake City. It also was granted a franchise to operate its lines here. The Interurban Construction company of Hastings will also seek a franchise. This interurban company has at present a large force of men and teams at work on the roadbed of the new trolley line, about four miles this side of Invar Grove.

The officers of the company are: President Senator A. T. Stebbins of Rochester; vice president, Edward Feldhauser of St. Paul; directors, Otto Kramm, John Hinnen and Senator Albert Schaller of Hastings, F. B. Sasger of Canton Falls; W. L. Sonntag of St. Paul, general manager.

HURLED FROM AUTO.

Woman Meets Death Near Red Wing When Automobile Runs Off Road.

Red Wing.—Mrs. Ole Jensen, 56 years old, was instantly killed in an auto accident five miles north here. The car was being driven by Oscar Christopherson and his sister, Mrs. Ed. Nord, occupied the front seat with him. Knute Heugen and Mrs. Jensen were in the rear seat.

While driving at a speed of a twenty-mile-an-hour rate of speed, it is said, and after going down along grade approaching a bridge, Mrs. Jensen was thrown off her seat. She was holding some cans in her hands, and evidently lost her balance. She fell across the rear door.

Christopherson looked around and lost control of the machine, which ran down a steep embankment, striking two telephone poles which were on each side by side. The impact of the car broke one pole off near the ground and splintered the other.

Mrs. Jensen was thrown out and her neck was broken, death being almost instantaneous. Mrs. Nord was thrown against the wind shield, and her hands and one limb were cut and bruised by the driver and the broken windshield.

Coroner Gleh and County Attorney Erickson made a trip to the scene of the accident, but deemed no inquest necessary.

TO GET MONEY BACK.

Governor Promises Legislative Relief to Klesin.

Wolf Klesin of Duluth, who bought a quarter section of Long lake, St. Louis county, when he thought he was buying land at a sale of state swamp land conducted by State Auditor Iverson May 17, will get his money back, and the sale will be set aside by the next Legislature. Mr. Klesin saw Governor Eberhart, and the Governor told Mr. Klesin that he would take the matter up with the Legislature and secure relief.

Mr. Klesin was refused redress by Auditor Iverson because it was held he explained that he had found his land to be water, and came to St. Paul to get a refund of money. Many were in the city, and his deputies told Mr. Klesin they could do nothing, but took the case to Governor Eberhart, who heard it, after hearing the case, sold the state did not wish to defraud any one and that the sale of the land would be void. Klesin had paid only $78 on the land, but he said he was figuring for a principle rather than the money.

STEER TRAMPLES ON FARMER.

Jacob Meyer's Life Saved by Dog Which Fought Infuriated Animal.

Red Wing.—Jacob Meyer, a farmer living two miles southwest of Goodhue, was perhaps fatally injured by being trampled and gored by a young steer. Mr. Meyer was attacked while in the barnyard looking after some young cattle, which accompanied him hurried at and trampled the steer and prevented more serious injuries.

Mr. Meyer's collar bone was broken, his spine sprained, and he suffered bruises over his entire body.

He was unconscious from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when he partially returned and found him lying in the barnyard. Physicians were called, and some hope is entertained for his recovery.

DUCKS KILLED BY HUNDREDS.

Lake Erith Reservation Residents Forced Resort to Game Slaughter.

White Earth.—A great many hunters have been busy the past few days with guns and dogs and the slaughter of ducks and prairie chickens has begun. Residents of the vicinity and in the neighborhood of Ogema have sent a vigorous protest to the chief executive of the state game and fish commission, urging him to adopt measures to check the unnecessary killing of young fowl.

LARGE SITES FOR NORMALS

ADDITIONAL GROUNDS AT MOORHEAD, ST. CLOUD AND MANKATO.

Members, Together With Presidents of Institutions, Well Entertained at Mankato.

Mankato.—Mankato today entertained members of the state normal board and the presidents of the five normal schools of the state, the former having here to hold the regular quarterly meeting of the board, while the presidents held their meeting in St. Paul, and, as is the usual custom, were here to meet with the board.

Plans presented by Resident Director Swanson, of the Winona normal for improvement of the grounds around the school and dormitory buildings, as well as for the laying of new walks were adopted and the work ordered started.

The contract for the purchase of additional property for the Moorhead normal also was adopted, $12,500 having been appropriated by the Legislature for that purpose. The board recommended to the attorney general that condemnation proceedings be instituted for the purchase of four lots as additional property for the school.

For St. Cloud normal the contract for the purchase of additional property was approved. The contract for repairs on the heating plant was awarded, and approved.

Site for Mankato Dormitory.

A special committee, consisting of President Torrance and Directors J. J. Washburn and John C. Wise, recommended the purchase of the H. A. Patterson and E. C. Willard tracts of land and the resulting lots in Bryn Mawr addition as a site for the new dormitory for Mankato normal. The Mankato commercial club and property designated was ordered purchased for the state. The entire board and presidents of the normals proposed to visit this site this afternoon when the purchase of additional property was decided upon.

The board adjourned for luncheon and again assembled for the completion of business at 1:30, consulting at 3:30 o'clock, when the visitors were taken for an automobile ride to the Mankato power plant and other points of interest. The directors and presidents were the guests of Resident Director Wise at a dinner served at the Elks' cafe and after which a social evening was spent.

All But Two Members Present.

E. W. Washburn, of Duluth, Resident Director Somsen, of Winona, President Ell Torrance of Mankato, Secretary C. G. Schulz, of St. Paul; Resident Director C. L. Atwood, and President W. J. Shoemaker, of St. Cloud; Resident Director L. A. Huntoon and President W. A. Weld, of Moorhead; President A. S. E. Maxwell, of Winona, and E. R. Bohannon, of Duluth, were present. Directors E. J. Jones, of Morris, and Telief Jacobson, of Alexandria, were not at the meeting. The directors and presidents will return to their homes on the morning trains.

NEED NOT ASSESS TAX

Unnecessary When Property Owners Donate for Road.

Assistant Attorney General Smith yesterday gave an opinion that where property owners of the county had to be assessed against the benefited property as provided under the new Hiwell law for construction of a new road, it is unnecessary to make a formal assessment. This will give Winona county opportunity to build $120,000 worth of new roads this year, and many more than the one-quarter necessary was raised. Farmers contributed more than $8,500.

Whether the counties will take this opportunity of doing away with the assessment is Senator J. T. Elwell would not express an opinion. The northern counties, it is thought would prefer the assessment plan.

NEGRO IS CAUGHT.

And Confesses Assault on Fourteen-Year-Old White Girl.

Atkin—A negro named Woostar is held here on a charge of assaulting a white girl 14 years old living near Malmo, a settlement twenty-five miles southeast of here, on White Lake lake. The offense is admitted by the negro. The girl has identified him. Great excitement among the people has been caused, but mob violence is not expected.

QUEER DISEASE IS IN UNITED STATES

Many Here Afflicted With Odd Ailment, Says Prof. Munyon.

GREWSOME CREATURES VERY COMMON, FINDS EXPERT.

Many people in the United States are afflicted with a queer disease, according to a statement yesterday by Professor James M. Munyon. He made the following remarkable and rather grewsome statement:

"Many persons who come and to write to my headquarters at 53d and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, Pa., think they are suffering from some rare and peculiar disease or from a failing of the digestion or an entirely different disease—that of liver worms. These tape worms are huge infernal parasites, which locate in the upper bowel and consume a large percentage of the nutriment in undigested food. They sometimes grow to a length of forty to sixty feet. One may have a dozen of these in his stomach and bowels to the cause of his or her ill health.

"Some of the most common symptom of this disease is gnawing, hungry feeling. Sometimes the person is ravenously hungry and cannot get enough to eat. At other times the very sight of food is loathsome. There is a gnawing, burning sensation at the pit of the stomach, and the victim has headaches, fits of dizziness and nausea. He cannot sleep at night and often feels as if he is suffering from hunger by day.

"I have a treatment which has had wonderful success in eliminating these great creatures from the system. In the first place it is a strengthening tonic to aid digestion, and ridding the blood, kidneys and liver of impurities. It is also a specific to these great worms. If one has a tape worm he will be relieved of it by this treatment, and although I cannot guarantee that if not the treatment will rebuild the run-down person. Hundreds have written me saying from stomach trouble and a general breakdown, after using this remedy report marvelous success here with this treatment. Fully a dozen persons have passed these worms, and they are naturally relieved of their misery. Many have written me congratulating me for my discovery and crediting their names to the public."

Letters addressed to Professor James M. Munyon, 53d and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., will receive careful attention as though the patient called in person. Medical advice and consultation absolutely free. Not a penny to pay.

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, and I had a backache every day. I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. My advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vege. table Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOOLL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

And now comes the news that the Reciprocity treaty is sure to be accepted by the Canidians. Of course it will. Would a half famished dog refuse a choice beef steak? Hardly.

We admire govenor Ebehart for not calling any extra session of the late lamented legislature, as it will save the Brewers and Railroad companys a big bill of expense for lobbist to keep their boys in line and see that they do not forget the duty they owe their owners.

Congressman Steenerson has recommded the establishment of a new post office on section 22, In the town of Star, with H.C. Iverson as postmaster. Haivor has been pretty good about provideing mail service for the new settlers on the eleven townships, which has been one of the factors to make them contented to remain and make their home here.

Presiden Taft once admitted the Payne-Aldrich Wool Tariff was "Indefensible." Now that the revision of the schedule is "put up to him" by congress he he is thinking of vetoing it because the tariff commission has not had time to send in their findings on that schedule. What were the Commissions findings on the Canadian Reciprocity tariff? Has anybody heard? None! Then why did he not vetoe that? Oh yes, only farmers' interest Involved—we see. Some difference when the wollen manufacturer, dosen't like it.—Thief River Press.

Taft is only going after the farmers to put them out of business, and next year the farmers will put him out of business, as he is serving his last term.

Icebergs and Echoes.

Icebergs are always a source of worry to the transatlantic steamship skippers. It isn't pleasant to run along through a fog or a murky night and smash into one of these floating mountains of ice. The liner captains have a way of finding ice that at first strikes the landsman as curious. When it is suspected there are bergs in the neighborhood the whistle is kept going. If there is an echo the navigator slows down and keeps a sharp eye out, for echoes don't grow in the open ocean.

Disraeli's Gorgeous Costume.

When Disraeli was a young man he once went on a vacation trip to Corfu in this extraordinary costume: "A blood red shirt with silver buttons as big as shillings, an immense scarf for girdle, full of pistols and daggers; red cap, red slippers, broad blue striped jacket and trousers. His servant, engaged for the occasion, wore a Mameluko dress of crimson and gold, with a white turban thirty yards long and a saber glittering like a rainbow."—London Spectator.

WALL STREET.

The Human Side of New York's Great Financial Quarter.

To the man who looks from without upon Wall street it seems a place of deep and dangerous mystery, a region of dens and caves and labyrinths full of perils which threaten loss and perhaps ruin to him who enters there. And such in too many instances it has proved to be. But nevertheless there is a decided human side to Wall street. It is perhaps the most "two faced" street in the world. Here men who occupy the highest pinnacle of financial success and who are powerful kings, in fact, daily brush elbows with office boys and bank messengers, "get-rich-quick" highwaymen, silly and pretty girl stenographers, curb brokers and curb merchants and sharp tongued and ready witted "newsies"—with all the motley tide that flows into "the street" each morning and ebbs back again at night.

Wall street may be said to be the most democratic street in the world, for all its vast wealth. There is no street where a crowd will gather more quickly than there, even upon the smallest pretext. It may be a street fakar selling some newfangled toy or a man gliding the ball on a flagpole 500 feet up in the air. A suffragette making a speech would transfer practically the entire population from a dozen skyscrapers to the "standing room only" in her immediate vicinity. But unless one hurries he will not get a good view of the fair creature, for soon she is lost from view in tangles of ticker tape tossed in reels from the nearby office windows, a favorite sport among the brokerage house clerks.

This sort of thing usually takes place during the noon hour, and at that time all work is suspended at the first sound of a band in the distance. Everybody flies to the curb. Business can wait in this busiest of streets for most anything before 2 o'clock, when the chimes of Trinity sound the afternoon session and "the street" settles down to its serious business of making financial history.

Such is the everyday "outside" little crooked street, "with the river at one end and a cemetery at the other," which has sent scores upon scores to one or the other—the street with a destiny.—Strand Magazine.

Ghosts Without Heads.

Speaking of ghosts, the London Chronicle says that "headless coaches" are fairly numerous in England. The most famous is the one that drives once a year, on the anniversary of Anne Boleyn's execution, up the avenue at Blickling, her Norfolk home. The coachman and the four horses have not a head between them, and Anne's own is not upon her shoulders, but she holds it in her lap as she sits in the coach all in white. At the hall door the whole apparition vanishes. Anne's father, Sir Thomas, also rides in a coach drawn by headless horses once a year, and his ride is much more exciting than his daughter's. He has to cross forty county bridges during the night and a company of yelling demons pursues the coach to keep the horses going. But how do the horses hear the noise if they have no ears?

A Shadow Fifty Miles Long.

The peak of Teneriffe projects a huge shadow stretching upward of fifty miles across the deep and partly eclipsing the adjoining islands. Exaggerated shadows of immense size are commonly seen in many other places. On the Harz mountains the so called Specter of the Brocken throws gigantic shadows of mountain climbers into the sky, repeating every movement made by them. The same occurs on the summit of Pambamarca, in Peru.

On the tops of Alpine peaks and on the summit of Ben Lomond, in Scotland, mists in one case and rarefied air in the other explain these optical illusions. The same causes produce also colored shadows, varying at each hour of the day and traceable to the dispersion of the solar rays.—Scientific American.

As to the Fireplace.

The sides of a fireplace should be well splayed or beveled in order to reflect the heat, says Arts and Decoration. The back should lean forward at the top for the same purpose, and the fireplace should not be too deep. A projecting chimney produces an effect of pushing the guest away, whereas a receding one beckons him nearer to enjoy the hospitality of the open fire. For this reason the inglenook—that is, the fireplace built into the wall of the room—is especially cozy and attractive.

A Bird Mystery.

After years of study devoted to the topic Professor Alfred Newton of Cambridge stated that without doubt bird migration is the greatest mystery in the entire animal kingdom, "a mystery," he added, "that can be no more explained by the modern man of science than by the simple minded savages of antiquity."

Inquisitiveness.

"One half the world doesn't know how the other half lives," quoted the wise guy.

"That's right," agreed the simple mug. "Men are not so inquisitive as women."—Philadelphia Record.

One Want.

"What the world is waiting for," said a man whose garments glistened, "is some sort of a simple, easily applied and inexpensive preparation that would give a dull finish to shiny coats."—New York Sun.

A RECORD FALL.

It Was Remarkable Not For Distance, but For Results.

Writing in 1841 of a fall from an immense altitude which did not result in death, a French observer, M. Manzini, declares that he had searched in vain in the annals of science for a similar case. We can well believe it.

The victim or patient was a tapissier who had been engaged in putting up decorations on the occasion of the belated obsequies of Napoleon the Great in the lofty dome of the Church of the Invalides in Paris. When busy moving a ladder on the top of a high scaffolding he overbalanced himself and, in obedience to some obscure instinct, jumped clear of the ladder and the platform, crying to his fellow workmen as only a Frenchman would, "Behold me quit!" With these cheerful words on his lips he fell eighty-two feet, bounding in one place off the roof of a little dome, which caused him to describe a second parabola in the air, and landing finally, feet first, on the slate roof of a small sacristy.

Crashing through the slates, he landed astride a rafter, where he was found sitting, surprised but coherent, for he was able to give his name and address when asked for them. He had no recollection of this and became unconscious when put to bed shortly afterward under the care of the great Pasquier. His insensibility lasted a very short time, however, and he made an extraordinary rapid recovery, having sustained no apparent injuries, either external or internal. At the end of a month Pasquier found him quite well.—London Lancet.

An Affront.

D'Auber—Your daughter paints in the Dutch school, does she not? Mrs. Newrich—Not much she don't! We pay $50 a quarter to give her private lessons at home. Dutch school indeed!—Philadelphia Record.

"Mother, do you suppose he came all the way up here just to hear me sing?"

Cruikshank's Fagin.

During the time Cruikshank was illustrating "Oliver Twist" he spent days traversing the east end of London in search of a face that would correspond with his conception of the character of Fagin. One day while standing before a mirror in his dining room "pulling faces at himself," so to speak, for the want of something better to do, he accidentally made the features for which he was looking. The picture, therefore, of Fagin is really that of Cruikshank himself.

At Last.

A well known clergyman, called to other duties, says a writer in the Western Christian Advocate, preached his last sermon before the installation of his successor. The local paper, in announcing the order of services, gave it as follows:

It would wake up some of the ditch contractors to get a go od warm dammage case brought against them, in which they was given to understand that a contract means what it says.

We may be a little slow about getting our ditches dug over this side of the river, but we are going to try to have our roads so we can travel on them when we do get them built.

We have a surplus of applications for our school, and any of our neighboring districts can get a tip where to get a teacher by applying at this office. Which do you want, first or second grade? Man or woman?

C.G. Olson, was up from Kratka Saturday evening looking up ditch matters. The farmers are getting up a protest against any further extension of time to complete the ditch running by his place. Ditch contractors have been setting on that ditch nest three years and the farmers begin to think it is time for them to hatch and get out of there.

C. Waldo spoke to a fair sized audience at the school house on Sunday evening, as the representative of the anti Saloon League. He made some good points that would be likely to put a farmer last paper to thinking. It appears from his statements that the Brewers owned a majority of the late legislature, and we guess the railroads and twin cities had the rest of them.

Women and Banking.

The cashier of a bank which has many women depositors, in speaking of them customers, said that the stock stories about overdrawn accounts and ignorance on to book methods bod become petulous. Whatever may have been the case before, women give banks no more trouble now than men. "The woman who insists on drawing money when her balance has been exhausted because there are still blank checks in her book has disappeared, and in her place we have a woman who wants interest on her money and who knows what 'call money' means," said the cashier. Referring to the "old wife," he added: "One day we did have a real case. A woman rushed in, said she had just figured up her account and found she was $200 short. Husband away—no other money—what could she do? She had brought jewels to leave as collateral, security till he returned, and then we looked up the matter and found she had over $800 to her credit."—New York Tribune.

A Dance Without a Smile.

They have a singular kind of dance conducted on the greens of country villages in Surrey. The dancers stand apart, a knot of young men here, a knot of maidens there, each one by itself and silent as a crowd of mutes. A piper breaks into a tune. A youth pulls off his cap and challenges his girl with a wave and a bow. If the girl is willing she waves her handkerchief in token of assent. The youth advances, takes a corner of the handkerchief in his hand and leads his lassie round and round. No word is spoken, and no laugh is heard. Stiff with cords and rich with braids, the girl moves heavily by default, going round and round and never allowing her partner to touch her hand. The pipe goes droning on for hours in the same sad key and measure, and the prize of merit is this "circling," as the dance is called, is given by spectators to the lassie who is all that mourner revelry has never spoken and never united.

Wanted More Converts.

Southey in his life of Wesley relates the following whimsical incident. He states that some of the opponents of these religionists in the excess of zeal against enthusiasm took up a whole wagon load of Methodists and carried them before a justice. When they were asked what these persons had done "there was an awkward silence. At last, one of the seekers said, 'Why, they pretend to be better than other people,' and, besides, they pray from morning till night."

The magistrate asked if they had been meeting also.

"Yes, Sir," an old man said; "we'll please your worship, they have been converted my wife. This was sent among them who had such a tongue, and now she is as quiet as a lamb."

"Carry them back; carry them back," the magistrate said, "and let them convert all the scolds in the town!"

Gilbert's Witty Comment.

Sir W. S. Gilbert's wit and humor were always ready. He was a fine raconteur and a good after dinner speaker. Rutland Barrington, the old Savoyard, said that "staying in Gilbert's house was like living in a literary fireworks factory."

Barrington played the Captain in "Pinafore." At rehearsal one day Gilbert, who was an autocratic and magnificent stage manager, told him to cross the stage, which represented the deck of H. M. S. Pinafore, and sit on a skylight "in a pensive attitude." Barrington obeyed orders, but unfortunately the skylight had only been rigged up temporarily, and the portly Barrington crashed through it.

"That's an expensive attitude," said Gilbert in a flash.

Wanted to Convert Utopia.

When the "Utopia" was first published it occasioned a pleasant mistake. This political romance represents a perfect but visionary republic in an island supposed to have been somewhere in the Atlantic, near those western shores.

"As this was the age of discovery," says Granger, "the learned Hadneus and others took it for genuine history and deemed it expedient to send missionaries thither to convert the people."—"Book of Queer Things."

Chattel Mortgages.

A man who gives a chattel mortgage should always examine it carefully to make sure it is not "on demand." Sharp money lenders who loan funds on chattel mortgages often try to have this clause inserted, and when it is the borrower may expect to part with his chattels at almost any moment. It is a trick by which advantage is often taken of the unwary.

Force Yourself to Be Well.

"Plant your feet firmly and squarely on the ground, throw back your shoulders, hold your arms and affirm in most emphatic terms that you are strong, healthy and well. Do this for a few minutes every evening, and, even if this is not how you actually feel, maintain by your physical and mental attitude that it is your condition, and you will soon find that it becomes so and that you are not really telling lies." This was the advice given by Dr. J. Stinson Hooker in a lecture on "Nurturing and Posing For Health" at the simple life conference and exhibition in London. "It is wonderful to what extent our state of health can be altered in this way," Dr. Hooker added. "It stirs up the currents of feeling which act on the nerves. These act on the blood vessels, and thus the whole system is improved, and we become different beings."

He Was Well Off.

H. Clay Calhoun, testifying in an assault case, spoke of one Washington White as "well off."

"Now, witness," said the cross-examining lawyer, "when you declare White to be well off, what do you mean? Is he worth $10,000?"

"No, sah. Oh, no, sah," said Calhoun. "He is worth $5,000?"

"No, sah. Mah, gracious, no!"

"Is he worth $1,000?"

"No, sah; he ain't worf 17 cents."

"Then how is he well off?"

"Bekase, sah, his wife am as a No. 1 washlady and keeps de hull family in bangup style."—Exchange.

HE'S THE ORIGINAL GROUCH

Surely Would Be Hard to Please Old Gentleman With This Kind of Disposition.

There is in Washington an old "grouch" whose son was graduated from Yale. When the young man came home at the end of first term, he exulted in the fact that he stood next to the head of his class. But the old gentleman was not satisfied.

"Next to the head!" he exclaimed. "What do you mean? I'd like to know what you think I'm sending you to colleges for? Next to the head! Why aren't you at the head, when you ought to be?"

At this the son was much crestfallen; but upon his return, he went about his work with such ambition that at the end of the term he found himself in the coveted place. When he went home that year he felt very proud. It would be great news for the old man.

When the announcement was made, the father contemplated his son for a few minutes in silence; then, with a shrug, he remarked:

"At the head of the class, eh? Well, that's a fine commentary on Yale university!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Family Enough.

Horace, five-year-old, has a brother nine, and a sister three, and with his father and mother, he deemed this family large, enough. When, therefore, he was told by his aunt that a little baby was to be added to the family, he protested:

"I think papa and mamma might better spend their money for more strawberries and powdered sugar for me," he observed, indignantly.

On a certain day a doctor came to the house and Horace thought he knew what that meant. His spirit of revolt nearly got the better of him, however, when a second doctor came. A few hours later, after the doctors had departed, his Aunt Ella told him he had a new little brother. Horaces brightened, and tiptoed to his mother's room. "It's all right, mamma," he assured her. "There's only one."

To Be a Good Cook.

To be a good cook means the knowledge of all fruits, herbs, balms and spices; and of all that is tasteful and sweet in fields and groves, savory in meats; it means carefulness, inventiveness, watchfulness, willingness and readiness of appliance; it means the economy of your great-grandmothers and the science of modern chemists; it means much tasting and no wasting; it means English thoroughness, French art and Arabian hospitality; it means, in fine, that you are to be perfectly and always mistress (lord given), and you are to see that everybody has something nice to eat"—Ruskin.

A Complication.

Bessie found getting well much more tiresome than being sick. She was becoming very impatient about staying indoors and eating soups.

When her aunt asked her how she felt she replied that she was much better; that the doctor had found something else the matter with her.

"Why, what is it?" asked the aunt. "I think the doctor said 'convalescence.'"

A Mystery.

AT THE PARSONAGE.

Coffee Runs Riot No Longer.

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching and would have periods of sick ness, while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

"We naturally sought relief by drugs without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases another drug (coffee) sets up, particularly, so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally we thought we would try leaving off coffee and using Postum. I noticed that my headaches disappeared like magic, and my old "nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'

"Once can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both coffee drinkers and sufferers.' Their headaches left entirely a short time after they changed from coffee to Postum.

"I began to enquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Pig and the Man

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prospector in a western mining town. They propose to elope in a blinding blizzard but are confronted by the maudlin husband. He is shot by the wife, but the chivalrous boy takes a note to the body taking the crime upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the women's horse falls exhausted; the young man puts her on his own and follows hanging to the stirrup straps. Seeing he is an impediment, the woman thrusts her escort into a snow drift and rides on. Amid-frozen he stumbles into the railroad station just as the train bears the woman away. Twenty-five years later, this man, George Gormly, is a multi-millionaire in New York. He meets Eleanor Haldane, a beautiful and wealthy settlement worker, and co-operates with her in her work. Gormly becomes owner of a steamship line and finds himself frustrated in plan and track extension plans by grafting aldermen, backed by the Gotham Traction Company. An automobile accident near the country house, on a stormy Christmas Eve, brings Gormly and Eleanor with the members of Miss Haldane's family. Finally he makes the marooned party comfortable and referring to a worse storm he once experienced in the west, offers to notify the people at the Haldane place of the accident. An automobile accident near the Haldane place on a stormy Christmas Eve brings Gormly in contact with the members of the Haldane family.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

He had never seen her except in the quiet conventionality of a street dress. He had imagined her in all sorts of poses. What she burst upon him that way however, the slight dazzled him. It was so far beyond any dream he had ever indulged that he could scarcely comprehend it. He stopped and stared at her. For once his keen control deserted him. There was that frank, open admiration in his glance of which no one could mistake the meaning.

"You must pardon my surprise," said Gormly; "I have never seen you in an evening gown, and I confess my imagination unequal to—"

"Do you like it?" said the girl nervously.

"I am scarcely conscious of it, Miss Haldane," he returned directly. "I see only you."

"I thought we would be relatively unobservant," she said lightly, recovering her equipoise, "for a man whose business it is to buy and sell such things not to notice them."

"In your presence tonight, Miss Haldane, business is so far from me as if it was on the other side of the world. It is on the other side of the world. You continued swiftly: "for this is a different world from any in which I have ever moved, and I—"

His speech was broken by the entrance of Mrs. Haldane and Miss Stewart. The latter was a fragile, graceful, charming girl, who would have attracted instant attention and notice anywhere, except beside her regal companion and friend. Mrs. Haldane was a not unworthy compliment to the other two. Those two also were wearing elaborate dinner gowns.

At this moment Haldane, followed by the two other men, came in from the library.

"Mr. Gormly," began Haldane, seeing her, "I am unable to get anybody over the telephone."

"I am sorry to hear that. I suppose that the wires are down on account of the storm."

"Exactly. Meanwhile, I scarcely know what to do. Could you send a man on a horse over to my place?"

"I should be glad to do so, did I possess the horse."

"The pair that brought me up from the lodge?"

"Neither is broken to saddle, I believe, and—but I can send a man over on foot. I have no doubt—"

"I hardly think that would be possible," interposed Dr. Devereux. "I should not like to be responsible for any man on foot in such a storm as this."

"I'll go myself," said Gormly quickly.

"You, Mr. Gormly!" exclaimed Mrs. Haldane. "Why, we couldn't think of such a thing. The danger!"

"Madam, I have been afoot in worse storms than this," he answered, "when I was a mere boy in the far west."

It was the first intimation anybody from New York had had as to any period of Gormly's life outside of New York, and one of the company at least pricked up his ears at this remark and listened attentively.

"We couldn't think of allowing you to do so," said Miss Haldane.

"I suppose that pair you have could hardly take us over?" questioned Livingstone Haldane.

"I am afraid not," answered Gormly. "They have been driven rather hard today, and they are a light pair at best, as you notice."

"Well, we are thrust upon you, then, marooned as it were."

"I hope you won't find my house the typical desert island," answered Gormly, smiling. "Indeed, I scarcely know what the resources of the establishment are, having entered into possession only today; but whatever they are they are at your service."

"There's no help for it, I suppose," answered Haldane somewhat gloomily. "I guess you will have to keep us until morning."

"Think how happy you make a lonely old bachelor," returned Gormly, "in being his Christmas guests. And if you will accept this situation, as indeed I fear you must, I shall make arrangements so that you can be taken to your own place on Christmas morning. Let me consult my butler, who was Mr. Goodrich's major domo before I bought the place, and see what can be done."

A brief conversation with that functionary threw some little cheer over the situation. Gormly's own wardrobe, which had been sent down, would amply supply the man with whatever they needed, and the butler imparted the cheering news that the lodgekeeper was a married man with two grown daughters, and he had no doubt that such things as the women required might be secured from them.

"Send at once," said Gormly quickly, "and ask Mrs. Bullen to come up to the house and to, also, bring her daughters with her. Tell her that I desire she can to the ladies. How are we off for hairbrushes?"

"Plenty of them, sir, and all ready for guests."

"Well, see that they are prepared, and have Mrs. Bullen here immediately."

As the butler went off to attend to the orders, Gormly sauntered the room and found the whole party completely gathered about the fire. He explained that he had found a woman on the place, the lodgekeeper's wife, that he had sent his station wagon for her; and that she would be present doubtless within a half hour with such indispensable articles of attire as might serve to make the women guests at least comfortable.

"If we were only in communication with your shop, Mr. Gormly," said Mrs. Haldane—and whether she meant to be offensive or not Gormly could not tell—"we would lack nothing."

"I am sorry for your sake, madam, that I am not. As it is, we shall have to do our best with the limited resources at hand."

Conversation ran on desultorily this way for a short time, when the butler announced the arrival of Mrs. Bullen. As he did so, the tall clock musically chimed out the hour of nine.

"Now that your woman is here, Mr. Gormly," said Mrs. Haldane, rising, "be I am somewhat fatigued from the ride and the experience, I shall retire to my room. I suppose you young people won't think of going to bed at this unearthly hour?"

"No, indeed," answered Miss Stewart. "I think I'll stay awake until Christmas."

"Will you go, Beekman?" said Mrs. Haldane, addressing her husband.

"Why—no—my dear—"

"I was about to propose a table of bridge," said Dr. Devaux?"

"An excellent idea," returned Haldane quickly; "but there are six of us here and—"

"I don't play," said Gormly quickly. "I'll stay out also," said Eleanor. "I don't care much for bridge myself."

"Good night," said Mrs. Haldane, moving away, escorted by the butler, and met outside presently by Mrs. Bullen.

"Mr. Gormly and I will watch your guests," said Eleanor.

"By the way, Eleanor, may I ask where you met Mr. Gormly?" queried her father.

"He is very much interested in our social settlement work. Many of his employees live in his vicinity. Our new settlement house we are building, and I have had occasion to consult him of his office a great many times."

"Ah," said the elder man reflectively, wondering how much might be behind that entirely innocent statement.

Meanwhile a footman arranged a card table, at which the quartet took their places and instantly became absorbed in the game. Miss Haldane manifested no special interest in the play, and at Gormly's suggestion she and Miss Stewart went with him into the inviting little library through the broad open doors that gave access to the fire. The latter was the true burning there. He drew a low chair before it in which she sat down. He himself stood with his arm resting on the mantel, looking down on her.

The two were in plain sight from the other room; but as they talked in low tones their conversation was inaudible in the hall. Haldane glanced frequently from time to time; but finally, becoming absorbed in his game, paid them no further notice.

CHAPTER IV.

Miss Haldane is Charmed and Charmer.

"Mr. Gormly," began Miss Haldane, "I have not seen you for some time."

"Not for many days, many weeks, many days, Miss Haldane," answered Gormly quietly.

"Precisely!" exclaimed the astonished girl. "How pat you have the time! Do you keep a calendar of my visits at your office?"

"I have a marvelous memory for details which I wish to remember," said the man.

"And I am so much interested in—in settlement house matters—How does it progress, by the way?" he continued, gravely as if his recollection of anything connected with her was a mere matter of course.

"Oh, beautifully. You see, there is nothing to consult you about now. It is all in the architect's and builders' hands. You have been so helpful to me I really don't know what I should have done without you."

"And you have, of course, respected my confidence? No one knows anything about my connection with the enterprise?"

"No one at all."

"Not even your father?"

"Certainly not. I never discuss business with my father, nor does he discuss business with me."

"Indeed!" said Gormly quickly, "I should think he might discuss business with you to advantage."

"What do you mean?" asked the girl.

"I see a business man, Miss Haldane, accustomed to deal with men and women in a business way, and much younger than himself, who has seldom the capacity of those with whom I work. I have not often seen a woman, young as you are, with a better head for business than you have."

It was the dottiest thing the man could have said to her. Women, she knew, were not naturally businesslike, and to have such qualities attributed to her was the ambition kind of flattery. It came, too, from a man who was a power in the business world, and—was therefore the more valuable.

"Is it very good of you to say that," said the girl, smiling pleasantly in appreciation, "and I am more proud of it because, everybody says, you are such a good business man yourself."

"I should like to do something really worth while," said the girl after a little pause. "I like people who do something worth while."

"So do I," said the man, with obvious meaning.

"Mr. Gormly," she exclaimed impetuously, "why don't you do something worth while?"

Gormly smiled. "My dear young lady," he answered—really, he was old enough to be her father, he thought half sadly, as he noted the form of speech—"I have the largest store in the world. I have agents in every civilized country and many that are uncivilized. I own and control a fleet of steamers. I have my private woolen mills, and silk mills and factories. I suppose there are ten thousand people in my employ. I can give you a check for another million for your settlement work as often as you wish it, and—"

"There are all very well, Mr. Gormly," said the girl gravely, "They spell tremendous material success; they show your ability and acumen; in the eyes of the world they count for a great deal; indeed, I find lately that they are counting more and more, but they don't really amount to anything after all. What is money, what are power and influence? My father, for instance, was born with more than he could possibly spend, more than he knew what to do with, inherited from thrifty ancestors who had the wit to buy land when it could be bought for a song. He has influence, power. What does it amount to? I want him to do something, really to do something in the world for the good of mankind. I am preaching to you just as I preach to him."

"Do you look upon me as you would a father?" asked Gormly quickly.

"Why, no, not exactly. Certainly not," answered the girl.

"I am forty-four, you know."

"No, I didn't know; but what if you are? You are still a young man. My father is fifty-five, and I don't call him old."

"Wonderful consideration from twenty-two!" said Gormly smiling.

"Well," resumed the girl, "I was saying that you ought to do something in life. You have made yourself. You started with little or nothing. If I may believe the newspaper accounts of you."

"Have you been reading them?"

"Every word," answered the girl. "I was quite proud of being able to say to my friends that I knew you and what they said about you was true."

Never in his life had Gormly been happier than at this frank, spontaneous expression of approval.

"You ought to put those great talents of yours at the service of your fellow man; not in buying and selling, but in doing something for them," she ran on.

"Don't you think that in selling them the honest product at a fair profit, in telling them the strict and only, truth about what you have to sell, in allowing them the utmost freedom of return and exchange, in providing generously for employees, is doing service to your fellow creatures?"

"Certainly, it is It is doing service to the little world which you touch, the great world perhaps more than most of us can touch. But I want you to do something. I want every man and every woman who has the ability to do something, in a great, splendid way."

"But what would you have me do?"

"I don't know," answered the girl. "I don't know what I would have anybody do; but there are so many things to be done, so many wrongs to be righted, so many things to be achieved. The great man goes out and makes opportunities. Part of his greatness, part of his service is seeing what there is to do. Ruskin says somewhere that the greatest thing anybody can do is to find something. If I were a man or woman, I could answer your question better, but I am a girl."

"I think you are a great woman," said Gormly softly, "and I would be perfectly willing to take your answer and abide by it."

"I would not have it that way," answered the girl decisively. "When my father asks me what I would have him do, I say to him, 'Go and see.' He laughs at me most people laugh at me. You don't, Mr. Gormly."

No More Room.

The elevator slipped rapidly by one floor after another, while many lights flashed. A large office building rang the bell and demanded to be carried to the street. It was the soon hour and every one at the elevator shaft was anxious to get luncheon.

The elevator seemed to be only half filled. Actually there were three girls and a man in it who had got on at the fifteenth floor.

"Filled up," shouted the operator, as he sped by the angry crowd at the door.

Finally he reached a floor where one of the officers of the company had engaged a room, and the man was there and wanted to go down. He shouted to him, "Filled up," and the man said something else.

Then the operator added:

"Filled up with hats."

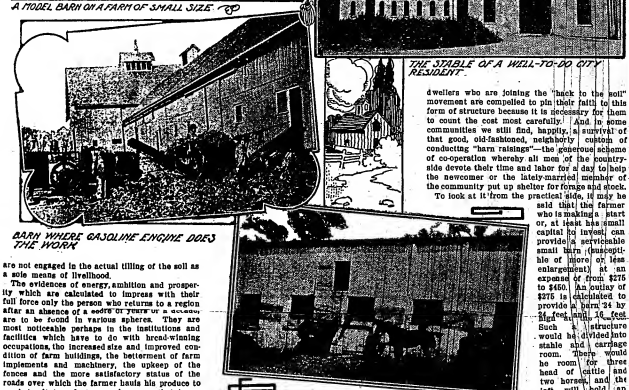
MODERN BARNS AND STABLES



A TRAVELER journeying today through any rural district in the United States and contrasting conditions with what prevailed in the same locality 20 years ago, or even ten years ago, is likely to be astonished by the improvement and development on every hand. There are very few farming communities of which this is not true, and probably in almost the same degree may the evidences of progress be noted in the small towns and villages where the inhabitants though indirectly dependent upon the agricultural industry are not engaged in the actual tilling of the soil as a sole means of livelihood.

The evidences of energy, ambition and prosperity which are calculated to impress with their full force only the person who returns to a region after an absence of a score of years or a quarter are to be found in various spheres. They are most noticeable perhaps in the institutions and facilities which have to do with bread-winning occupations, the increased size and improved condition of farm buildings, the betterment of farm implements and machinery, the upkeep of the fences and the more satisfactory status of the roads over which the farmer hauls his produce to market. It is safe to say, however, that in no division of farm life has the twentieth century disclosed new possibilities to the extent that such expansion has been manifested in the architecture and construction of barns and stables.

The barn has always been a most important asset of the farmer or stock raiser. Society folk, ignorant of the relative importance of things on a farm, have been wont to criticise many a farmer because he expended far more money on his barn than he did upon his residence. From the standpoint of the farmer, however, there has always been ample justification for such a course. A barn represents an important business expenditure, a source of livelihood, whereas a dwelling is in considerable measure if not a luxury at least a vehicle of comfort. Accordingly the farmer, if he has the thrift and foresight and judgment for which his class are proverbial, is apt to argue, when setting up for himself, that it is the pair of wisdom to procure the best possible facilities in the form of shelter for his crops and stock and to bide his time in indulging the longing for a fine house. And, be it added, the average rural housewife, particularly if she was raised on a farm, has readily concurred with her husband's view as to the wisdom of thus attending to business first and pleasure afterward.

Gradually it has come about, however, that in none save the most newly-developed sections of the country is there noticeable that old disparity between the appearance of the farm home and its accompanying barn. The prosperity that has come to the American farmer in later years is been mainly responsible. With an opportunity to derive something like his proper share of the profits of his toil he has "spruced up" things generally around the old homestead. Like as not he has invested in an automobile and a high-priced graphophone or a player-piano, but whether or not he has gone to the limit of luxuries in that direction he is pretty certain to have made the farm home worthy of his family and of his prosperous condition—either enlarging or rebuilding the old house or else putting up a new house that is modern in every respect.

But while these other adjuncts have been catching up with the farm barn it must not be supposed that the barn itself has been standing still in the march of progress. If we may express it that way. It is not so much that the present-day barn or stable is larger than its predecessor of a decade ago—except, of course, in the case of large estates or bonanza farms. On the contrary there seems to be some tendency to reduce the size of such buildings. This tendency, which is not yet by any means universal, is explained by various circumstances. For one thing it has become the fashion to provide various separate storage structures and outbuildings which take care of some of the farm yield for which space had formerly to be provided in the barn. Thus, too, the automobiles of the up-to-date farmer of today take up less space than did the various carriages, buggies, light wagons and carriage horses of the farmer in proportionately easy circumstances some years ago.

But if country barns have not necessarily been following the example of city skyscrapers in growing bigger and bigger, they have undergone a wonderful transformation in durability, convenience or arrangement, etc. The farmer who can afford it nowadays is likely to put up a concrete barn with a slate roof—and in some localities the cost is very little more than a frame structure, to say nothing of the saving in upkeep, as for instance the expense of frequent paintings. Of course, the great argument in favor of the concrete structure is its fireproof character. The old-time farmer with no fire-fighting facilities always contended that he might as well put up a frame barn, because if the contents caught fire it was unlikely that the structure could be saved even if it was built of brick or stone. This may have been true to some extent in the old days, but it is not the condition nowadays. The thoroughly equipped farm in this generation has some fire-light equipment on the place and facilities for summoning more by rural telephone. The chances are ten to one that in a solid concrete barn, a fire, if the alarm be given in good season, can be localized or at least can be subdued ere it does much damage to the building. Furthermore, with electricity for lighting purposes—a condition that now prevails on hundreds of farms where there is water power on the place or a near-by trolley line—there is much less danger of fire in the barn than there was in the old days of lanterns.

Whereas, the new-fangled barn with all its fancy frills is an accomplished fact in many sections of the country, it should be noted that the old-fashioned frame barns—the kind that can be quickly constructed at modest expense—are yet being erected by the hundreds every year in the more recently developed sections and wherever we find the ambitious young man launching out as a farmer on a small capital. Indeed, many of the city dwellers who are joining the "back to the soil" movement are compelled to pin their faith to this form of structure because it is necessary for them to count the cost most carefully. And to some communities we still find, happily, a survival of that good, old-fashioned, neighborly custom of conducting "barn raisings"—the generous scheme of co-operation whereby all men of the countryside devote their time and labor for a day to help the newcomer or the lately-married member of the community put up shelter for forage and stock.

To look at it from the practical side, it may be said that the farmer who is making a start or, at least has small capital to invest, can provide a serviceable small barn (susceptible of more or less enlargement) at an expense of from $275 to $450. An outlay of $375 is calculated to provide a barn 24 by 32 feet in size. Such a structure would be divided into stable and carriage room. There would be room for three head of cattle and two horses, and the loft will hold approximately ten tons of hay. If prosperity comes to a farmer starting out with such a barn he has only to erect sheds on either side of the main structure to be enabled to increase the capacity of the structure to 15 head of stock or more.

For the sum of $450 it is figured that a farmer can erect a barn 37x34 feet in size with a height of 12 feet at the eaves and about 30 feet at the peak. The first floor plan of such a barn provides for four horse stalls and three double cow stalls, while a shed with side open and intended to open into a small yard affords additional room for stock. A clear space, 12 by 37 feet is left down through the center and will accommodate several vehicles or implements as well as leaving room for a considerable amount of forage at the rear end. The loft will accommodate tons of loose hay and there is a granary about seven by eight feet in size. When the intention is to feed cattle or sheep it is recommended that the entire side of the barn be left unsided, affording a shed 37 by 11 feet with feed racks along the inner side, which may be conveniently fed from the center space or from the loft, as desired.

Many farmers all over the country yet have a strong liking for what is known as the basement barn—where the structure is to be erected on the side of a hill. Many objections have been raised against this type of barn, but the experts of the United States department of agriculture declare that the objectionable features can be guarded against in construction. The principal objection always advanced is that a bank barn necessitates a basement stable, which it is claimed by some persons is at most certain to prove dark, damp and unhealthful. Experts claim, however, that if there be selected a hillside sloping south and ample doors be provided, together with low windows, it is at all possible there will be ample ventilation and abundance of sunshine, whereas the rising land to the north will protect the stabling from the cold. In storing forage in this type of barn the teams can be driven in on the main floor without climbing a steep ascent, and hay and fodder put away on the same floor with a minimum of labor.

The wealthy proprietors of many of the luxurious estates which have been erected in the United States in increasing numbers of late years have erected barns and stables that have in many instances cost thousands of dollars each. As a rule living quarters are provided on the second floor of such a building for the coachman and stable employes.

In the towns and cities there is noticeable an even stronger inclination than in the country districts to erect concrete stables. The approved form of construction and the most thoroughly fireproof is the monolithic or solid concrete or else constructed of concrete blocks, but concrete or stucco on brick is also good and very economical by reason of the fact that old brick may be used. Finally, there is resort to concrete on metal lath by those who desire the most inexpensive form of concrete construction.

SHE BEGAN WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN POLAND.

The semi-centennial of Pauline Kuczalska has just been celebrated by the women of Poland. It was Pauline Kuczalska who started the woman's rights movement in Poland. As a young girl she taught poor girls at home. Her pupils numbered 120 and she taught them in classes of four and five each. The second step in her work was to found the committee of the third sewing school, which soon outgrew its narrow bounds and became the Society of Woman's Work. This became the Woman's Mutual Aid society.

Shortly after attending the Woman's Right's congress in Paris in 1878 she began to collect in her little drawing room women from all sections of her country. Here she started the Women Land Owners association, the Association of Bookkeepers and several other organizations of women. At the jubilee of the Polish authoress, Orzeszkoda, she organized the first Polish Women's congress. In 1895 she collected 4,000 signatures to a petition for municipal suffrage for women in Polish cities.

The FAN and the UMPIRE

AMERICAN LEAGUE UMPIRE

GET your glasses on."

"You better consult an optician."

"Don't we ever get a close decision?"

"Who ever told you that you could umpire?"

"Back to the ribbon counter for you very shortly, Percy."

"Say, honest, how much are you getting for throwing the game?"

"Don't you know enough to retire when you have gone totally blind?"

"You certainly must have something on your hose to hold your job."

"The only thing about you that looks like an umpire is your mask and protector."

"You better start to run for the back fence as soon as the game is over, for we are going to get you."

These, and a few million more "complimentary" expressions of a like nature are hurled at the umpire during the course of a closely contested game.

It is really strange and wonderful into what a frenzy the average baseball fan can work himself during the progress of an exciting game. It is almost incredible to think what he will do or say when the imagines the umpire has made a wrong decision that has apparently put his club out of the running.

Prominent attorneys, distinguished doctors, well-known actors, staid business men, in fact men of all classes, will invariably jump to their feet at what they consider a "punk decision," and shake their fists violently, utter all kinds of incoherent remarks, and insist that nothing will satisfy their thirst for revenge but the life blood of the poor, defenseless umpire. The next day, when some one meets one of the frenzied rooters, and in a joking way expostulates to him how he acted and tells him some of the things he said about the umpire, Mr. Loyal Rooter takes a row then and there that he will never again open his mouth at a ball game, no matter how thrilling the situation. Perhaps the very next afternoon, if the proper occasion arises, he will unknowingly commit the very act of the previous day.

Civic pride is to be admired in all things. A baseball fan who doesn't want to see the home club win is a rare specimen indeed. Perhaps it might be well for him to have his sanity investigated. Desire to win at any cost however often makes intelligent persons absolutely unfair in their views and opinions.

The extent to which the fan will allow his civic pride to dominate his opinion was well illustrated to me one day last year. While on my way to the hotel after a particularly brilliant game, which the home team had lost by a score of 1 to 0, after a desperate struggle, I was much amused at the conversation of a number of two-by-two's I saw who happened to be in the same car.

It was the unanimous opinion of every one that the home team needed good-sized hoards instead of regulation bats, if they were ever to win a game. They cited a half dozen instances where a hit, or even a fly to the outfield, would have won the contest. All of them were sore over the loss of the game, principally because of the weak hitting of their favorites. They proclaimed the visitors stronger in every respect. That one run was the big event of the day. The fans seemed to forget that for 11 innings the hitting of the visitors was just as feeble as that of the home team. That the hit that sent the only run of the game across the plate was due to a lucky bound which sent it over the second baseman's head. To me it was one of the best games of the year.

The following day the home team won by a very one-sided score of 12 to 1. As fate would have it, I bumped into several fans of the previous day on the car down town. The contest was a decidedly poor one, I thought, the one and only redeeming feature being the hard hitting of the home club. The fans were satisfied, however, for it was unanimously agreed that the home boys had recovered their batting eye and that from now on they would make the best of them step the ligait to win.

I shall never forget a little incident that happened to "Silk" O'Laughlin during a game at Washington, one day, which illustrates what some fans will do when the home team is getting trimmed.

I happened to be working back of the plate that afternoon, while "Silk" was performing on the bases. All the close plays seemed to come up on the bases. "Silk" had at least a dozen plays that could have been given one way or the other, because of the extreme closeness. Practically all of the plays went against the home team, and while "Silk" had little or no trouble from the players, a fan, who was sitting in the third base section of the grandstand chose to disagree with the arbitrator on practically all of his rulings. He kept up a volley of remarks throughout the game, and before its close had enlisted quite a few volunteers.

Because of the actions of this one lone fan, "Silk" was subjected to a rather strenuous afternoon, although his work was well nigh perfect. "Silk" discovered that his enemy was sitting in the front row of the grandstand, also that he wore glasses. He made up his mind long before the close of the game that he would express himself to the gentleman in question.

The home team managed to win out by a brilliant, ninth inning rally. In his jubilation over the winning of the game, the fan had forgotten entirely that a person bearing the title of umpire ever existed. The Irish in "Silk's" blood was up, however, and he managed to work his way through the crowd to where the frenzied rooter was celebrating over the victory. The fan was a well-dressed chap, and appeared to possess more than the average intelligence.

"You have a lot of license to be roasting an umpire, when you have to wear a pair of thick glasses to be able to even see. I can't see how you ever managed grandstand. Your place is on the outside, looking through a knot hole." The fan said nary a word in reply, and "Silk" having gotten all the venom out of his system, was content to drop the matter. It was evident from the look of embarrassment that came over the rooter's face that he was thoroughly disgusted with himself. He just began to realize what he had been doing throughout the afternoon.

Shortly after we had reached our dressing room there was a knock at the door. We bade our visitor enter. He introduced himself as Dr. "So and So," a very prominent eye specialist. We both began to wonder if he had come to examine our optics.

"I just overheard your conversation with that excited fan, Mr. O'Loughlin," said the specialist. "I really can't blame you for saying what you did to him, but I would advise you to ignore him in the future. I've been treating that chap for a year for eye trouble. His sight is decidedly defective. He really can't see 90 feet with any kind of accuracy. He wouldn't have known whether it was you or Jack Sheridan umpiring the bases if some one hadn't told him."

"Silk" almost keeled over when he heard the news. It simply goes to show what baseball will do to a man, especially if the home team happene to be losing. The chap with the defective eyesight was getting an excellent umpire into trouble because most of the decisions were going against the home team, and he was so partisen in spirit that he could see only one side of the argument.

When you come to think it over, and weigh carefully the cold facts, it is really remarkable the work that devolves upon an umpire during a ball game. In the course of a regular nine inning contest he is called upon to render between 376 and 400 decisions. Rather remarkable figures. Considering his arduous duties, it is not to be wondered at if he errs. Indeed it is remarkable that the judges of play do not slip up more frequently. Here is a little data that is mighty interesting. Possibly a perusal of it may cause the umpire to receive more favorable consideration.

In a nine inning game on an average of 25 men on each team will face the pitcher, making 70 men in all who step to the plate in an attempt to outguess the twirler. Thus the umpire is called upon to pass judgment on three score and ten batters.

It has been estimated that the umpire makes four decisions on each man. In these modern days of baseball "groove" pitchers are mighty scarce. The pitcher is constantly trying to make the batter hit at bad balls on the outside and inside, while the batter is trying to make the twirler get them over. Consequently the game resolves itself into a continual battle of wits between the pitcher and batter.

Should the batter strike out on three balls, it would require three decisions. If the batter works the pitcher for a pass to first on four balls, it requires that many decisions. Often the count before the batter is finally retired or reaches first is one strike and three balls, two balls and two strikes, two strikes and three balls, three balls and three strikes, four balls and two strikes or any of the many other combinations that may arise. Thus it would seem that four decisions on each batter in connection with balls and strikes would be a fair estimate.

With 70 men coming to the plate in a nine inning game, and each batter averaging four decisions, the umpire is called upon to render in the neighborhood of 280 ball and strike decisions.

That there are 20 decisions to render on balls in the immediate neighborhood of the foul lines during the ordinary game is a conservative estimate. The decisions are often a matter of inches, and many times change the entire complexion of the game.

Of course, in a full nine inning game, 54 men must be retired before it is completed. If the home team happene to have made more runs in eight innings then the visitors in nine, they will refuse the last half of the ninth, making it necessary to retire only 51 men in order to complete the game. A decision is necessary on every one made, although frequently it is evident to every one that the men is retired as on a fly ball or when a men takes a healthy swing for the third strike. Such decisions are more a mere matter of form than anything else. On the other hand, there are perhaps 20 plays that come up in a game where the umpire rules the player is safe on a very close decision.

A rough guess would show 280 decisions on balls and strikes, 20 decisions on fair and foul hits, 54 rulings on outs and somewhere near 20 plays in which the runner gets the benefit of the doubt, and is called safe, making 374 rulings an umpire is called upon to make during a nine inning contest.

It is easy to sit in the grandstand or bleachers, surrounded by a lot of friends who see things just as you do, and umpire the game, when you are not busy munching peanuts, but entirely different on the ball field, however, where you are a stranger in a strange land, with a hostile crowd ever ready to criticise and 18 active ball players and as many substitutes, together with two foxy managers, trying their level best to outwit you.

I happened to have an off day in Cleveland last year, and I decided to journey out to the ball park and call on my brother umpires, "Bill" Perrine and Bill Dinneen had been assigned to the game. After making them a friendly visit I told them I intended taking a seat in the grandstand to look them over. They laughingly assented and informed me that they would give their best performance of the season.

Bill Dinneen, the former star pitcher, worked the bases, and it seemed as if every decision was very close. Philadelphia was the opposing team that afternoon, and despite the closeness of many of the plays there was scarcely a kick from any of the players. Cleveland was losing, however, and the fans made considerable fuss over several rulings on the bases by Dinneen. From where I was sitting in the rear part of the big grandstand it really did look as if he had slipped up on four plays. Observing that not a kick was made, I was convinced that something had happened in each instance which the fans in the stand—myself among them —had not noticed. I made note of the plays with the intention of asking Dinneen about them, just to satisfy my own curiosity, and after the game I went to his dressing room.

"Why did you call Collins safe at first, Bill, on that throw from Turner?" I asked.

"Why, there wasn't anything to that play," said he. "The throw you will remember was a trifle wild. It pulled Stovell some distance off the bag, and when he lunged back his foot was about three inches shy of touching first."

"Why did you call Baker safe at second?" was my second inquiry. "From the stand it looked as if the ball beat him to the bag by a yard."

"The ball beat him all right," said Bill, "but the force of the collision in touching Baker caused that young shortstop Knapp to drop the ball. Had he held the throw, Baker would have been an easy out."

"Why did you call Birmingham out at second when Coombs threw to catch him napping? Looked as if Joe got back to the bag before the ball reached Berry's hands."

"He got back, but not to the bag," replied Bill. "Berry had him blocked off, and 'Binny' slid against Berry's shoe, not the bag. He hasn't touched the base yet."

"Just one more, Bill. Why was Jackson out at third? It looked as if he easily beat Catcher Lapp's throw in en attempt to keep him from stealing."

"No question about his beating the throw," answered Bill. "He was safe a mile. He hadn't overslid the bag three or four inches and allowed himself to be touched out before he was able to regain it."

In the four plays in which Dinneen was absolutely correct he was forced to submit to all kinds of censure, because the fans did not know what had really happened.

There are any number of points that the fans should take into consideration when they see the umpire declare a man out who seems to them to be safe beyond a reasonable doubt. Four of them I have already referred to; failure to touch the bag, due to being drawn off by a high, low or wild throw; dropping of the ball after having touched the base runner, due to the force of the collision; sliding of the base runner into the foot of the infielder, instead of the bag and the oversliding of the bag after having reached it in safety.

The fallaway slide is another point that causes all kinds of trouble for the umpires. This slide is used by most of the leading base runners, and consists of going straight for the bag until within a short distance of it, then falling away, so to speak, by throwing the body either towards the infield or outfield as best suits the occasion, and hooking one foot under the bag. This slide makes it very hard for an infielder to put the ball on the runner, as it gives him only the sole of the shoe, or as the players express it, only the spikes to touch.

The baseball fans, however, may be considered pretty fair creatures, and each year they are getting more fair-minded. I have noticed a vast improvement in each of the five years I have umpired in the major leagues. I attribute the improvement to the fact that the umpires are being backed up in their decisions, and the attitude of the sporting writers.

GREAT CATTLE KING

Owns Millions of Acres of Land in Three States.

Ranches of Henry Miller Are Veritable Paradises for Tramps—Once Bought All the Sheep in Nevada.

San Francisco, Cal.—The cattle king of the country is Henry Miller, who owns millions of acres in California, Nevada and Oregon. Most of this land is used for cattle and sheep ranges but about 30 per cent, is cultivated, the crops being used to fatten live stock. Cattle raising is his business and he has made a tremendous success of it, and is worth $20,000,000. He buys cattle and sheep and hogs, lean or fat, runs them on his own ranches, shipping them from ranch to ranch to utilize all the grass and stubble, puts his own grain into them, and when they go to market they always make a profit. He buys in tremendous quantities. He once ordered his head sheep foremen to buy all the sheep for sale in Nevada at any reasonable price. The foremen bought all but 15,000 head, which were held at five dollars apiece, which he thought was too high. He reported to Mr. Miller in southern California. Without a pause Mr. Miller said "Take the next train to Nevada and buy them."

He ranches are models of neatness and order and thrifty menegement. Every one of them is under Mr. Miller's direct, personal supervision and for forty years he has been traveling from ranch to ranch, inspecting his property, directing the planting of crops and the movement of his herds, buying and selling. Each ranch is managed by a foreman who has subforemen for the farming and for the care of the cattle and the sheep. Over several ranches constituting a group is a superintendent. But every ranch is under the constant personal supervision of Miller himself. He visits them at unexpected times and closely examines everything. He regards wastefulness as a crime and everything in and about the ranch must be kept in apple pie order if the foreman is to retain his job. The foremen's wife is held responsible for the housekeeping and cooking for the men.

Despite his habit of close supervision, he allows great freedom of action to his most trusted employees. He is often generous to people who have no claims upon him. The cook at every ranch has orders to feed every person who stops there hungry—and to ask no questions. Anybody who remains one of his ranches at night may utehle and feed his horses, lodge in the ranch house, and eat with the employes, without charge and without question. A man who needs meat may kill a sheep or a calf from Mr. Miller's herds, provided he uses the meat himself and does not sell it. Of course, these things are more than generosity; they are a protection against the spite of tramps and the depredations of thieves, but they indicate a pretty broad-minded men, too.

He has to make concessions to necessity in other ways; he is known by everybody and he has to travel thousands of miles alone through a wild country. He frequently held up and robbed in consequence; but he never attempts resistance nor reports such incidents to the officers of the law. If he did, the next man who robbed him would probably kill him. So he usually carries only a little money, and charges the robberies to profit and loss.

Once he was robbed in Pecheco pass by a Mexican, who took $200 from him. Mr. Miller knew the man, and reminded him that he was a long way from home and asked the highwayman to lend him $20 to get expenses. The Mexican handed back a $20 gold piece and disappeared. Several years later Mr. Miller saw him on the street in Hanford and offered him $20.

"I borrowed this from you once," he said.

"I never saw you before," said the Mexican.

"Oh, yes, you did. I borrowed $20 from you in Pacheco pass, three years ago."

And he made him take it.

But he is a fighter, too. He has carved more, as the old-timers say, than any man on the coast. He employs an attorney in nearly every town near his ranches, and he will fight any legal dispute to the last resort.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Automobile an Aid to City Criminals

NEW YORK.—The automobile as an aid to criminals is likely to figure prominently in future. Out in the west it has been used for a year or more by the robbers of village banks and the looters of postoffices. Now it has begun to figure prominently in this city. Two weeks ago a jewelry store at Sixth avenue and Thirteenth street was robbed of a tray containing some $10,000 worth of gems by one of three men who had driven up to it in a taxicab. The man smashed a window, abstracted a tray of diamonds and shot dead the clerk who had rushed to the door on hearing the noise of its broken glass.

The next night a red taxicab, believed to be the same and containing three men, dashed into the village of River Edge, a few miles from Hackensack, N. J., and while a severe thunderstorm was raging the safe in the post office was cracked and the contents taken. The villagers learned of the crime the next morning.

The very next afternoon the same taxicab, apparently, appeared in Bleecker street in this city and one of its three occupants entered a shoe store and held up the proprietor. Owing to a miscalculation the robber was not successful in obtaining any cash, but he succeeded in escaping as did his companions in the auto.

This series of crimes in such quick succession has alarmed the police, who see vast possibilities in the automobile as an aid to the criminal element and they feel utterly unable to cope with the situation. The automobile criminals, as proved in the jewelry store case, are prepared to commit murder to protect themselves from capture.

Nagged Husband Gets Law's Sympathy

BOONE, IA.—Judge R. M. Wright of Fort Dodge, presiding jurist of this judicial district, has handed down a decision which is regarded as a most remarkable legal document. Coming, as it does, from a jurist who is kindly, home loving, and a tender-hearted old man, it is all the more remarkable.

Judge Wright recently listened to the evidence in a suit for separate maintenance. His kindly face betrayed nothing of what was to come in the opinion handed down.

He says that if the good Lord ever made a man who could live at ease and comfort with the woman who was suing he would like to see him, for he would be a phenomenon. The opinion has been read by all attorneys in this city and is attracting much attention.

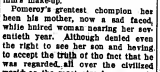
"A bright, capable and hearty good looking woman," says the judge, "has obtained a divorce from two husbands on the ground of desertion and has two or three times brought actions for divorce against her present husband, based on no just ground, needlessly putting him to great and inexcusable expense in paying costs and attorneys' fee on both sides.

"I have given this case much thought, care and attention, and have tried to find from the evidence some way whereby I could decide in her favor and award to her some money for maintenance, but I have been unable to do so.

"She has badgered her husband with annoyances, some of them small; but all of them humiliating to the last degree. At the end of it all I am forced to the conclusion that the defendant was practically driven from home, and that he was fully justified in leaving it.

"After the plaintiff had threatened to shoot him he was justified in notifying the merchants no longer to extend credit to plaintiff on his account, and after his repeated threats he was justified in packing up his little personal effects and leaving the plaintiff and in afterward refusing to go back to the shed he had left."

Playground of Idle Rich in America



NEWPORT, R. I.—Newport is a place that is consecrated to pleasure. The people who have their summer homes here represent the acme of wealth and fashion and exclusive society in America. With the possible exception of one or two local charities with which they concern themselves actively but unobtrusively their sole occupation during the months that they live in Newport is to amuse themselves. Photographers have tried to get pictures while the idle and fashionable rich were disporting themselves on an exclusive beach, but in every case they were detected and their apparatus smashed. One corner of the beach is reserved for children—the children of millionaires.

Everybody who is anybody at Newport is ardently devoted to horses and horseback riding or pretends to be. Therefore the horse show each summer means much to fashionable Newport. It is a far more exclusive affair than the tennis tournament, for the latter is not only a public but a notion event. The horse show is more select and perhaps the most peculiar thing about it is that the horses appear to take a more keen interest in what is going on then the persons who own them.

One of the scenes of most brilliant social life at Newport is Alfred Vanderbilt's place at Oakland farm. His garden parties are among the milestones of the summer's progress. These gatherings are undoubtedly the truest expressions of summer social entertainment in America and are most beautiful to look at. The women in the assortment of sweet frocks, the men in summer garb, the retinue of servants moving about—these make the life of the picture that is set in a frame of shady lawns, with the splendid mansion as a background.

To Leave Lonely Cell After 37 Years

CHARLESTOWN, MASS.—Jesse H. Pomeroy, known for almost four decades as "the boy murderer of Boston," end held by an earlier generation to be the most desperate criminal abnormality of the age, is soon to leave his cell for greater freedom in the state prison here, after having spent 37 years in solitary confinement. This announcement was made when it was declared that Governor Foss, impressed by evidences submitted to him from many sources of the great change in Pomeroy's character, has decided to allow the life convict to enjoy many of the liberties granted well behaved prisoners.

Governor Foss will never grant Pomeroy a full pardon, and it is generally believed no other governor ever will take such action; but to give the man who has inspired dread in the hearts of even his keepers ever since the day when as a fourteen-year-old boy he was thrust into a "punishment" cell in the Charlestown prison, any portion of the freedom enjoyed by tractable convicts is considered sensational by those who have watched the dence of a transformation in the criminal's make-up.

Pomeroy's greatest champion has been his mother, now a sad faced, white haired woman nearing her seventieth year. Although denied even the right to see her son and having to accept the truth of the fact that he was regarded all over the civilized world as the most atrocious example of a wanton murderer, his mother never faltered in her faith in his innate goodness.

Pomeroy killed two children, a boy and a girl, after treating them with barbaric cruelty. He inveigled other children into isolated sections, stripped them of their clothing, tied them to trees or upon boards and then beat them until they were unconscious.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

LEISHMAN TO SUCCEED HILL

John G. A. Leishman was proposed to the German government by Washington as American ambassador, to succeed Dr. David Jayne Hill, who resigned last spring.

The United States asked whether the appointment of Mr. Leishman, who at present is American ambassador at Rome, would be acceptable to the kaiser's government, through Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador at Washington. Mr. Leishman's name was submitted by telegraph to Emperor William, who was touring in the grand duchy of Mecklenberg. Emperor William, immediately on receiving the proposal of Washington, telegraphed his reply to the foreign office. The action taken is almost unprecedented in promptness.

Mr. Leishman's long service as a diplomat qualifies him particularly in the eyes of the emperor, who several times has spoken of the need of an experienced ambassador for the Berlin post and to his desire that no novice be sent there. It has been stated that Minister von Kiderlen Waechter, the German secretary of foreign affairs, who has a personal acquaintance with Mr. Leishman, is much pleased with his appointment.

GORDON-BENNETT CUP WINNER

Charles T. Weymann, winner of the prize cup at the Gordon-Bennett aviation race, was the sole American representative in this the principal international speed contest of the year.

Weymann was born in Hdlit twenty-two years ago, and has lived practically all his life in France. He is much more at home speaking French than English. Called upon to respond to a number of flattering compliments that were showered upon him at an informal dinner after the race, the victorious American, after much hesitation, replied with the one word "Merci."

He is not a "pot quixote of the air," but his total records for speed, passenger-carrying and cross-country flights. On his wonderful overland flight from Paris, for 282 miles to Clermont-Ferrand, only cause for prevented him fulfilling the conditions of the Michelin prize of $20,000 for flying with a passenger from the French capital to Puy de Dome, a mountain 4,800 feet in height, within six hours. He was the only airman to start with the ill-fated Cheves for the flight across the Alps last autumn.

Weymann is the Good Samaritan of aviation. In several of the big country flights in France he stopped by the wayside to give first aid to fledglings with crippled wings and incerated heeds.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS

Edward Bruce Moore, commissioner of patents in Washington, came prominently into the public eye the other day when the one millionth United States patent was issued.

Mr. Moore has worked his way up from the ranks. He entered the patent office as assistant examiner in 1885, and from that time served in various capacities until he was made commissioner, in June, 1907. He has spent twenty-eight years in the government service.

Edward Bruce Moore has had a wide and varied experience while serving Uncle Sam. Before he was appointed commissioner of patents he was assigned as special commissioner to the Paris exposition, in 1900. In the summer of 1908 he was appointed United States delegate to the International Conference for the Protection of Industriel Property, which was held in Stockholm, Sweden.

Later, in the fall of 1909, he acted as special commissioner of the state of Europe on international reciprocal patent protection. Then he served as delegate to the Fourth International Conference of American States at Buenos Ayres, Argentine.

GOMEZ A CUBAN MALCONTENT

Juan Guelberto Gomez is a Cuban malcontent who has been connected with others to have President Gomez impeached and to make a co-conspirator, Vice-President Zayas, governor of Cuba under American simerainty. It is unlikely that he will succeed.

A little over ten years ago the United States undertook a costly war to free Cuba and when after some years of self-government the Cubans failed in the primary purposes of all governments—to secure the safety of life and property—this country was forced to intervene. When the last of our soldiers after the period of occupation left the island the statement was made on the floor of our national congress that if the United States were again called upon to intervene the American flag might never again be lowered in Cuba.

But in spite of this warning political plotting is going on in the island and, according to reports, with the object of bringing about United States intervention. Our government, however, has definite intention of interfering in the affairs of Cuba, but the criminality of these conspirators that it had no immediate intention of interfering in the affairs of Cuba, but the criminality of these conspirators that it had no immediate

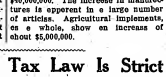
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Farm and Factory Share Export Gain

WASHINGTON.—The former and the manufacturer shared about equally in the remarkable growth in exports which characterized the fiscal year recently ended. The total increase was $304,000,000 when compared with the immediately preceding year, being a larger gain than ever before shown in o single year of our export trade.

Of this gain manufacturers as a whole supplied $140,000,000; cotton about $135,000,000; meats and dairy products about $10,000,000; corn, $10,000,000; food animals, $1,500,000; flour, about $2,500,000, while wheat shows a marked decline.

Cotton is king in the exports of products of agriculture, the value exported during the year being $585,000,000 in 1910, by far the largest total ever shown in the cotton export trade, against $145,000,000 in 1910 and $481,000,000 in 1907, the former high record year.



Meat and dairy products show a total of about $150,000,00, against $131,000,000 last year, but materially less than in certain earlier years, in which the total ranged as high as $202,000,000 in 1907 and $211,000,000 in 1906.

Food animals show a total of $13,000,000, against a little less than $13,000,000 last year, but much below the figures of earlier years, when the total figures of food animals exceeded $45,000,000 in the high record of 1905.

Flour amounted to about $50,000,000 in value, against $47,000,000 last year, but much less than in certain earlier years, the high record in four exports in 1893 showing a total of $75,500,000.

In manufactures the increase in the group "manufactures ready for consumption" is about $100,000,000, and in the group "manufactures for further use in manufacturing" the increase is $40,000,000. The increase in manufactures is apperent in a large number of articles. Agricultural implements, as a whole, show an increase of about $5,000,000.

Corporations Find Tax Law Is Strict

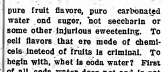
WHILE the treasury department is not disposed to be unduly harsh with those corporations which have failed to file their returns within the specified time under the corporation tax law, provided the failure has not been due to a deliberate attempt to evade the statute, at the same time it is not given much leeway under the terms of the act.

That is why several bills have been introduced in congress for the purpose of relieving delinquent corporations from the penalties of the law for the current year. Just why there should be so many delinquents it is hard to understand, because this is the second year that the law has been in force, and the powers of the officials that supervise and their officers ought to be familiar with its provisions by this time.

The commissioner of internal revenue, who collects the corporation tax, has been sending out letters to corporations and persons who write to learn how they can be relieved of the penalties imposed by the law. He does not give them much encouragement, for the statute is stringent.

When a corporation neglects to make its return March 1, 50 per cent is added automatically to the amount of the tax. This cannot be remitted by the commissioner, because the law specifically prescribes it. But in addition to this increase of the tax a corporation may also be fined for its neglect. This fine is in the discretion of the commissioner, and the law says it shall not be less than $1,000 or more than $10,000. Cases of fraud are punished more severely. The tax is doubled, and in addition to that the officers of a corporation who make a false return may be convicted of a misdemeanor, fined $1,000 and sent to jail for o year.

Spy Charge Arouses Army Officials



THE wer department for the first time in many years hse a case of an alleged spy in the army. Sergeant James Watson, the army recruiting officer at Indianapolis, Ind., has informed the department that he holds affidavits charging Private George Peters with being an Austrian secret agent.

One of the papers in the possession of Captain Watson is an affidevit of Miss Clore A. Dyer. She said Peters was stationed at Fort Tolten, N. Y., in the 155th company. Coner artillery corps, and that he was an Austrian spy sent to the United States to learn the secret of manufacturing the powerful explosive used by the United States government. Miss Dyer asserted she had become engaged to Peters. The girl turned over a number of letters, in which he told of his plans. Peters' real name, she said, was Count Windisch-Grietz and his home is at Prague, Bohemia.

The country probably will keep tranquil in the face of the report that this Austrian spy hoe been examining its defenses and offenses for five years as a private in the army ranks. He is a fine specimen of the stable-minded spy. He gave the first fruits of his labors into the keeping of a woman.

It is suggested that the spy in the ranks, whose "steady company" gave him away, wants to learn how to make dunnite, our most powerful explosive. He has been serving at posts where they neither make dunnite nor use it. Moreover, we have a well-defined thought that the inventor of the deadly stuff, Colonel Beverly W. Dunn, has safeguarded his secret carefully. Dunn is a veteran of thirty-two years' active service. He has thought enough of the country and the army to give two sons into their keeping.

Danger in Dishonest Soda Fountains

THE soda water fountain is en greet a menace to fominnity, in many cases, as the berroom to masculinity, according to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the government pure food and drug expert. Let it be understood that Dr. Wiley is not defending the beer habit. While not a prohibitionist, he is "temperate" strong drink.

Dr. Wiley is not opposed to soda water in itself, nor to the gayly bedecked fountains from which it issues. He is strongly opposed to dangerous ingredients which are hidden in the foam-covered glasses which are handed out to young and old alike.

"I am a friend of the soda water man," Dr. Wiley said. "The honest soda water man who sells real soda water is a godsend today. I would not part with him for the world. It's the man who sells injurious chemicals and habit-producing drugs in soda water glasses to whom I am opposed and whom I would like to see driven out of business.

"If we have real healthy soda water, pure fruit flavore, pure carbonated water and sugar, not saccharin or some other injurious sweetening. To sell flavors that are made of chemicals instead of fruits is criminal. To begin with, what is soda water? First of all, soda water does not and is not supposed to contain any soda. The name is a misnomer. A great deal of the stuff that is sold under the name of soda water contains saccharin instead of sugar. That should be prohibited by law. Saccharin is injurious to every one and affects children seriously. Much of the carbonated water that is mixed with the flavors contains lead. Such a mixture should be prohibited by law.

THE THIRTIETH MAN.

The president of the College of the City of New York finds that one person in every 30 adults in the United States holds public office of some degree, "a public servant who is going up and down in some vicarious capacity for the other 29." So large a stratum of the proportion of functionaries to the total adult population, male and female, seems surprising until the variety and bulk of the classifications is considered, says the Providence Journal. School teachers, for example, must be counted, while the development of public hygiene, of sociological enterprises, or the pure food laws, readily come to mind among clients newly expanding the public service and employing a growing host of performers of vicarious duties. Dr. Finley submits a partial directory of the thirtieth man. He is the man who sweeps the streets as well as the one in the White House. He gathers and distributes the letters; forecasts heat and cold; tastes the milk before the child may drink it; keeps watch over forest and stream; is supervisor, doctor, nurse and guard in hospital, prison and almshouse; is mayor, judge, sheriff, sailor and soldier, public librarian, collector of taxes, guardian to the child who comes friendless into the world and chaplain at the burial of the man who goes friendless out of it; and so on.

Experts of the federal hospital service have been compiling data from the census returns that make a striking showing of the cost of disease in this country and emphasize the necessity of more rigid enforcement, particularly in cities, of laws and regulations designed to safeguard the public health. Tuberculosis is stated to cost this country in the value of lives destroyed, $250,000,000 a year and the mere expenses in medicine, food, medical attendance and loss of wages is $90,000,000 annually, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. The census reports estimate the value of the 23,000 lives lost annually from typhoid fever at $212,000,000. The experts estimate that the total loss from contagious diseases, including tuberculosis, is $750,000,000 a year, of which 40 per cent, or $300,000,000, is preventable. The cost of prevention would be a mere fraction of the cost of disease. All diseases and there should be no false economy in expenditures for the campaign against contagion. The health of the people is the greatest asset of the nation.

The thoughtful observer, especially if his business leads him to very distant lands, will not return boastful, but he will be grateful. The weighty problem of assimilation seems heavier when one thinks on the possibilities of making American citizens of those people now coming here as he contemplates them in the place of origin. The esthetics of a European journey are a delight. But on American village outwaistgs an Alhambra in the scales of opportunity and of humanity.

DEFENDS HIS ACTS

COLONEL SAYS MOTIVE OF STEEL MERGER OF NO CONCERN TO HIM.

HOLDS COURSE EFFECTIVE

Former President Declares Tennessee Deal Saved Common People Misery and Suffering—Explains Testimony Before Committee.

New York.—In an article in the Outlook under the headline, "The Steel Corporation and the Panic of 1907," former President Roosevelt discusses his recent appearance before the congressional committee investigating the steel corporation, repeating the written statement he then presented and after dealing with some of the lines of inquiry and his responses he says:

"Most of the questions dealt with matters not of sufficient moment to merit allusion to them here. Many of them were as to what my belief was concerning the motives of the steel corporation people in acquiring the Tennessee Coal and Iron company's property; to which, of course, my answer was that it was not my business, and neither was it in my power to search the hidden domain of motive, and that my action was conditioned, not upon what I believed to be the motives actuating the steel corporation, but upon the belief that the action which they proposed taking would be enormously to the benefit of the community at large at that particular moment.

"Whether the chief motive for their action was a desire to absorb the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, or whether their chief motive was to save the threatened New York firm from failure, and thereby stop the panic, was of no concern to me.

"That both motives were in their minds I thought possible, and now think possible. What was the predominant motive was of no consequence. My concern was that the action should be taken and the situation saved in the interests of the people of the United States.

"One of the questions put to me indicated disbelief, or, to be more accurate, perhaps I should say that it was meant to be understood as indicating disbelief that the action taken was really efficient in stopping the panic. The action taken was, in my judgment, the only action that could stop the panic, and it most certainly was of enormous, and in all human probability of decisive, influences in actually stopping it."

WILEY RULE REVERSED

OVERRULED BY BOARD IN SYRUP CASE DECISION.

Offered Money by Manufacturers to Make Ruling Favorable to Their Product.

Washington.—That three of President Roosevelt's cabinet officers—Secretaries Cortelyou, Straus and Wilson—sitting as a board of review, had reversed the government's ruling against the Corn Products company over the assertion of Dr. H. W. Wiley as a witness in his own behalf.

The case was that of the Corn Products company, whose right to apply the name of "corn syrup" to glucose the bureau of chemistry and the board of food and drug inspection had denied.

Doctor Wiley testified that when the bureau and the board had agreed that the name was a misapplication the corporation had offered money to chemists to make affidavits that "corn syrup" was a proper description. Shortly afterward, he declared, he heard of three cabinet officers—Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou, Secretary of Commerce and Labor Straus and Secretary of Agriculture Wilson—sat aside the decision and sustained the contention of the corporation. That ruling, he added, still stands.

In opening his testimony Doctor Wiley placed in evidence the letter written by Secretary Wilson on April 24, 1907, notifying him of the appointment of Doctor Dunlap as assistant chemist. This is the letter which Doctor Wiley interpreted as giving Doctor Dunlap authority greater than his own.

STATEHOOD BILL VETOED

President Withholds Approval Because of Judiciary Recall Clause in Arizona Constitution.

Washington.—President Taft, in a special message to the house of representatives, vetoed the joint resolution providing for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona to statehood. His reason for exercising the executive power of veto was based on his thorough disapproval of the recall of judges clause in the Arizona constitution.

The fact that New Mexico's statehood was bound up with that of Arizona was pointed out to it the same fate, and neither territory can come into the Union at this time, is the friendly the joint resolution in congress can muster the two-thirds vote necessary to adopt the resolution over the president's veto. This may be attempted.

TAFT VETOES WOOL

PRESIDENT SENDS IN MESSAGE REJECTING TARIFF REVISION MEASURE.

GIVES REASON FOR ACT

Declares He Is Not Certain Bill Provides Remedy Sought—Says Revision of Schedule K is Makeshift.

Washington.—President Taft sent to congress his veto of the Underwood wool bill.

The special message to congress, setting forth his reasons for disapproval, declares he is not convinced the measure provides the remedies sought.

The veto message was sent in after a long session of the cabinet at which the entire matter was discussed.

It is understood that at this meeting it was decided that the farmers' free list bill and the cotton tariff measure also are to be vetoed promptly when they reach the president, which will be soon.

The wool veto message is in part as follows:

"I was elected to the presidency as the candidate of a party which in its platform declared its aim and purpose to be to maintain a protective tariff by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a 'reasonable profit to American industries.'

"I have always regarded this language as fixing the proper measure of protection at the ascertained difference between the cost of production at home and that abroad, and have interpreted the reference to the profit of American industries as intended, not to add a new element to the measure stated or to exclude from the cost of production abroad the element of a manufacturer's or producer's profit, but only to emphasize the importance of including in the American cost of manufacturers or producers' profit reasonable according to the American standard.

"In accordance with a promise made in the same platform I called an extra session of the Sixty-first congress, at which a general revision of the tariff was made and adopted in the Payne bill. It was contended by those who opposed the Payne bill that the existing rates of the Dingley bill were excessive and that the rates adopted in the revising statute were not sufficiently reduced to conform to the promised measure.

"The great difficulty, however, in discussing the new rates adopted was that there were no means except those which impartial persons could determine what in fact was the difference in cost of production between the products of this country and the same products abroad."

"The bringe me to the consideration of the terms of the bill presented for my approval. Schedule K is the most complicated schedule in the law. It classifies raw wool with different rates for different classes; it affords the manufacturer of the raised compensatory duty to make up for the increased price of the raw material as he has to use due to the rate on raw wool, and for the shrinkage that takes place in scouring the wool for certain uses, and it gives him, in addition, an ad valorem duty to protect him against foreign competition with cheap labor.

"The usages which prevail in scouring the wool, in making the yarn, and in the manufacture of cloth present a complication of technical detail that requires careful and expert study by informed concerning wool growing and manufacture, from understanding of which I have no claim. I have received the opinion and elaborate explanation by experts before its amendment, it is therefore E.

"But I have no sufficient data upon which I can judge how schedule K ought to be amended or how its rates ought to be reduced in order that the new bill shall furnish the proper measure of protection and no more. Nor have I sources of information which could give me that bill presented to me for signature will accomplish this result."

TWO AVIATORS KILLED

FATAL ACCIDENTS ATTEND AIR MEET IN CHICAGO.

Badger Crushed to Death by Machine —Johnstone is Drowned in Lake.

Grant Park Aviation Field, Chicago. —In the presence of 500,000 people, two aviators, one the son of a Pittsburgh millionaire, the other the son of a Chicago physician, were dashed to their deaths.

One of the fatalities occurred on the field, a few yards from the gates of the spectators, when a biplane with huge spread of red wing folded up like a jack knife and struck the earth with terrific force.

The second accident occurred at sunset when a graceful monoplane suddenly shot toward the lake from a height of 3,500 feet. As it neared the water the pilot tried to steer it upward, but the forces of gravitation were too potent. The wings collapsed, the engine exploded and the driver was either killed before he struck the water or drowned.

The dead: St. Croix Johnstone, a Chicago aviator, whose Moisant monoplane dived into the lake after a glide of 3,500 feet. It collapsed when the pilot tried to turn its course upward and its engine exploded. Johnstone had vanished when Robinson, in his hydrocoreplane, reached the wreck a minute later. He was either killed by the engine or drowned.

W. R. Badger, a Pittsburgh pilot and reputed millionaire, who sought to emulate the hair-raising exploits of Lincoln Beachey. His Beldwin "red devil" collapsed as Badger was making a spectacular dip not far above ground. The engine struck the pilot, breaking his neck and crushing his skull. Badger died in St. Luke's hospital within half an hour.

COL. WATTERSON IS BEATEN

Kentucky Democrats Ignore Plea of Editor and Declare for Extension of County Unit Law.

Louisville, Ky.—Delegates to Kentucky's Democratic platform convention refused to accept Henry Watterson's advice and adopted the majority report of the resolutions committee, which provided for the extension of the county-unit law to all counties of the state.

Colonel Watterson moved to amend the report so as to leave the state's primer laws as they stand, urging that the county unit was but a prefece to prohibition.

The vote on Colonel Watterson's amendment was 514 for and 667 against. Immediately it was lost the majority report was carried unanimously.

Besides the county unit law, which has not been in force in countries where cities of the first four classes are situated, the platform commends the Democratic congress and the state's Democratic representatives and condemns everything Republican.

The resolutions contain no indorsement of any national candidate, but declare for a popular election of United States senators, direct primaries and good roads.

GENERAL STRIKE IS BEGUN

Industrial War is Declared in Great Britain—Troops Ready for Emergencies.

London.—A general strike on British railways was declared in effect. But the declaration may yet be withdrawn.

Representatives of the four organizations comprising the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants issued a strike order calling out the 100,000 members of their allied unions. The men were asked to strike "immediately."

Though the membership of the unions is less than one-sixth of the entire forces of railway workmen, it included the highest skilled laborers employed by the companies, and if they keep in line they will be able to paralyze the traffic of the entire United Kingdom.

Cement Talk No. 2

Portland Cement does not come from Portland, Maine, or Portland, Oregon, and it was not first made at either of these places. It is called Portland because it was given this name by the Englishman who first made it. He called it Portland because he thought it resembled certain natural deposits on the Isle of Portland in England. Portland Cement is the fine powder produced by pulverizing the clinker resulting from the burning together of various materials of proper chemical composition. In the case of Universal Portland Cement, these raw materials are blast furnace slag and pure limestone. There are many brands of Portland Cement on the market, produced by different manufacturers. Universal is one of the best known and highest grade Portland Cements. You can always tell by the name Universal and the blue trade mark printed on each sack. Forty million sacks of Universal are manufactured yearly in this country. If you have any concrete work to do, you will make no mistake by using Universal Portland Cement. Universal is for sale by representative dealers everywhere.

GET POWER.

The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skilfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From my knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton, and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

A few months ago I was recommended to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the indented feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 pounds, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts food did it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A ten days trial will show anyone some facts about food.

WIN'S HAYMAKING

By BELLE MANIATES

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

It was twilight when Win drove down to the station to see Katherine off. They had been playmates, schoolmates, sweethearts, and this was their first separation. Katherine was going to pay a visit to some rich relatives in the city, and Win was manfully struggling to sympathize with her feeling of joy at "getting out of her shell and seeing the world."

The raucous voice of the conductor shouted the "all aboard," the bell clanged like a knell on Win's ears, and then the train pulled out with Katherine waving a cheery farewell.

He drove home by the light of the harvest moon, the rains listlessly sagging on his broad back of the farm-hero. When he had unharnessed, he went to his old favorite haunt on the river bank in the woods, his "thinking out" place.

Katherine was bright and progressive. He must try to keep pace. He would bridge over the coming six months by going away to study new methods of farming that he might put under scientific culture the 80 acres his grandfather had left him. He put this plan into immediate execution, and went to an agricultural college for a short special course.

Then, when his next holidays came, he could not resist a flying visit to the city where Katherine was visiting. Without notifying her of his coming he appeared suddenly and unannounced before her as she sat, beautiful and bewitching, the center of a coterie of admirers in a fashionable drawing room.

She had not been communicative in her letters which had revealed to him no conception of her environment. He felt ill at ease and tongue-tied when he was ushered into this maze of brilliance.

"Oh, Win!" cried Katherine, more in astonishment, he thought, than in pleasure. She quickly rose to the occasion, presenting him to her aunt and friends as "the man from home."

They were languid and politely patronizing, and Win replied in constrained monosyllables to their overtures. Katherine did not come to his rescue, but addressed her conversation for the most part to the others. His call was not prolonged. When he rose to depart she went with him to the door.

"Come again, Win—tomorrow," she said in a low tone.

But he went from the house to the station and returned to college to plunge deeper into the study of farming.

Soon there came a little note from Katherine reproaching him for not having called again. In he delayed answer he made no reference to his call. Their letters grew shorter and of less frequent duration until they ceased altogether.

He returned home in time for spring planting and sought solace in plow and furrow. Katherine did not return until haying time. The next day after her arrival there was a country picnic given to welcome her home.

Win's father, mother and sisters went in the old carryall, wearing a merry though unlimited farewell to the rail, illbe young farmer standing alone on the porch. He had pleaded as an excuse for his non-attendance that he feared he would not get his hay in before it rained.

"Rain out of a clear sky!" scoffed his youngest sister.

"That is when it is most liable to come," he replied.

They all laughed as they drove away, but the mother-heart was wise and far-seeing. She gave a yearning, backward glance at her favorite's child.

When they were out of sight he returned to the field and worked doggedly until he could endure no longer the sweet memories that came with the spinning of the new-mown hay. He went back to the house, ate the cold luncheon laid out for him, and then sought his old retreat on the river bank. How many battles he had fought in this spot! How often had Katherine come here with him and to him!

He told himself fiercely that it was time to crush out these old memories. A spot touching-stone up and saw her standing before him.

"And if the rain could come," she said archly, "out of a clear, blue sky, as it always does, what would become of the hay?"

"This is my noon hour. I was just going back to the fields," he said lamely.

She sat down on the big stone where she had been wont to sit. He made a swift, comprehensive survey of her. She looked younger than she had looked when he saw her in the city.

"I came here," she said, "for a glimpse of the old house."

This was the longest way to the house. He advised her, if she had come by the river, to row a little farther to the next bend where she could have an unobstructed view.

"You seem anxious to be rid of me." She said depressingly, "but then you always did prefer to be alone—in this place."

"You know better," he cried. "You know how we came here together, and that is why the place is so dear to me—or was until you went away and changed everything."

"Why," she said gently after a moment's pause, "in the old days when we came here, we never quarrelled. If there was a misunderstanding, we talked it over."

"Well," he said, the words coming with an effort, "what is your aim?"

"Win, do you remember, I wonder, what friends we were, and how I told over and over again that this visit of mine was to make no difference in me—in us?"

"Yes, I remember," he admitted sullenly.

"When I came home last night I looked in vain for you. Everyone I used to know came to my picnic save you—you who stayed at home to get in hay!' Do you think that was nice?"

His lips made a straight line. "It is my turn now," he asked.

"Just one question, Win: why didn't you come to see me last winter in the city?"

"Then you have forgotten that I did call?"

"That call!" she said disdainfully. "in e drawingroom filled with artificial people, and my aunt bursting with curiosity to learn our relations, and every one watching. Did that count? That was why I asked you to come again when we would be alone."

His mask of constraint lifted.

"Then, no!" she cried at the thought in his eyes. "You couldn't have thought that! That I had forgotten—that I didn't care! How could I be naturel before them all! I was overcome by the thought of old times when you appeared so unexpectedly and I was scarcely conscious what I said. I thought you understood and would call again. I was afraid I would let them all see that—"

His heart was doubling its beats as his thoughts raced riot.

"You say, Kathie—you would let them all know—what, dear?"

"Why," she said tremulously, "you must not make me say it first."

"Katherine, I love and it all my life. You know I love you!"

"And I knew that night when you came in among them all that I loved you—and Win, I never could write a letter."

America's Baptism.

The world now will take it for granted that the United States officially acknowledges the claims of St. Die, France, to its important part in the honor of naming America. Much has been written of St. Die's boast of this distinction. The romantic story long has been heralded before the world and always with a glamor that is more or less associated with fanciful tradition. The action which planned long in advance by the enthusiastic French people attracted world-wide attention. Its celebration with the American ambassador and the French minister of the colonies as the honor guests added to the dignity of St. Die's claims. It was made the occasion for reciprocal felicitations between America and France and the old-time friendliness between the two nations was recalled while the world was given to understand that St. Die was the place of the new world's baptism.

Vaudeville in Ancient Rome.

Arbuckle, the coffee man, told Sprockels, Jr., that Havemeyer was a much misunderstood patriot. "You misunderstand Havemeyer just like I did," said the coffee magnate. "His is a fine, cultivated man—why, he plays the violin." "So did Nero play the violin," was Sprockels' retort. it shows how careful a man should be to avoid blundering. If Nero ever sentially played the violin it was nearly 2,000 years ago, and the world has never been permitted to forget it.

The Power of Pantomime.

Henry E. Dixey, the comedian, was praising the pantomime powers of Nijinsky, the Russian dancer.

"Nijinsky's pantomime skill is wonderful," he said. "Without saying a word he makes you laugh or weep or shudder or rage—all by means of pantomime. Once, indeed, on a bet of 50 rubles, Nijinsky, all by pantomime expressed to a large audience the fact that his younger brother, Plotr, though born in Moscow, was at present staying at a small boarding house near Warsaw."

SIMPSON RESIGNS

PRESENT ATTORNEY GENERAL NOTIFIES GOVERNOR HE WILL RETIRE JAN. 1.

LYNDON A. SMITH SUCCEEDS HIM

Acceptance Is Noted and an Assistant Receives the Office.—Mr. Simpson to Enter Into Law Practice.

St. Paul.—Attorney General Simpson has formally tendered his resignation to Governor Eberhart, to take effect Jan. 1, 1912. The governor accepted the resignation and offered the post to Lyndon A. Smith, of Montevideo, now an assistant attorney general, and Mr. Smith accepted.

Mr. Simpson will take up the practice of law in Minneapolis with R. J. Powell. Mr. Simpson and Mr. Powell will have several corporations as clients including the Shevlin-Carpenter interests.

Mr. Smith, who will become attorney general on Jan. 1, upon the retirement of Mr. Simpson, said:

"The office of attorney general is a great responsibility and I shall assume it realizing full well the responsibility it carries. I appreciate the honor the governor has conferred upon me. I shall do my very best."

Mr. Simpson expressed himself as pleased with the governor's choice of his successor.

HUMBIRD WORTH $5,000,000.

Estate of St. Paul Lumberman More Valuable Than Estimated.

St. Paul. — The estate of John A. Humbird, the St. Paul lumberman, who died recently, was shown to be far more valuable than was at first estimated. The safety deposit boxes in the National German American bank were opened by Thomas J. Humbird, of Spokane, son of the deceased; William H. Fershem, a son-in-law, and Frank J. Obst, representing the county treasurer.

Stocks and securities were found totalling more then $3,000,000. It is expected that the entire valuation of the estate will be about $5,000,000. The stocks represent investments in many industrial companies the worth of which is not known, and in railway companies whose stock is quoted at greatly above par.

Among the stocks are 1,000 shares of Northern Pacific, 3,000 shares of Great Northern, and 30 Southern Pacific registered bonds, valued at $300,000. There are many shares in mining companies, in lumber companies, and other enterprises in which Mr. Humbird was known to be interested. The state will profit from the inheritence tax.

MAN AND BOY KILLED.

Reports From Clinton Add Two More to List of Storm Victims.

Clinton.—In last week's storm, according to reports received here, a man neer Dumont, and a boy near Holloway, were killed, being struck by flying wreckage.

The terrific-wind storm, assuming at times tornado-like proportions, swept over the country north of Graceville. One man, whose name is not known here, was struck by flying debris near the village of Dumont, and instantly killed. In the town of Graceville, considerable property damage was done.

In Artichoke township the buildings on half a dozen different farms were demolished. Ole R. Pederson, one of the farmers, who suffered property loss, was also painfully injured in the storm.

From Holloway comes the report that a boy, walking along the road, was hurled against a tree by the wind and killed. All along the line of the storm damage was done to standing grain.

BIG MILEAGE REBATE

Likely to be Recovered from the Railroads.

Minnesota in all probability will recover from the several railroads in the state, which have during the past two years transported state troops to the annual encampment at an excess of 1 cent a mile, approximately $14,000, according to Attorney General Simpson.

Before the 2-cent fare become effective the roode used to transport the troops at one cent a mile, but when the 2-cent fare law was passed the roads made the state pay the same price for taking troops to camp as was paid by other persons. The legislature passed a bill ordering the roads to carry the troops at n cent e mile, but the roads refused and the state paid the full amount, helf to be returned until the matter could be tested in the courts. The suit is still pending, but now that the roode heve gone heck to the 3-cent fare Mr. Simpson made an effort to settle the matter out of court and he believes he will be successful.

The attorney general went to Chicago to confer with the officials of the St. Paul road, and after consulting with Third Vice President J. H. Hiland, a tentative agreement was made that the matter would be taken up with President A. J. Earling and an agreement probably would be reached by which the road would return approximately $7,000, which is its share of the total amount. The other $7,000 will te returned by the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Omaha and Minneapolis & St. Louis.

"I had a conference with the St. Paul people at Chicago," said the attorney general "and everything is coming along ell right. I think an agreement can be reached without any difficulty for the return of the excess rates charged for transporting the militia for the two years at the 2 cent rate, even in effect and during which time the railroads charged the full rate for the national guard.

Other Lines Expected to Contribute.

"The amount which will be returned by the St. Paul will ha about $7,000 and the other roads will return a like amount although by him show the St. Paul mekes its return. I conferred with Mr. Hiland and he promised to take the matter up with President Earling and everything will come out eifight in e short time."

The total mileage charged by the several railroads approximated $28,000 during the two years in dispute.

INSURANCE GROWING.

Companies in Minnesota Show Big Increase for 1910.

Insurance companies doing business in Minnesota have shown a large increase in 1910 in number and amount of policies in effect, acording to J. A. O. Preus, insurance commissioner. Figures compiled by him show the total assets of all fire and marine companies operating here increased $36,238,032, and the total amount of insurance in force increased $96,992,275 during the year.

The total assets in 1909 amounted to $492,801,290.62, and in 1910 to $529,039,322.65. Liabilities in 1909 aggregated $238,025,652.65, and in 1910 were $262,916,173.34, an increase of $24,890,520.69.

The surplus in 1909 was $154,575,637.97 and in 1910 it aggregated $165,983,112.24, an increase of $11,407,484.27.

Capital stock and deposit capital in 1909 amounted to $72,339,900, and in 1910 aggregated $79,033,147.60.

GIRLS CAUGHT IN QUICKSAND.

Two Daughters of Carlton, Minn., Merchant Drown.

Duluth.—Florence and Pearl, aged thirteen and fourteen years respectively, daughters of James Dunphy, a Carlton merchant, were drowned in Chub lake, Carlton county, almost directly in front of the McKinnon cottage. The girls were wading and got into quicksand and went down so quickly that the people who responded to their calls for help arrived too late.

BANK CASHIER IS ACCUSED.

Employe of Sleepy Eye Institution Arrested.

Sleepy Eye. — Charging Rollin M. West, cashier of Cobden state bank, with embezzlement in the cum of $9,787.94 from the said bank, State Bank Examiner Kelsey N. Jones had him arrested. This course was due to findings of Deputy Examiners Brandvold and Snyder who made an examination of the bank's condition.

The bank was closed for business and in the hands of Deputy Brandvold. From investigation it was found that funds were systematically taken from the bank for over a year. Mr. West's downfall is due to the fact that he was a big factor in automobiles, requiring a large amount of money to conduct his business. With a large stock on hand, together with holdings equities in real and personal property obtained in trades and deals, and expecting to turn his property into cash, in the capacity of cashier he took the money from the bank.

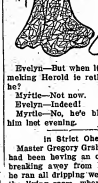
Much Wooed Girl is Married.

Ewelch.—Miss Rose Brenham, the eighteen-year-old Austrian girl who figured in the recent dynamite cases and who refused to marry George Ozaulch, a persistent suitor, after banns had been read the three customary times, was married at the Holy Family church to Frank Stanislech. Stanislech was one of five suitors for Miss Rohem's hand.

Joe Rebrovich, accused of dynamiting the Rohem home, was convicted and sentenced to six months in the county jail.

INFLAMMATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Creston, Iowa.—"I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health. I have no more pain, my nerves are stronger and I can do my own work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me after everything else had failed, and I recommend it to other suffering women."—Mrs. Wm. Sears, 606 W. Howard St., Creston, Iowa.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

"Pussyfoot" Johnson is again in northern Minnesota. Now will you be good?

Some "kid" must have run into the editor of the Thief River Falls Times with a push cart.

We publish the proceedings of the board of County Commissioners this week, in which there is two ditch hearings from up this way.

And now Taft will make a tour of the North West to explain the Canada treaty. Thanks, the farmers have heard all about that. All they are waiting for now is a chance to vote.

Minnesota is to have an extra congressman at large, and as the ninth district is by virtue of its population entitled to the extra congressman, it is suggested that Hon. Albert Berg, of Spooner would fill the bill.—Roseau County Times, Aug. 11-11.

Northern Iowa have been having disastrous floods both the big and little Cedar rivers being the highest ever known. We can take care of some of their surplus water up this way at present, but are likely to have plenty of it next month, and the farmer that is prepared for it with all his hay and grain in stack will be lucky.

The McIntosh Times, in commenting on the veto of the New Mexico and Arizona state hood bill by little king Taft says:

"Stretch your imagination just a trifle more thus great and wise safekeeper of the peoples interests and argue the "Divine Right of Kings." Did you believe the majority was right when they elected you for president?

If Knut Nelson becomes a candidate for re-election to the U S. Senate he will come before the people of Minnesota as their representative, and not as an indorser of the Taft administration. Knut is so good a politician to get mixed up with that stand pat, for the trusts gang, for he knows that the people are after them, and are going to get them, and any and all on board that old rotten craft will sink to rise no more, in the next election. If Knut Nelson would go around this state next year advising farmers to vote for Taft, they would go home at night and tell their wife that Knut used to be all right, but he had gone "senigal," crazy.

As was expected the farmers free list bill was vetoed by old Taft, which was greeted by loud applause by the "stand patters," but they will sing a different tune next year when they get into the campaign, and begin to look for the support that elected Taft, and find that it has vanished. Six Of Minnesota s cong ressmen, among which was our Steenerson, voted to pass the bill over the presidents veto, and a lot of republican congressmen who stood pat, with Taft will be left at home to stand pat with Tawney next year. It will be remembered that Tawney stood pat, but he is standing pat down to the first notch now, while Anderson sits in his chair in Congress representing the people, as a democratic district.

PAPUAN SAVAGES

The Most Treacherous of All the South Sea Natives.

A TRIBE OF HEAD HUNTERS.

The Solomon Islanders Kill and Eat Their Enemies as an Incident of Their Weird Religious Rites—Storing a House in a Trotter.

The name Papuan is that given to the dark skinned people who inhabit the greater number of islands in the part of the Pacific ocean known as Polynesia and Melanesia and whose headquarters, as it were, are in the great island of Papua or New Guinea. Under this description come the inhabitants of the Solomon islands.

So evil has been the reputation of the Solomon islanders that until quite recently they were carefully avoided, and very little was known about them. They have the name of being the most treacherous of all the south sea natives, yet, considering the treatment they have received in the past at the hands of white men, this is not to be wondered at. Indeed, the wonder is that they allow any white man of all in their country. But now that they have had a chance of seeing some more favorable specimens than the dregs of humanity who formerly drifted to the south seas they are much improved, and a man who treats them fairly may, as a rule, go among them without fear.

Still, even now there is a beautiful uncertainty about the life of a south sea trader. One day he may be surrounded by grinning natives who obey his every word. But some night, if he has chanted the Papuan too grossly, there is murder in the moonlight, and the trader is never heard of more. Often, however, there seems to be no reason for the natives turning against the whites. It is simply that they object to having a trader in their midst for they turn his goods and end by killing him.

The Solomon islanders are as keen head hunters as the Borneans and every year, except where they are held in check by the British government, set out on head hunting raids pure and simple. Although cannibalism is still practiced in the wilder parts of the group, it is nowadays mostly a religious ceremony and not a matter of diet. The islanders do not generally kill and eat people for enjoyment, but either because their religion demands a human sacrifice or because a head is needed for some ceremony.

In Ysabel, one of the largest islands in the Solomon group, the natives build houses in the highest trees to escape from the attacks of head hunting parties, who sometimes come as far as 200 miles in their search for skulls. One of these houses was built in a tree 130 feet high. All the lower branches had been cut off, so that the stem was quite bare until the platform, some eighty feet from the ground, was reached. Access was had to the house by a rickety ladder composed of rungs lashed to a stout pole with rope of twisted cane. When an attack is expected the women and children take refuge in these houses, while the men keep watch. They warn each other of the approach of a fleet by a curious cry which once heard is never to be forgotten. These houses are substantially built, as often the inhabitants have to withstand a long siege in them. The floor is made of plaited bamboo laid on a layer of bark which rests upon the platform. The walls are of bamboo, and the roof is thatched with sago palm. One particular house to which I have referred measured 30 by 15 feet, and forty persons had been known to take refuge in it. If the attacking party land and the men cannot resist them successfully they, too, ascend to the tree house. A pile of large stones is always kept ready for emergencies outside the door of the platform, and these the men hurl down on their foes. Sometimes, however, the enemy construct a shelter beneath which they can work their way and cut the tree down, and they have even been known to ascend the tree while the inhabitants were off their guard and set fire to the house.

Nowadays, however, head hunting is indulged in only on special occasions. Often, indeed, when a head is required the chief gives notice of the fact to the different tribes and offers a reward for one. The chiefs of the villages look around, and if in any of them there is a native who has made himself objectionable for any reason they decide that his head shall come off and the reward be earned. The victim is not told of his impending fate, but is carefully watched by a man who has been told to secure his head. He watches every movement of his victim and when a favorable opportunity presents itself quickly and remorselessly kills him, cuts off his head and carries it to the chief, who pays for it in shell money. This even happens to white men if they have made themselves unpopular. Money is paid over for the skull, which goes to join the chief's collection.—John Foster Fraser in New York Tribune.

A Taste For Soap.

Surely one of the queerest of tastes was that of the historian Prescott, of whose life in Rome Mrs' Hurd-Mead tells in "A Diplomatist's Wife in Many Lands." She says that he used to keep a cake of soap on his writing table and nibble at it constantly. Curiously, when he was remonstrated with, that people should be clean inside as well as out."

Most important.

Martin

THE Martin Model 1904 is a medium high weight spreading rifle, a well proportioned gun with good balance and symmetry of lines. Handsome and substantial in appearance, simple in the working mechanism. Its quick and easy of operation, accurate up to 75 yards and a very pleasant gun to shoot.

The solid breech and forming cavity when in shooting at 75 yards, the shot will group in a circle of from 6 to 8 inches. With 30 to 35 yards, the shot will group in a circle of from 3 to 4 inches. The low-pressure breech-block cannot be expelled by accident and the lower receiver is so made that 74 can be loaded, and can be reloaded in very small case.

The up-to-date sportsman reads the "Martin" Book; every boy in the town. It contains 32 pages, and is illustrated with fine wood cuts, and tells in the words of those who use the guns.

Popular Joke.

The most popular joke when has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated to be that which appeared in an American current of the Punch almanac for 1845. It read, "Adviser to newsmen about to marry—Don't!" It would be interesting to many who was its author. Another, included in a similar subject, was the following, because who have fallen in love—Pull out!" One of the most brilliant things that ever appeared in our supplementary was the brief dialogue between an inquiring child and his impatient father: "What is mind?" "No matter." "What is matter?" "Never mind." "Wearithmore thanfle."

Battle of Wits Himself.

"I like an argument with your husband," said the caller. "He is so entertaining. He is so good natured and so argumentative. I never talk to him that I don't learn something."

"He ought to," answered the innocent wife. "You are forever telling me from."—New York Journal.

A Competent Critic.

A famous actor at an elaborate entertainment at a fifth avenue millionaire's palace in New York rose to recite Mrs. Browning's "Dead Pan." As he announced his subject and prepared to begin he heard a lady near him say distinctly:

"What is the next piece? Something funny, I hope. Oh, yes—The Dead Pan! Dear me, how odd! Of course it must be funny—something about bad cooking, I suppose."

Playing Her Cards.

Tommy—May I stay up a little longer? Ethel—What do you want to stay up for? Tommy—I want to see you and Mr. Green playing cards. Mr. Green—Bet we are going to play cards, Tommy—Oh, yes, you are, for I heard mamma saying to Ethel that everything depended on the way in which she played her cards tonight.

Cautious.

The young housekeeper was looking at some soft shell crabs squirming and wriggling in their pen of wet sod.

"They're very nice," said the dealer. "Shall I send you a dozen?"

"Yes," answered the innocent. "If you are sure they are fresh."—New York Journal.

Commissioners' Proceedings

Thief River Falls, Minn.,
August 1, A. D. 1911.

On the call of the county auditor, pursuant to chapter 220 of the laws of Minnesota for the year of 1905 and acts amandatory thereof.

The board of county commissioners of Pennington county met in special session at the office of the county auditor in the city of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, at 2 o'clock p. m. Tuesday, August 1, A. D. 1911, for a hearing and consideration of the engineers and viewers report on the ditch petitioned for by Ole Skreland and others, and designated as county ditch No. 53.

The matter of the petition of Ole Skreland and others for county ditch No. 53 was then taken up and the argument of persons interested considered after which on motion made and duly seconded, and carried unanimously that the engineers report and the viewers report as amended for the establishment and construction of county ditch No. 53 be accepted, and that said ditch be in all things established as amended and on file in the office of the county auditor of Pennington county, Minnesota, whereupon the following order establishing county ditch No. 53 in Pennington county made:

ORDER TO ESTABLISH DITCH

State of Minnesota, } ss
County of Pennington }

In the matter of the petition of Ole Skreland and others, for a public ditch in the county of Pennington state of Minnesota, designated and numbered as county ditch No. 53.

The above entitled matter came on duly to be heard by and before the county board of the county of Pennington state of Minnesota, at a special meeting of said board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter on the first day of August A. D. 1911 at 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of said time of hearing thereon and that C. E. Marts, the civil engineer appointed by this board to survey the route of said ditch, has completed his work and duly filed his report in the office of the county auditor of said county, and that the viewers appointed by said board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made their report in due form of law in the office of said county auditor, the said county board did, at the time above specified, proceed to hear said petition and said viewers' report thereon; and said board having duly considered said petition and heard all parties interested for or against the construction of said ditch, and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows, to-wit:

First—That the said civil engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second—That the viewers appointed herein have duly completed their labors and have made and filed their report thereon according to law.

Third—That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded.

Fourth—That the damages and benefits arising from the construction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and promote the public health and that said reports of said engineer and viewers' are complete and correct.

Fifth—That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said viewers' report and said engineer's report has been duly given, published and posted and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the county auditor of said county, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

Now therefore, As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the county board of the county of Pennington, state of Minnesota, at said special session of said board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience, do hereby locate and establish the said ditch according to the report and the specifications of said engineer made and filed herein; and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the viewers made and filed herein.

It is further ordered, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the viewers' report herein, in excess of benefits, be paid out of the county treasury of said county on warrants to be drawn and attested by the auditor of said county and signed by the chairman of this board, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

Given under our hands this 1st day of August A. D. 1911.

By the Board,
(SEAL)
ED. A. AUBOL,
Chairman of County Board of Pennington County Minnesota.

Attest:
A. H. FASEL,
County Auditor and Ex-Officio Clerk of Board.

Thief River Falls, Minn.,
August 2, A. D. 1911.

On the call of the county auditor pursuant to chapter 230 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1905 and acts amendatory thereof.

The board of county commissioners of Pennington county met in special session at the office of the county auditor in the city of Thief River Falls Minnesota, at 10 o'clock a. m. Wednesday August 2, A. D. 1911, for a hearing and consideration of the engineer's report and viewers' report on the ditch petitioned for by Lorance Wajnarowski and others and designated as County Ditch No. 55.

The matter of the petition of Lorance Wajnarowski and others for County Ditch No. 55 was then taken up and the arguments of persons interested considered, after which on motion made and duly seconded and carried unanimously, that the engineer's report and the viewers' report as amended for the establishment and construction of County Ditch No. 55 be accepted, and that said ditch be in all things established as provided by law according to the engineer's report and the viewers' report as amended and on file in the office of the county auditor of Pennington county, Minnesota, whereupon the following order establishing County Ditch No. 55, in Pennington county, was made:

ORDER TO ESTABLISH DITCH.

State of Minnesota, } ss
County of Pennington }

In the matter of the petition of Lorence Wajnarowski and others for a public ditch in the county of Pennington, state of Minnesota, designated and numbered as County Ditch No. 55:

The above entitled matter came on duly to be heard before the county board of the county of Pennington, state of Minnesota, at a special meeting of said board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter on the 2nd day of August, A. D. 1911, and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of said time of hearing thereon, and that C. H. Mertz, the civil engineer appointed by this board to survey the route of said ditch, has completed his work and duly filed his report thereon in the office of the county auditor of said county, and that the viewers appointed by said board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made and filed their report in due form of law in the office of said county auditor, the said county board did, at the time above specified, proceed to hear said petition and said viewers' report thereon; and said board having duly considered said petition and heard all the parties interested for or against the construction of said ditch and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows, towit:

First—That the said civil engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second—That the viewers appointed herein have duly completed their labors and have made and filed their report thereon according to law.

Third—That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded.

Fourth—That the damages and benefits arising from the construction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and promote the public health and that said reports of said engineer and viewers are complete and correct.

Fifth—That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said viewers' report and said engineer's report has been fully given, published, and posted, and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the county auditor of said county, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

Now therefore, As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the county board of the county of Pennington, state of Minnesota, at said special session of said board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience, do hereby locate and establish said ditch according to the report and the specifications of said civil engineer made and filed herein; and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the viewers made and filed herein.

It is further ordered, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the viewers' report herein in excess of benefits, be paid out of the county treasury of said county on warrants to be drawn and attested by the auditor of said county and signed by the chairmen of this board, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

All the farmers are busy rushing their grain into the stack, and next week, with fair weather it will all be in stacks, or bins.

A young man road from Cyrstal N.D. to Walter McAndress yesterday on a motorcycle, a distance of 120 miles, which was going some.

Martin Hyland is building a fine new frame grainery on his Deer Park farm, to store his big crop in. About all the farmers are beginning to figure on more room for their grain this year.

George Singer is making preparations to go into the fancy poultry raising business. His younger sons are taking an active interest in the business, and have some fine chickens.

If we get the roads in fair condition a large part of the wheat from up this way will go to Oldee to market this fall, as it will be an impossibility for the farmers to haul wheat over them ditch grades in the town of Kratka.

Oscar Swanson will start his threshing machine shock threshing in the Hyland and Swanson neighborhood next Monday, and will work north through this locality, where he gave very good satisfaction threshing last year.

We are going to go up to the outlet of Red Lake and have photographs taken of them log jams that will show just how they have got the Red Lake River plugged so the water can not get out of the lake into the river.

Red Lake County have put up their share to build the new bridge across the Clearwater river, at Ralph Greens place and the bridge will be built, and we can not see what further need there is for stirring up ill feeling regarding the matter. Let it drop and talk about our fine crops, and about ditches and roads.

We do not think it is a good plan for a small farmer to let his grain stand in the shock waiting for a threshing machine, for you do not want to forget that when it does start running in this country we are likely to get a flood and you may loose your crop. Rush the stacking. Remember two years ago.

Every district school in Polk County got a copy of the last legislative manual for their school library, but the poor little Pennington school children got nothing. But never mind you "kids" of the Highlandine school don't cry for you will get one of them pretty blue books all right. Your school clerk will attend to that, if your representative did not.

We have not heard any more about the threshing machine of Mostrom and Tallak finished, so we conclude that Tallak is going to continue to attend to the cows and let others thresh. The cows are the best, as they will not get stuck in the straw unps, the elevator works all right, the cylinder teeth won't drop out, or the straw carrier stop, which makes them the best machine on the market.

RAILWAYS IN JAPAN.

Filthy Cars and Dirty Stations in a Land of Cleanliness.

"The railway journey from Kioto to Yokohama, despite the fact that most beautiful country is traversed, is not the pleasantest of experiences," declares a writer in the Wide World. "One buys a railway ticket in Japan in installments.

"The ordinary ticket only chables one to go by a train covering the minimum distance in the maximum time, so an extra express ticket is purchased, which means that the engine moves a little more quickly toward its appointed goal.

"Next a platform ticket must be procured to enable one to board the train, and finally one has to fight one's way into a first class carriage. Why do all the passengers in Japan take their journeys into the already pitifully small carriages instead of leaving it in the vast, and why, again, does a nation that is a password for cleanliness the world over possess a train service so absolutely dirty in every detail?

"We once in a weak moment looked into a station master's room at a large station, and for pure dirt it could have given points to a dust heap. In the train carriages the floors are covered with the dirt of ages, cigarette ends, orange peel, sandwich papers. At intervals a porter saunters in with a broom and leisurely sweeps all the refuse into a corner, having first carefully closed every window, so that no atom of discomfort or infection shall be lost.

"Finally he departs, leaving behind him the rubbish and an atmosphere charged with germs and angry words. Truly a Japanese porter's definition of clearing up is removing rubbish from one place to another."

Robespierre's Style of Dress.

Robespierre's manner of dress, even at the period when its demagogues affected the slovenliness and disorder of indigence in order to flatter the people, was clean, decent and precise as that of a man who respects himself in the eyes of others. His white powdered hair, turned up in chignons over his temples; a bright blue coat buttoned over his hips, open over the breast to display a white vest; short yellow colored breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles, formed his invariable costume during the whole of his public life. It was said that he desired by thus never varying the style or color of his garments to make the same impression in the night and imagination of the public as a model of his face would have done.—Lamartine's "History of the Girondists."

A TURKEY FEAST.

General Lee Showed His Officers the Way to Enjoy It.

General Lee in a drawing room was a dignified and quiet gentleman, very kindly and gentle, especially to women and children. "On the field," says Major Ramsay in Harper's Magazine, "he was the general, the commander in all essential points. But in other points he could be as sympathetic and considerate as he was at home.

"In the latter part of December a barrel was delivered at our camp marked 'General Lee and Staff.' We opened it and found it was packed full of turkeys. We sent word to General Lee, and he rode over to our camp. There was snow on the ground, and we had laid the turkeys out on a board on the snow, the largest in the middle, and the others tapering off to the smaller at each end. There were about a dozen of them.

"General Lee dismounted and joined the group gathered round the present, carrying his walking stick and, indeed, sword in his hand. He was told that the fine turkey in the middle was his. He stood looking down at the turkey for a moment and then said, touching his big turkey with the scabbard of his sword:

"'This, then, is my turkey? I don't know, gentlemen, what you are going to do with your turkeys, but I shall send to the hospital in Petersburg an that some of the convalescents may have a good dinner.'

"He then turned on his heel and, walking to his horse, mounted and rode away. We looked at one another for a moment and then, without a word, replaced the turkeys in the barrel and sent them to the hospital."

Darrie and Kipling.

Mr. Darrie was one day at Waterloo station in a hurry to catch a train. He was hastening from the booking office with papers, "a good many sixpenny ones among them," he delightedly remarks, when, in rushing around a corner, he fell into the arms of Rudyard Kipling, equally in a hurry. Darrie turned on each other with scowling faces, then smiled in recognition and asked each other whither he went. Then Kipling, exclaiming, "Lucky beggar, you've got papers!" seized the bundle from Darrie, flung him some money and made off. "But you did not stoop to pick up his dirty halfpence, did you?" queried one of Mr. Darrie's keepers some day. "Didn't I though?" returned Barrie, and added ruefully, "But he hadn't flung me half enough."—St. James' Gazette.

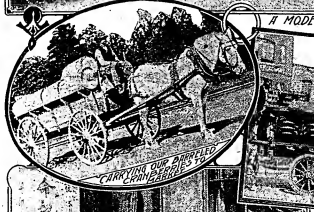
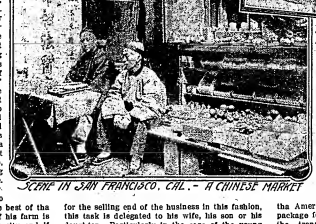
Transporting Produce to Market



A PRIMITIVE MODE OF GOING TO MARKET



ON THE WAY TO MARKET IN DIXIE

A MODERN REPORT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

THE NEW WAY OF JENDING FARM PRODUCTS TO MARKET

SCENE IN SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. - A CHINESE MARKET

THE marketing of his produce is obviously one of the chief responsibilities of the American farmer and in the progress of the present age, scarcely less than in the days of our grandfathers, is the problem of transporting the produce to market liable to prove something of a problem. To the outsider it might appear simple enough if he does not take into consideration the numerous factors that have bearing in the matter. For one thing, there is the weather, which must always be taken into account in planning a trip to market with produce, even though the journey is to be made over good roads. Then again, the product to be transported may be fragile, such as eggs, or perishable, as, for instance, some forms of berries and fresh fruits. And finally there is the necessity of taking into account probable market conditions at the prospective destination, for presumably produce will sell more readily on "market days" than on "off days."

Despite the complications that seem inevitable there are a surprising number of American farmers who still persist in the practice of marketing their products direct to the consumer. Indeed, in some localities the number seems to actually be increasing rather than diminishing. This is all the more remarkable when we pause to reflect upon the facilities that are now being offered the farmer for marketing his produce at his own door. Agents of commission merchants and "runners" for dealers in the large cities traverse rural routes, regularly, buying for spot cash eggs, vegetables, etc., and to such a point have things progressed that the farmer who prefers may sell his berry crop on the vines and his peaches or pears or apples on the trees leaving to the "other fellow" not only all the worries of transportation, but the bother of picking and packing and, incidentally, the loss from waste.

At the same time there is no certainty that the farmer who elects to market his own products has not the best of the bargain. He is very likely to have if his farm is located near any good-sized town or city and if he is engaged in diversified farming or trucking. Of course the man who is farming on a big scale and devoting himself to a specialty, be it fruit or celery or nuts or grain will not haul his produce to town by the wagonload and dispose of it at first hand to the hungry housewives. All the same it is ten chances to one that he is following the same basic principles that are the wise ones for the farmer desirous of selling to the best advantage the varied products of a small farm.

All the shrewdest men engaged in farming—be they operating on a large or small scale—have learned in recent years that it means added wealth and reduced worries if they can adopt the principle of selling as directly as possible to the ultimate consumer. Obviously, of course, they cut out the middleman's profit and better yet, they are enabled to eliminate many of the losses in perishable products which have caused so much controversy between commission merchants and farmers. Finally, by marketing direct, the tiller of the soil can establish a reputation for the quality of his products and this is a most important asset for the man who expects to continue in the same vocation year after year. Indeed, building on the foundation of quality and prompt delivery he may build up a circle of patrons of his own that will render him independent of everything because they will stand ready year after year to take the entire product of his farm and take it, too, at prices higher than rule for the regular run of similar produce in the open market.

As the advantages of such plans of direct dealing have been brought home to the farmers they have been gradually perfecting their facilities for making the short haul from the farm to the city dinner table. The farmer who is a specialist in fruit or vegetable raising or any other line is likely to have his own sales agent who goes to the city with each consignment of produce and personally superintends its disposition, or if he is not operating on a big enough scale to do this single handed he is likely to join forces with several of his neighbors to engage a representative who will handle their pooled products to the best possible advantage. In any event the quantity of produce to be handled insures to the shipper the elimated the best of freight or express service if, indeed he has not adopted the particularly up-to-date method of transporting his farm products by means of motor trucks.

The small farmer or truck gardiner operating on a small scale cannot of course afford this luxury of a sales agent, but on the other hand he is no longer content, if he hs wide awake, to divide profits with the commission merchant who insists on clinging to old ideas. So the small farmer, if he belong to a rapidly growing class, makes it a practice to journey to the city two or three times a week and to dispose of his products in the open-air marts which are now a feature of almost all of our large cities. His canvas covered wagon is made to serve as his sales counter and he thus has no expense.

In many instances if the farmer or truck by too busily engaged upon his farm to spare the for the selling end of the business in this fashion, this task is delegated to his wife, his son or his daughter. Particularly in the case of the young people do these periodical visits get to fill a large place in their lives. There are hardships to be sure, not the least of them suggested by the fact that usually the trip to market must begin era daylight in order to reach the city in time to catch the trade of the earliest marketers, but the farmer folk who have acquired the habit of huckstering in this way are invariably loath to give it up. Many a romance, too, has had its inception during the progress of the caravans of produce-laden wagons to market or in the exchange of courtesies between the farmer folk whose wagons are ranged so closely side by side in the congested urban market districts.

In the sparsely settled and more isolated sections of the country there are many odd specimen incident to the transportation of produce to market. In some localities where canals are yet in use the quaint, slow-moving boats are employed to carry the consignments, and in the south one may see donkeys, bullocks and all manner of unconventional steeds pressed into service to move the foodstuffs. Just here it may be noted that the old-fashioned colored folk of the south take as naturally to the conduct of portable market stands as a fish does to water. In a kindly climate such as is theirs most of the stapla vegetables will grow with very little attention and consequently they are enabled to devote most of their energy to finding a market for nature's bounty.

Although, as noted above, the motor truck has made a place for itself in the transportation of farm products, the major portion of this responsibility yet rests with the good old-fashioned farm wagon drawn by one or two horses. Strength rather than style is a requisite of a produce-carrying vehicla and this same may ha said of the horses employed and the harness. The growing preference of the American people for food commodities in package form is an influence felt indirectly in the transportation of farm products. From time out of mind herries have been sent to market in trays, boxes and crates, but lattarly there has been a tendency to provida standard size baskets for apples, peaches, tomatoes, etc. In the old days the consumer who purchased less than a barrel of apples or potatoes did not receive them in an "original package" bearing the grower's statement as to quantity and quality, but all this is being changed owing to prevailing market conditions—aided and obetted by growers who are eager to establish a reputation for their branded products.

Eggs are another commodity which will bring increased prices all the year round if furnished direct to discriminating consumers. The stigma of the cold storage egg is such that persons who are keen for really fresh eggs are in many instances willing to pay an advance of 50 to 100 per cent. over the prevailing market figura for eggs that can be depended upon. Poultry raisers have not been slow to take advantage of this and instead of the large crates mada familiar by cold storage methods we now find the fancy-priced "guaranteed" eggs put up by the dozen in boxes of wood or pasteboard, each box being closed by a seal which ensures that its contents have not been tampered with.

PASTIMES OF THE PAST

It has not been so very long ago—middle aged mothers and fathers of today will recall the happy, happy time—when the game of grace hoops was in fashion. Indeed, was quita tha rage, thongh of that plecid epoch it must ha said enthusiasm for out-of-door amusements as far as the dear girls were concerned, were as mild as pigeons' milk and never bubbled over tha brim of pleasure's modest cup. If thera was anything the young lady of that balcyon time dreamed it was tha charge of being a Tommy. No, no, she must never lose sight of deportment, and her pretty lips were framed on prisms and prunes to tha proper tucker for conversational purposes—that is, for the little conversation that went with the game. So grace hoops were antirely en regia with tha best ideas for deportment.

Tha charm of grace hoops was slowly but surely passing away when Maurice Thompson, who inventad "Alica of Old Vincennes," and his brother, Will Thompson, who wrote the thrilling poem, "Pickatts charge at Gettysburg," brought forward the long disused bow and arrow, laid aside for villainous gunpowder, tha Indianapolis Nawa says. Maurice wrote a clever little book called "The Witchery of Archary," and in a surprisingly short time young men and maidens joined in archery clubs, were plugging away with blunt arrows at targets as big around as cream cheese boxes of that day. Though these marksmen and women frequantly went wide of the target, not so Cupid, who was thera with his bow and a full complement of arrows. He shot center nearly every time, for it was said that the witchery of archery, no matter how poor the score at the chosa box target, was a great helper of Cupid, and many marriages followed.

Tha writer has seen the archery game played on several occasions, once on the grounds of the Knickerbocker school, with only girls engaged—what a morbinal baffair it was!—and once, on the same grounds, with a detachment of young gentlemen—with what a delightful difference!

But the archery game was not to last. It was at last to join tha grace hoops, and for a time its most ardent votaries were fain to solace their grief with the game of croquet and its melancholy dewydling.

When one looks back to that day, with its lady-like amusements, one can but wonder at the astounding progress made by tha sex in out-of-door sports. Now they shoot at a target or at live game, either, no more with blunted arrows, but with revolver and rifle; they play golf, swim, pedlin canoes, play basketball, even play baseball, after a fashion; ride astride—like their brothers—what a horror that would have been in tha days of that mothers—and do anything that any proper young man might be parmitted to do without the slightest censure and quite as a matter of course.

Yet, there was something in grace hoops that may be fondly charished in one's memory along with the dear old plush album, to which you contributed your picture and some verses—and there, too, lingering in memory, are the doleful cadence of "Lorena."

LAWYER CURED OF ECZEMA

"While attending school at Lahanon, Ohio, in 1882, I became afflicted with boils, which lasted for about two years, when the affliction assumed the form of an eczema on my face, the lower part of my face being inflamed most of the time. There would be watar-blisters rise up and opao, and wherever the water would touch it would burn, and cause another one to rise. After the blister would open, the place would scab over, and would burn and itch so as to be almost unbearable at times. In this way the sores would spread from one place to another, back and forth over the whole of my uppar lip and chin, and at times the whole lower part of my face would be a solid sore. This condition continued for four or five years, without getting any better, and in fact got worss all the time, so much so that my wife became alarmed lest it prove fatal.

"During all this time of boils and eczema, I doctored with the best physicians of this part of the country, but to no avail. Finally I decided to try Cuticura Remedies, which I did, taking the Cuticura Resolvent, applying the Cuticura Ointmant to tha sores, and using tha Cuticura Soap for washing. In a very short time I began to notica improvement, and continued to use the Cuticura Remedies until I was well again, and have not had a recurrence of tha trouble since, which is over twenty years. I have recommended Cuticura Remedies to others ever since, and have great faith in them as a remedia for skin diseases." (Signed) A. C. Brandon, Attorney-at-Law, Greenville, O., Jan. 17, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold avarywhera, a sampla of each, with 32-pago book, will ba mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 3 K, Boston.

The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prizefighter in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blinding blizzard but are confronted by the swindler husband. He is shot by the wife, but the chivalrous boy signs a note to the body taking the crime upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the woman's horse falls exhausted; the youth puts her on his own and follows hanging to the stirrup strap. Seeing he is an impediment, the woman thrusts her escort into a snow drift and rides on. Half-frozen he stumbles into the railroad station just as the train bears the woman away. Twenty-five years later, the man, George Gormly, is a multimillionaire in New York. His niece, Eleanor Haldane, a beautiful and wealthy society worker, and co-operates with him in her work. Gormly becomes enamored of Eleanor's type and finds himself frustrated in plot and track-vision plans by a gentleman, identified by the Gotham Trotting Company, who automobile accident that is causing Christmas eve fetters her to desire to his country home. Gormly makes the thousand party comfortable.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

"Never!" said Gormly. "And I confess to you that of late I have had similar thoughts. I want to do something for humanity," he went on slowly. "There are certain people who stimulate us to achievement, who awaken our ambition, who quicken our hope, who—Don't you comprehend? You have put something into my life which it lacked. Now I want to do something for—you, Miss Haldane."

"Or me, Mr. Gormly?"

"For you and my fellow men; for your approval and theirs. You see you have brought me in touch with a state of being of which I knew little. I was not born into your society. Until I saw you, I had no desire to mingle in it. I have not taken a vacation, except business trips aboard, for twenty-five years. For instance, this is the first time in all that long period that I have stood alone in a room and talked soothly, by her gracious privilege, on terms of outward equality with a fine, high bred, capable, woman. Can't you understand how you exert a new influence, how you have brought a new force into my life, and that from my acquaintance with you results are certain to come?"

He sat down on a chair on the other side of the fireplace, as he spoke, bringing himself on a level with her. She looked at him with curious intensity.

She saw his smooth shaven face seamed and lined with thought and care. She marked the strength, the intelligence, the resolution, in his countenance. It lacked completing touches of tenderness, it lacked the woman's influence; but aside from that it was altogether admirable, virile, and strong.

"I want to do something," he said, "to make me worth," his voice trembled, "the respect of," he looked at her—"of people like you," he went on, "and I am going to do something, too."

"You frighten me," said the girl, appalled as we often are by the granting of our prayers, the acceptance of our suggestions, the realization of our hopes. "I don't like to feel that what you are doing is for—for—"

"Say it, Miss Haldane. For you."

"I can't assume such a responsibility," she protested; "and such a motive is not the highest, the best."

"Nonsense!" said the man almost roughly. "The best things in life are done for the sake of good women, and there is not a human being in the world who possesses your powers and sympathies who does not thrill to responsibilities. In your heart of hearts you are glad—or you will be glad if through your instrumentality one thing is accomplished, by whatever way or means it may be—even by me—for mankind."

And the woman knew that the words were true. She thrilled even then to the strength of his protestation.

"You see I know humanity. I don't know society; you interpret that by my awkward reception of you all here tonight."

"Indeed," said the girl; "it was most graceful and kindly hospitality, and we deeply appreciate it."

"It is good of you to say so. These things I could learn," he hesitated, "if I had some one who knew to teach me; but other things I know myself. I am at a discount with women; but I can handle men and I know men. Every human being is glad to ally himself with success. If you and I together do something, you will be happy if we succeed."

"And miserable if we fail!" queried the girl with a nervous laugh.

"We will not fail."

"You are proposing a partnership?"

"There is a quasi-partnership existing between us now in the settlement house. Your devotion, your generous thought for those people, with my business hack of you—for it is back of you, Miss Haldane, in that or anything else to the last limit—is going to produce results there that nobody dreams of."

"Are you going to devote yourself to that?"

"No," said the man quickly. "I have something higher and greater in view.

That's your part of the partnership; mine is to help you, and—"

"And what are you going to do?" asked the girl, intensely interested, leaning forward, her breath coming quicker.

"I am going to be mayor of New York, for one thing, Miss Haldane."

"Yes. And then?"

It touched him immensely to see the matter of fact way with which she accepted his stupendous declaration.

"And then, I am going to be the best mayor New York ever had, an honest mayor. The administration shall be conducted on business lines, and business with me doesn't spell dishonor. There isn't a dishonest dollar in my fortune. You will forgive my personal talk? I don't often resort to it; but you make me tell whatever you want to know."

"Go on!"

"I am going to suppress graft; I am going to break up the gangs that rob the city; I am going to bring the traction companies, the freight and the others, to terms. I am going to make them give the people good value for the franchises they enjoy; I am going to reform the police force and stop its taking toll of crime, its connivance with sin! New York is going to be free, and I am going to tell it the truth and make it so!"

He stopped, carried away by the inspiration of his own words, carried away by the thought of what he could do, by the vision of what he could be, by the realization of what he could mean to the girl who sat there looking at him with eyes that glowed with admiration, with sympathy, with love.

"I want to do something for you, Miss Haldane."

"I Want to Do Something for You, Miss Haldane."

He was in his business, it has been my business all my life, Miss Haldane, to make dreams come true, and I am dreaming now a greater dream, dearer to me than that I have outlined before you."

"What could he mean? She strove to meet his glance fairly; but her own eyes fell before his own direct gaze.

"Do you think I can do it, make my dream come true?" he asked.

"Which dream, Mr. Gormly?"

"Both of them."

"That you can be mayor of New York; that you can redeem the city; that you can restore to the people their liberties—I don't know. Other men have tried it and have failed."

"And I may fail, too," answered Gormly very quietly. "Such achievements are not the results merely of one man's efforts. The people themselves must respond. Whether I can make them do that or not will determine the issue."

"I think you can, Mr. Gormly. You have made me respond."

"And will you help me?"

"I? What can I do?"

"Do what you have done tonight; listen to me, believe in me, inspire me, be my silent partner in my endeavor as I have been yours in your endeavor."

"And after you have succeeded?"

"That's the other dream, and—"

"Mr. Gormly," she said resolutely, "if you make that dream come true, you will have done more service to humanity than has ever been done by a citizen of this republic, and you will be the greatest man on this side of the world."

"And if my other dream comes true," said Gormly, "I will be the happiest."

"May they all come true!" said the girl impulsively rising and giving him her hand.

"Do you mean that?" eagerly asked the man, gratefully taking her proffered hand in his own firm, resolved clasp.

"I don't know," she faltered, "what your other dream is; but if it corresponds with the one you have told me, I repeat the prayer."

"At the proper time," said the man, "you shall know. Meanwhile, tomorrow we shall get to work."

"Tomorrow will be Christmas," said the girl, smiling.

"My Christmas present to you, Miss Haldane, will be the beginning of the campaign."

"And mine to you, Mr. Gormly," she returned laughing, "will be my good wishes and hearty encouragement in your labor."

"I could wish nothing better," he went on lightly, glad and relieved at this change from the intensity of the interview. "I shall announce myself as a candidate for the mayoralty at the next election. Representatives of the minority party have already approached me on that subject."

"And what did you say to them?"

"Nothing yet. You see this is all new work to me, and I must consider my way carefully."

"Have you ever made a public speech?"

"Never in my life."

"Well, if you can talk to the people as you have talked to me tonight, I am sure you will win."

The girl said it artlessly, carelessly; but his heart leaped to the assurance.

"That's to be determined," he said. "Most men would say it was easier to talk to one woman than to a thousand people. I have had experience with neither. As I told you, it has been a quarter of a century since I talked alone with a woman."

"Was that in the west of which you spoke?"

"I am glad to tell you. It was in the west. She wasn't a good woman, Miss Haldane," he said simply, "and I have never seen her since that night."

"Didn't you know that she was not a good woman?" asked the girl.

"Not at that time; I did not suspect, that is, I was only a boy of nineteen."

"And is it because of that women are to you what they are now?" she asked, so I am of the opinion that a large part of your executive ability, not to say genius, has descended to your daughter."

"Perhaps you," was the answer. "Eleanor is certainly a most capable young woman."

"And you had he a source of gratification to you that she chooses to exercise her capability in this direction rather than in the vain and aimless social avocations of a large and influential section of our so called best people in the city?"

"Certainly, very true. But frankly, I could wish that there was a more friendly division of time between the—or—high and the low, so to speak; that Eleanor could give more of her attention to those—duties, which after all, my dear Mr. Gormly, however we men of the world may deprecate them go to make up so large a part of life and leave more of the detail work a this institution to others."

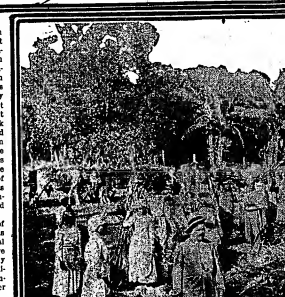
The BANANA and its RELATIVES



by FRANKLIN ADAMS

IF you did not eat three dozen bananas last year, you did not have your share. Over 40,000,000 bunches, or more than 8,000,000,000 bananas, were imported into the United States in 1910. The immensity of this shipment can be more readily grasped by the statement that it would cover an area 20 feet wide, reaching from New York to San Francisco, or, placed end to end, would extend thirteen times around the earth at the equator. The "stem" in its peel would launch the ships of the world. The wholesale value of the 1910 importation, at point of export, was over $12,500,000, while in all probability the consuming public of the United States expended over $25,000,000 for this delectable fruit.

During the past ten years the number of bananas consumed in the United States has more than doubled, and the increased tropical acreage under cultivation assures even more startling figures for the next decade. Many European countries are importing large quantities of bananas; last year Great Britain consumed over $8,000,000 worth, Germany, over $1,000,000, and France, $500,000.

With the world's decreasing food supply, and the wheat crop at a standstill, the banana comes forward as an important factor in saving the day. One acre with little labor will annually produce 17,000 pounds of bananas, or more than one and one-third times as much food substance as an acre of corn, two and one-third times as much as oats, almost three times as much per acre as wheat and potatoes, and four times as much as rye. The chemical composition of bananas and potatoes is almost identical.

CUTTING BANANAS IN COSTA RICA

from $10 to $20 per acre yearly. The net profit, however, averages about $60 per acre in the various banana producing sections. The banana often grows in combination with other products. In some cases it is used as a shade for young coffee plants.

A great many people are of the opinion that the banana would be much better if it was allowed to ripen on the plant, but this is not the case. Such fruit is strong in flavor, does not mature to perfection, and the skin breaks, attracting numerous insects, while the weight of the bunch itself becomes too great for the plant, either one or both coming to the ground. The bunches are cut when the fruit is one-half to three-quarters matured, though still green and as hard as nails. It continues to feed from the cut stalk, which contains a great amount of sap, until fully ripe. Should the cutting occur too soon, however, the fruit, although turning yellow, will never attain the perfect flavor.

With the cutting of the bunch ends the life of the plant, for it bears but once and is usually cut down to obtain the fruit, or succumbs a few days later to the cleaning process, which is merely the bringing of a spent place to the ground. Cutting the fruit itself involves the only careful labor on the banana plantation, as the bunches weigh from fifty to sixty pounds, and even slight knocks are followed by bruised spots, under which the fruit quickly ripens and decays. However, by the liberal use of dried

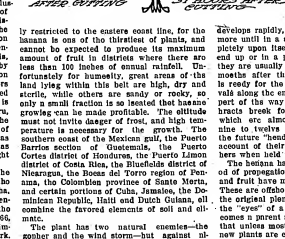
DESPATCH AND PACKING-UP CARS

Forty years ago there were very few people in this country who could boast of having seen a bunch of bananas. The fruit was practically unknown. Now, in even the most remote country store, this "pride of the tropics" is a familiar sight.

Despite the fact that millions of bunches are consumed, they belong almost wholly to one member of the family, the common yellow Gulcao.



Scientists have recognized and classified as many as 40 different species, ranging from the ornamental groups that do not develop fruit, to the giant bananas, the Plntano of the Spaniards.

The red banana is not common in the American markets. In the United States it is used only to "dress" fancy baskets of fruit, but in the tropical countries it is quite a favorite. The individual banana is large, but the stalk does not carry as many "hands" as the yellow variety, so as it does not bring as large a price to the grower and wholesaler, its extensive cultivation is not encouraged.

Banana culture is one of the oldest of industries. It has been known since the origin of the human race. Long before the dawn of history in the old world, perhaps long before the old world rose from the waters, mas lived on the fruit of the Musae. The banana was generally considered a native of southern Asia, and to have been carried into America by Europeans, until Humboldt threw doubt upon its purely Asiatic origin, quoting early authors who asserted that the banana was cultivated in America long before the conquest. It is claimed that at the time of the Incas in Peru, bananas formed one of the staple foods of the natives of the warm and moist tropical regions of the Montana. In spite of the uncertainty as to just which country may claim the fruit as indigenous, all tropical lands assert their right to it.

The first importation of bananas to the United States occurred in 1804, when the schooner Leynard, on a voyage from Cuba, brought to New York, as a commercial venture, a consignment of 20 bunches; but the real beginning of the trade dates back to 1866, when Mr. Charles Frank undertook the importation of fruit from Colon to New York. Previous to that venture small cargoes consisting solely of the red banana had been received at irregular intervals from Cuba. In 1870, Captain Baker, an owner of a Cape Cod schooner, took a chance to carry gold miners and machinery 200 miles up the Orinoco river in Venezuela. After discharging his cargo, Captain Baker ran into Jamaica to secure some cocoanuts as ballast to New York, carrying a few bunches of bananas on the deck as an experiment. The result promised a great future for the industry on that island, which has been fulfilled, the exports last year reaching $4,000,000.

On the American continent, bananas are successfully grown through 50 degrees of latitude, from Tampico, Mexico, 26 degrees north, to Asuncion in Paraguay, in the Tropic of Capricorn, 25 degrees south—a belt over 3,000 miles in width. Cultivation of the fruit is practically restricted to the eastern coast line, for the banana is one of the thirstiest of plants, and cannot be expected to produce its maximum amount of fruit in districts where there are less than 100 inches of annual rainfall. Unfortunately for humanity, great areas of the land lying within this belt are high, dry and sterile, while others are sandy or rocky, so only a small fraction is so located that banana growing can be made profitable. The altitude must not invite danger of frost, and high temperature is necessary for the growth. The southern coast of the Mexican gulf, the Puerto Barrios section of Guatemala, the Puerto Cortes district of Honduras, the Puerto Limon district of Costa Rica, the Bluefields district of Nicaragua, the Bocas del Torro region of Panama, the Colombian province of Sante Merta, and certain portions of Cuba, Jamaica, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Dutch Guiana, all combine the favored elements of soil and climate.

SMALL A MONTH AFTER CUTTING

IDENTICAL SPACE AT HOUSE AFTER CUTTING

The plant has two natural enemies—the gopher and the wind storm—but against almost all other tropical conditions its hardihood is remarkable.

It is a matter of common observation that the banana is absolutely seedless, cultivation through innumerable generations having led to a vegetable method of propagation. Some of the primitive seed-bearing varieties are still cold to exist in isolated regions of the far east.

The first step toward cultivation is the clearing of the land. Into the tangle of shrubs and vines and the thick smart of tropical vegetation the laborer comes with an ax and "machete" and cuts low everything but the giant trees. When all of the small timber and brush has been felled planting is commenced.

Young shoots are obtained from a plantation already in bearing and these are placed in rows about 12 feet apart. When the planting is finished, the only labor necessary is to keep down the weeds and carefully clear the ground about the root of each stalk.

The banana plant will grow with wonderful rapidity under favorable circumstances. In fact, the development from a newly planted sucker to the plant in full bearing is simply short of marvelous. Within a space of six or seven weeks the two or three-foot plant has more than doubled in size, and a month or so later the leaves cease to unfold and a spike appears out of the center of the crown. This is the future stalk of the bunch and carries a huge red blossom at the end. It develops rapidly, continually bending more and more until in a short time it has turned completely upon itself, so that the bananas grow end up or in a position the reverse of which they are usually hung. From seven to twelve months after the blossom appears the fruit is ready for the gatherer. At irregular intervals along the entire stalk, and only extending part of the way round it any one piece, the bracts break forth tiny ridges of flowers—which are almost immediately replaced by small hands of bananas. These are nine to twelve embryo bananas, so called on the future "hands" of the bunch, so called on account of their resemblance to those members when held in a certain position.

The banana has a curious and prodigal method of propagation, for before the parent stalk and fruit have matured new ones spring up. These are offshoots that grow from the root of the original planting, resembling sprouts from the "eyes" of a potato, and each in turn becomes a parent stalk with its fruit. It follows that unless most of the continually appearing new plants are cut out (which is the practice) the first stalk in a few years will become the center of a miniature jungle. The plants grow to a height of from fifteen to thirty-five feet, spreading in all directions, until the soil is overburdened with an enormous mass of stalk and leaf growth, and stunted fruit is produced. In planting for the market about 200 hills are allowed to the acre. Sometimes the number can be safely increased to 225, in which case there will be 500 stalks. However, after one year all of these stalks do not produce a marketable bunch of bananas, and the average yield is not over 300 full bunches to the acre per annum.

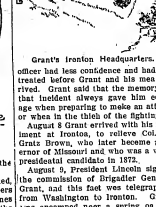
Perry, the well-known authority on bananas, estimates that a grower can produce a bunch for from ten to fifteen cents, which will have a market value of 30 cents. The cost of producing after the first crop is confined to cultivating and harvesting, which may be done for bananas leaves the fruit is safely brought to the railroads.

Bananas grown for the market are planted, as a rule, on the border of navigable waters

Plantations are divided into sections or zones of about ten to twenty miles in length, and the zones are "cut" in rotation, thereby cleaning up the available supply of fruit in one or several sections while it is maturing in others.

In Costa Rica the system which has been evolved for handling the fruit from the time it is cut from the plant until it is placed on the dealer's little stand in the far interior cities of the United States is indeed marvelous.

When a steamer starts from a United States port to secure its cargo a cable is sent advising of the departure, so that preparations can be made for cutting the crop. The carrying capacity of the vessel is known almost to a bunch. Each plantation manager furnishes at the beginning of the week an estimate of the amount of fruit he can cut, and one, two, or three sections may be relied upon, according to the size of the ship and the quantity of fruit available in each section. About thirty-six hours previous to the expected arrival of the steamship orders are sent to the plantations, notifying them to cut fruit for delivery on a specific day. The day before the steamer is due trains are made up and sent out to pick up the fruit, these trains being so timed that steamers will not be delayed waiting for cargo.



On the morning of the cutting, the plantation is all astir. First out are the "cutters," who go up and down the long avenues of banana plants, closely inspecting each hanging bunch. They carry long, keen knives at their sides, on poles armed with broad steel blades. The stalk of the full plant is half severed at a point about eight feet above the ground. The weight of the fruit causes the top of the plant to bend slowly to the earth, where the bunch is cut from the stem by a stroke of the machete. Following the cutters come the picking-up gangs, who deliver the fruit at the receiving platforms along the railroad track. An inspector watches the fruit as it is passed into the cars. He counts and grades each bunch, rejecting those that show signs of ripening and those that are undersized or bruised.

After cargoes are discharged in the United States, solid trains of banana cars run as "specials" every day in the week from New York, Baltimore and New Orleans to all of the large cities of the country. Corloads are even shipped to Calgary, Canada, over 2,000 miles from New Orleans.

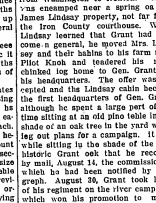
The front ventilators of the forward care of these trains, and the rear ventilators of the last cars, are connected by means of canvas tubes run into a main trunk chute. A powerful exhaust draws off the heat thrown out by the fruit in its ripening process, and the fans circulate cold air through every car in the train. During the winter months the operation is reversed, and fruit in transit during very cold weather is warmed while proceeding to its destination.

SCENE OF SUCCESS

Where Grant Received His Commission as General.

Old Lindsay Cabin Headquarters Where He Planned the Campaign Which Won Promotion and Started Great Career.

Ironton, Mo.—Of all the events of the Civil war that are being recalled in the half-century anniversary revival of interest, few are of more general interest then the story of Gen. U. S. Grant's receiving his commission as Brigadier-General on Missouri soil. A movement has been started to purchase the site at Ironton of the delivery of this commissior for a national peric.



The campaign which Gen. Grant planned at the cabin which was his first headquarters as general brought him advancement from Brigadier General to Major General and was the real beginning of his career as a victorious commander.

A graduate of West Point, who had seen service in the Mexican war, Grant had left the army because he could not support his family on his salary. He tried farming near St. Louis, became a real estate agent without much financial success, and in 1860 moved his family to Galena, Ill., where he became a clerk in his father's leather store.

At the outbreak of the Civil war he drilled a company organized at Galena and accompanied them to Springfield, when it was sworn in and incorporated into a regiment.

Gov. Yates obtained Grant's services as inspector of state troops to report to the government, and when President Lincoln issued the second call for volunteers Grant was sent to Mattoon to muster in the regiment, of which he became colonel.

He has confessed that he was not confident of the outcome of his first skirmish, but he found his opposing officer had less confidence and had vacated before Grant and his men arrived. Grant said that the memory of that incident always gave him courage when preparing to make an attack or when in the thick of the fighting.

August 6 Grant arrived with his regiment at Ironton, to relieve Col. B. Gratz Brown, who later became governor of Missouri and who was a vice-presidential candidate in 1872.

August 9, President Lincoln signed the commission of Brigadier General Grant, and this fact was telegraphed from Washington to Ironton. Grant was encamped near a spring on the James Lindsay property, not far from the Iron County courthouse. When Lindsay learned that Grant had become a general, he moved Mrs. Lindsay and their babies to his farm near Pilot Knob and teadered his mud-chinked log home to Gen. Grant for his headquarters. The offer was accepted and the Lindsay cabin became the first headquarters of Gen. Grant, although he spent a large part of his time sitting at an old pine table in the shade of an oak tree in the yard working out plans for a campaign. It was while sitting in the shade of the now historic Grant oak that he received by mail, August 15, the commission of which he had been notified by telegraph. August 28, Grant took leave of his regiment on the river campaign, which won his promotion to major general of volunteers in February, 1862. His later achievements are history.

The Grant headquarter premises have been known for many years as "Emerson Park," the late Judge J. W. Emerson having acquired the property and erected a fine brick residence on the site of the log house. In 1886 the surviving members of Gen. Grant's regiment erected a statue of a federal soldier to mark the spot where he received his commission.

The property is now owned by J. H. York, who maintains it in good condition, but a movement has been started to have the government purchase this property and the battlefield at Fort Davidson, a mile away, as national parks.

Mrs. Lindsay, whose humble home was Gen. Grant's first headquarters, lives in St. Louis, but visits the thrilling scenes of her young motherhood each summer.

Lindsay, who died several years ago, was a union supporter and active in the Ironton Home Guards. He intimately knew all the surrounding country and did some valuable scouting for Gen. Grant, who rode over to the farm several times to see that all was well with Mrs. Lindsay and her babies during Lindsay's absence.

Barbers Denounce the Safety Razors

ST. PAUL, MINN.—Ways and means to deprive the safety razor of its citizen's right and declare it unconstitutional, to annihilate it, remove it from the hams of every free-born American, and thus bring the barber shop back into its own, furnished one of the subjects for the emotional discussion that took place at the National Barbers Supply Dealers association convention here.

As the insidious influence of the degrading safety razor fired the speakers at the convention to eloquent heights, these points were brought forth:

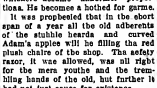
Barber shops are not so popular as they were in the past.

The dark man with the beard, instead of permitting himself the ecstacy of a 16-cent shave, whittles himself with the safety, in wild, carefree swoops, which are equally injurious to the fits and complexion of the victim and to the profession.

Safety razors promote efficiency. If allowed to flourish they will eventually accomplish the ruin of American manhood. Rome's celebrated slump was due to just such introductions as the ornery safety razor.

"And," finished one of the speakers, "after wasting its owner from the refinement of the barber shop, making him milnieter to the demands of his whiskers across his own threshold, the safety will gradually pull upon the man devoted to it. Growing careless, the man will one day lay open the interior of his face with an unusually negligent swing of the supposed 'safety' razor, and what then? The man, being weaned from the barber shop, does not care to return. He is timid in the knelt of the safety. He lets his whiskere assume ahnormel proportions. His becomeke a hotbed for germs.

It was prophesied that in the short span of a year all the old adherents of the stately shave and curved Adam's apples will be filling the red plush chairs of the shop. The safety razor, it was found, was all right for the mern youths and the trembling hands of the old, but further it had not just cause for existence.



Accident Leads to a Canine Debauch

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—A score or more dogs of assorted breeds livened up things on Fifth avenue the other day by becoming intoxicated on the spilled contents of an overturned brewery truck. It is said by eyewitnesses that the drunken dogs acted almost "human" in the delirious frenzy which followed their excessive libations.

The truck, one of the motor variety, was chugging along Fifth avenue between Ninth and Tenth streets, when it broke down and its contents, several cases of a very popular brand of hop beverage, were spilled into the gutter. Immediately a golden stream, sparkling with the pearl-up effervescence, gurgled and bubbled down the gutter.

The day was hot and all the neighborhood dogs, most of which belonged to Fifth avenue storekeepers, were wandering about in search of water to drink.

Bilters, a graceful greyhound, raised her head from between her paws as she lay in the doorway of a millinery establishment and sniffed the air suspiciously. The sprightly flitters, because famipant.

"Woof, my deera!" she bayed, end in 20-foot jumps made for the spot whence came the tantalizing aroma of the wasting beverage.

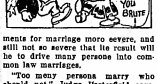
Immediately every other dog on the block, and some others from adjacent blocks, realized that at last it was his day. Following the lead of the leaping greyhound, they made for the gutter and eagerly began lapping up the golden stuff.

The dogs, too full to find their way home, end too dizzy to navigate anyway, were later led or carried to their homes by their owners.

Blame Middlemen for the High Prices

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—An experiment to determine how far a city can go in reducing the cost of living is to be made in Indianapolis under the direction of Mayor Shank. Following a suggestion of James Wilson, secretary of the department of agriculture, that municipalities take up the question, the mayor appointed a commission to make an investigation. These men will spend the next few weeks investigating conditions and are supposed to be responsible for the high cost of farm and garden products. On their report will depend the city's action.

Several years ago Indianapolis established a market place for the purpose of giving the people a chance to deal direct with producers and in that manner to keep prices as low as possible. Preliminary inquiry indicates unscrupulous middlemen have been bartering the market, buying up farm produce at wholesale prices and then selling at whatever prices they could extort, thus forcing all prices on the market upward. Some have gone so far as to disguise their employes as farmers and have them take their places in the market with what were supposed to be farm wagons with fresh produce. It developed that middlemen control the price of four-fifths of the produce bandied on the Indianapolis market and that they have advanced the prices to suit themselves.



Comparisons made between the prices of a few farmers and those taken in by the middlemen with the prices fixed at the market stands show that the farmers have been and are selling food stuff at on average of less than one-half the amount fixed hy the middlemen.

Divorces a Close Second to Weddings

KANSAS CITY, MO.—As a habitation of the matrimonially distressed, Kansas City, according to figures just compiled, has Reno backed into oblivion.

These figures show that one of every three Kansas City marriages has its finale in the divorce court.

Whatever the cause, since January 1 there have been 1,300 marriage licenses issued, and in the same time nearly 700 divorce suits filed. This is an increase in the number of marriage licenses issued over a like period in 1910, but a proportionately greater increase in number of divorce suits filed. Incidentally, more children from broken homes have been taken charge of by the juvenile court than in any similar period. Sociologists and magistrates are worried at the showing and there is a demand for more stringent divorce laws.

Judge Porterfield of the juvenile court also is worried at the showing, but he sees no relief in more stringent divorce laws. He believes that the only remedy lies in making requirements for marriage more severe, and still not so severe that the result will be to drive many persons into common law marriages.

"Too many persons marry who should not," Judge Porterfield says. "That's where all this divorce trouble begins, and right there the lawmakers must begin if they are to help conditions. You can't legislate divorces and broken homes out of existence as long as just anybody can get married regardless of mental and physical defects. There ought to be a commission to pass on the mental and physical condition of applicants for marriage licenses, and on the earning capacity of the men. Worthless men who can't even support themselves marry.

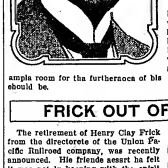
BEACHY A POPULAR BIRD MAN

The first cross-country race between aviators in this country was won by Lincoln Beachy, who flew from New York to Philadelphia, winning a prize of $5,000. He also won several prizes at the recent International meet in Chicago, and excited plaudits from thousands of spectators by his many daring "circus stunts" in the air. Beachy not long ago attracted attention by his daring flights at Niagara Falls. Driving a Curtis biplane, he flew over the falls, down under the suspension bridge and over the death-dealing rapids. Frequently his machine was so close to the water that he was drenched with spray. Beachy is 31 years of age, and is one of the Curtis flyers. He is an ambitious aviator, understands his machine perfectly and never fails to perform brilliantly.

In the great cross-country race which he won, there were three contestors who started on the long journey. Beachy made a brilliant flight making one landing at Trenton, where the actual flying time between the two cities was 2 hours 22 3-5 minutes. Most of the way he flew at the rate of a mile a minute.

He remained for about ten minutes. Then he was off again.

MADE SPECTACULAR CAMPAIGN



James K. Vardaman, who has been chosen at the primaries for the Mississippi seat in the United States senate, was formerly governor of the state. He was elected governor in 1903 and was defeated for senator by John Sharp Williams in 1907 and by Senator Percy in 1910.

Mr. Vardaman used spectacular methods in his recent unique senate campaign. One hundred and sixty oxen, harnessed in eighty spans, drew a chariot upon which Mr. Vardaman rode through the streets of Meridian in a most spectacular parade during his tour of Mississippi in the interest of his candidacy. Tears were five brass bands, and a guard of 100 prominent citizens rode horseback. Then came the Vardaman "car." The great string of animals, all white, carried white streamers bearing the legend: "Vote for the white chief!" and "Uphold the white South."

On the back of each ox was a man, shrouded in white. At each animal's head walked a white-clad torch-bearer.

A sort of throne was erected in the ox wagon and upon this sat Varda man. The candidate was in immaculate white linen and had a big white hat. His long hair fell free down his shoulders and was cut off by the linan

PUGILIST AND CLASS LEADER

A. J. Drexel Biddle is probably one of the most unique personalities in the world. In him are united three distinct characteristics that are in every way opposite to one another. He is Philadelphia's millionaire society man, star pugilist and successful Bible class leader. He is a young man full of energy and spirit and so far he has made his career a unique one. He is known almost as well in Europe as in this country and since coming into his wealth has made himself known as a worker for the cause of philanthropy.

Mr. Biddle began life as a newspaper reporter. At the age of 19 he was an athletic young fellow, with a perfect passion for boxing. He would box with any one and at any time.

This is the man who bee for years been giving his time to philanthropic work in Philadelphia. He is a member of the fashionable Church of the Holy Trinity, in Rittenhouse Square, in the parish house of the church, which is equipped with a commodious gymnasium, Mr. Biddle has found ideas of what up-to-date Christianity ample room for the furtherance of his should be.

FRICK OUT OF U. P. BOARD

The retirement of Henry Clay Frick from the directorate of the Union Pacific Railroad company, was recently announced. His friends assert he felt it was not in keeping with the spirit of the times for a director in one railroad to have an influential voice in the affairs of an active competitor. He has very large holdings in the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe.

Henry Clay Frick's career cod mercial success is closely interwoven with the history of the steel and iron industry. He was one of Andrew Carnegie's lieutenants, and was deep in the confidance of that ironmaster. They had a serious disagreement, however, when Mr. Carnegie took over the $1,000,000 forfeit money which Frick deposited as a "binder" to buy the Carnegia properties but which project failed. Later Carnegie sold his interests to the United States Steel corporation for at least three times the price he named to Frick and associates.

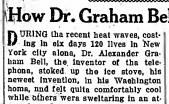
Union Pacific and Atchison are so-called competing roads at many points and Mr. Frick had interests in both

NATIONAL CAPITAL NEWS

Census Shows Increased Farm Values

WASHINGTON.—The value of farm land per acre in the north central states has practically doubled in the last ten years, according to a bulletin issued by the census bureau. The total value of farm lands and buildings in the division has increased from less than $10,000,000 in 1900 to more than $20,000,000 in 1910, while the number of farmers has increased only a fraction of one per cent.

More than two-thirds of the farmers in the section own their own farms, while more than half these owners have their land from mortgage. A slight decrease from 1900 is shown in the number of owners, while the tenant farmers have increased by more than twenty per cent. A significant feature of the bulletin is the indication given that the older states of the section are decreasing in agricultural importance, presumably owing to increase in urban manufacturing populations.



The total amount of land included in farms in 1910 was reported as 349,962,000 acres, as compared with 317,349,000 acres in 1900, an increase of 32,613,000 acres, or ten per cent. This important increase is largely due to the extension of agricultural activities into western North and South Dakotas, Nebraska and Kansas, and into northern Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan. These increases offset important decreases in other sections.

The increases in total farm acreage, in the order of their importance, are: North Dakota, 83 per cent.; South Dakota, 36 per cent; Nebraska, 29 per cent.; Michigan, 8 per cent.; Wisconsin, 6 per cent.; Minnesota, 5 per cent.; Kansas, 4 per cent., and Missouri, 2 per cent. The decreases are: Iowa, Indiana and Ohio, each 2 per cent, and Illinois, 1 per cent. There are also important decreases in the older sections of the other states.

Each of the states on the western border of the division, and those along the Canadian border, show increases in the number of farms. These increases, in the order of their importance, are: North Dakota, 64 per cent.; South Dakota, 47 per cent.; Nebraska, 6 per cent.; Wisconsin, 4 per cent.; Kansas and Michigan, each 2 per cent., and Minnesota, 1 per cent.

How Dr. Graham Bell Keeps Away Heat

DURING the recent heat waves, costing in six days 120 lives in New York city alone, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, stoked up the ice stove, his newest invention, in his Washington home, and felt quite comfortably cool while others were sweltering in an atmosphere from which there appeared no prospects of relief. Doctor Bell is not going to patent his ice stove. Now that he has given it a Doctor Bell's ice stove is the exact opposite of the ordinary coal furnace. While the latter consumes coal and radiates heat to keep up the temperature, the former consumes ice and radiates cool to keep up the temperature, the former consumes ice and radiates cooling waves of air to keep it down.

In the ground floor of Doctor Bell's Washington residence is what was once a swimming tank. Having been built to hold water, it can safely be depended upon to hold cold air. It is a well known fact that cold air is heavier than warm air. Everybody has noticed that when a window is opened in a room in cold weather the feet feel the cold first. This is because the chilled cold air has fallen to the floor. So if cold air was poured into the ordinary room it would flow out under doors and through floor cracks wherever it could find room.

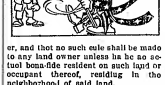
In addition to the old swimming tank, which Doctor Bell has fitted up as a study, with easy chair, couch and table and books, the inventor needed an apparatus for supplying cold air to the tank. This was a simple matter. A large ice box was constructed and into this about 600 pounds of ice are put twice every week. Air pipes lead into the ice box and other pipes convey the chilled air into the inventor's study and the flow being regulated by an electric fan.

Wireless Telegraph for the Cavalry

THE military value of the cavalry branch has been enormously increased by the adoption of wireless telegraphy, for the first time in this country thoroughly tried out in the Texas maneuvers.

The signal corps had daviand an extremely light and portable wireless apporatus, easily carried on the back of a horse and capable of being put into operation from any point in the field within a few minutes. It was found that messages could be easily received when the cavalry detachment was anywhere within twenty-five miles of a receiving station, a fact which added greatly to the value of the cavalry in its scouting capacity. A light collapsible steel mast, not much larger than a fishing rod, was used to support the antennae accessory to establish communication.

The real purpose of the recent great assemblage of troops in Texas, aside from international considerations, was the creation of one tremendous military unit, and that was successfully accomplished for the first time since the Civil war, in the opinion of Major General Carter.



Five times the cost of this operation would not measure its value to the country or the experiment, declared General Carter. It was the first opportunity that the modern army had to get together all branches of the service—the infantry, the cavalry, the artillery, the transportation and subsistence departments—and to make a thorough test of what had been purely theoretical estimates of the proper balance between them.

Interior Department Issues Warning

COMPLAINTS have been received by settlers on reclamation projects that by reason of the misrepresentations of land agents they have been induced to purchase lands which were, afterward found to be without any rights to water from the government canals. The secretary of the interior issued a warning which, while it refers particularly to the Rio Grande project in New Mexico and Texas, is equally applicable to other projects containing large areas of private lands.

"All persons are warned against accepting any statements concerning this project without inquiry from the officers of the reclamation service. Experience has shown that some warning of this kind is necessary because misleading statements have been issued regurding the project and the conditions existing upon it.

"In particular, attention is directed to the requirements of the reclamation act regarding residence and cultivation. The act prescribes that no right to the use of water for land in private ownership shall be sold for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one land owner, and that no such sale shall be made to any land owner unless he be an actual bona-fide resident on such land or occupant thereof, residing in the neighborhood of said land.

"It also is required that the land owner shall reclaim at least one-half of the total irrigable area of his land for agricultural purposes before any right to the use of water shall permanently attach.

"It is not known how many years will be required for the construction of the storage dam, nor is it safe to make predictions as to when water will be available in view of the many uncertainties existing. Warning also is given that the amount of available water power has been grossly exaggerated in many current discussions."

THE BUSYBODY.

We shun them at every opportunity, those busybodies who pose as our friends when need, they are quite the contrary, and who seem to think they are endowed by a special act of Providence with regulating the affairs of their neighbors as well as of those who would rather not be their neighbors. It is easy to comprehend how such persons earn their characterization and easier still for us to apply such a description to all those who in any way display what we may regard as an undue interest in our affairs, says the Christian News and Courier. It is possible, however, that the cap which we place so unhesitatingly upon the heads of certain persons would prove a better fit for us if we could persuade ourselves to "try it on." Unquestionably the mere suggestion to some of us that we could ever overstep the limit of our friendly interest in others is distasteful, and in many cases probably unwarranted, yet it is true that one of the distinctive characteristics of the present age, with its freedom of living and its consequent sacrifice of many of those refining and restraining influences that were so vital a part of another and more distant day, is the readiness with which we indulge our curiosity. Not satisfied nowadays with the bestowal of a confidence which is sufficient, perhaps, to place our interest it is not unusual for some persons to solicit further details and in other ways to evince a too eager concern in the affairs of others.

Gustav Frenssen's "Klaus Hinrich Baas" reminds one of "David Copperfield" in its long deliberative unwinding of a life history up to middle age and a little, too, in its general plan, with its unhappy love marriage followed by a more satisfactory union, says the London Times. But Frenssen plows deep in the field of moral and social problems, and its plot is convincing—we are not obliged to take the facts on the honor of the narrator. The hero is a peasant's son—a place of quiet, proud, full-blooded North German humanity. In one moment of bitter disillusionment he asks himself what his too great teachers, School and Church, had done for him except mislead him. They had given him fabrics, impossible ideals, "two gospels, the gospel of the Savior and the gospel of Schiller but of true, genuine knowledge of life not a vestige." How he gets this knowledge is the theme of the book; a fine and moving story which lows on in a broad stream of incident and character that gives a singularly powerful impression of the messiveness and variety of life.

New York is protesting against a new danger in the reckless driving of automobiles by boys and girls through the streets, and legal means are to be sought to prevent the lives of citizens being put in danger by children. The automobile, in some way, seems to be associated with disregard of the rights of pedestrians to an extent which has rendered it a menace of civilization, as well as one of its luxuries. But as far as children are concerned, they should be legally restrained from being allowed in charge of any vehicle. They are too fond of any kind of power and too irresponsible in its use—an exceedingly dangerous combination.

Now it is discovered that the famous pirate, Captain Kidd, who, according to the old song, "much wickedness he did as he sailed," was really no pirate at all, but a respectable and good-tempered old sailor. Set there are some cherished illusions to which the mind will always cling, and it will require more authority than is given to reduce the popular imagination to accept a romantic and picturesque pirate as an unadventuring and commonplace good honest man.

Another rich American girl is to marry an English noble man. The last generation of the British peerage will be as much American as English. If these international marriages keep on, and with such an infusion of Americanism, even the famous British conservatism and love of tradition may give way to a startling extent. But the nation seems not to care for this American dagger as long as it can assimilate so much of the American coin.

RAIL STRIKE LOOMS

WALKOUT ON HARRIMAN LINES WEST OF MISSOURI SEEMS UNAVOIDABLE.

VAIN CONFERENCE IS HELD

Recognition of Craft Federation on the Entire System is Demanded by the Man—Twenty Thousand Employes Involved in Dispute.

Chicago.—Developments in the labor controversy on the Harriman railroads indicate that a strike of the shop employes of the entire Union Pacific-Southern Pacific system west of the Missouri river is unavoidable, unless a peacemaking factor not now apparent enters the situation without delay. Twenty thousand men are said to be involved.

This conclusion seemed inevitable to both railroad and labor officials during the day, following a fruitless conference between Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and operation of the Harriman lines, and J. W. Kline, international president of the blacksmiths' union. The conference indicated clearly that both sides consider a compromise impossible and that the outcome depends solely on the confidence which each possesses of a successful termination of a strike.

The main point at issue concerns the recognition of a federation of the shop craft employes on the entire system in place of the separate organizations that have contracts with the individual railroads of the system. The railroads insist that any negotiations for higher wages and changed rules in working conditions must be conducted as in the past.

The railroads have assumed a standpat attitude, based on their conclusion that they are in a position to withstand a shop strike successfully at this time and their determination to yield no further to the demands of organized labor, while the labor leaders assert they are able to stop every wheel on the Harriman system.

Shop employes, including the machinists, blacksmiths, car workers, sheet metal workers, car men, and pipe fitters on the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Oregon-Washington Railroad and Navigation company, Oregon Short Line, Houston and Texas Central, and San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake roads, have voted to strike, unless their federation is recognized, and are said to be awaiting only official sanction to call a walkout.

THINNING RANKS OF VETERANS REVIEWED BY TAFT.

President Delivers Address to Men of '61—Peace is Subject of His Speech.

Rochester, N. Y.—The fast thinning ranks of the Greed Army of the Republic, gathered in Rochester for the forty-fifth annual national encampment, passed in review of President Taft. Taft in a speech to the veterans announced himself unalterably opposed to the sectrume of reform which he declared demagogues and theoratical extremists have advanced for the solution of the problem of concentrated wealth in this country.

The president spoke to the veterans of the G. A. R. and in the struggle which they went through 50 years ago and the one which he said now confronts this nation he found a striking analogy. In the end, the president said the peace loving, straight thinking people of the country will be victorious, but the fight itself may be the longer because it will be fought out to the end without bloodshed and the roar of the battlefield.

From the moment he reached Rochester until he left for Beverly the president was surrounded by veterans. He stood on a reviewing stand for more than two hours while thousands of old soldiers, most of them in blue, many of the just tottering along with the aid of friends, filed slowly by. Maj. Gen. Frederick D. Grant, Major Edgerton and Commander-in-Chief Gilman of the G. A. R. stood with the president.

MIKADO GIVES CZAR A SHIP

Japan Returns to Russia Vessel Sunk by its Crew at Port Arthur and Refloated.

Tokyo, Japan.—An official statement will be issued announcing the return to Russia of the former Russian hospital ship Angara, which was sunk by her crew at Port Arthur in November, 1904, to prevent the vessel from falling into the hands of the Japanese. The ship was refloated by the Japanese, converted into an auxiliary cruiser and added to the navy of Japan. She was then renamed the Angawa and used as a training ship.

STORING BAD EGGS

PRODUCE WRITER IS NEARLY SUSPENDED FOR ASSAILING TRUST.

FRESH SUPPLIES HELD UP

Newly Laid Product Bought for 17 Cents and Sold for 25 to 30 Cents a Dozen—Old Ones Laid Away for Future—Federal Inquiry Soon.

Chicago.—Under the direction of an industrial butter and egg trust, thousands of cases of bad eggs are being placed in Chicago storage houses for future human consumption. The stock of good eggs in storage is being constantly increased, while new laid eggs, which cost the commission man 17 cents a dozen, go to the housewife for 25 to 30 cents.

Statements to this effect published by the Chicago Produce Bulletin—known in the trades as the "Green Sheet"—nearly caused the author to be suspended from the Chicago butter and egg board. He was charged with "uncommercial conduct."

One of the "uncommercial" things which Isaac Tuck, publisher and editor of the bulletin, did was to predict a coming "break" in the price of eggs and butter. His other "uncommercial" offense was to decry the storage and sale of bad eggs.

In the face of an unprecedented production, Mr. Tuck said in his paper, the prices of eggs and butter remain exorbitant. Furthermore, he hinted at the responsible parties.

Investigations, following the publication of the article, brought out a general conviction among producers men that the "price hoard" of the butter and egg board regulates the prices of butter and eggs. It was even said that since the coexistion of New York poultry dealers for an identical offense many dealers had refused to serve on the price board.

According to a few independent dealers exactly the same conditions prevail in the butter and egg situation in Chicago as prevailed in the New York poultry market when thirteen dealers were sent to the penitentiary for conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Butter and eggs, it is said, are coming in the market in unusual quantities, but, as fast as they arrive, are being obstructed to the cold storage houses. A man in the egg business declared during the day that the price of the highest grade eggs in the consumer should not be more than 22 cents a dozen.

September 13 the long promised government investigation into the butter and egg board of Chicago is to be taken up.

BEATTIE TRIAL IS STARTED

Detectives Take Stand—Several Others Are Heard—Wife's Uncle Gives Testimony.

Chesterfield Courthouse, Va.—On the anniversary of the marriage of the woman he stands accused of murdering, Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., set in the stuffy courtroom and heard seven witnesses called by the commonwealth give testimony on which the prosecution hopes to send him to the electric chair.

Of the seven witnesses examined two were city physicians, Dr. Herbert Mann and Dr. Wilbur Marcer, who examined Mrs. Beattie's body on the night of the murder.

The others were Thomas Owen, a court stenographer, friend of Mrs. Beattie; Detectives Wren and Wiltshire of Richmond, who investigated the case; Coroner Loving of Chesterfield county, and May Stuart, a stout middle-aged woman, who told of Beattie's associations with Beulah Binford.

LOSE DATA IN ALASKA RIVER

Professors Starr and Maddan Are Plunged into Waters of Big Delta.

Cordova, Alaska.—All field notes and the camera and exposed films of the Smithsonian institution glacial expedition are somewhere on the bottom of the Big Delta river, according to advices received here. The current of the river tipped up a wagon in which Professors B. F. Starr and Lawrence Madden were crossing the stream. The men got ashore.

VETOES COTTON BILL

PRESIDENT TAFT DECLARES TARIFF MEASURE UNWISE.

Congress Adjourns With Echo of Third Veto Ringing in its Ears.

Washington.—With the echo of another presidential veto ringing in its ears the special session of congress adjourned.

In his third tariff veto message the president made special objection to the attempt to add a revision of the iron and steel and chemical schedules to the cotton bill as amendments.

"I feel," the message of the president said, "that there was practically no consideration of either schedule by any committee of either house. There were no facts presented to either house in which I can find material upon which to form any judgment as to the effect of the amendments either upon American industries or upon the revenues of the government."

The president discussed the bill as "unpolitical and unpleasant."

"The bill," he continues, "illustrates and enforces the views which I have already expressed in vetoing the wool bill and the so-called free list bill, as to the paramount importance of securing, through the investigation and reports of the tariff board, a definite and certain basis of ascertained fact for the consideration of tariff laws. When the reports of the tariff board upon these schedules are received the duties which should be imposed can be determined upon justly and with intelligent appreciation of the effect that they will have both upon industry and upon revenue."

TO REVEAL GRAFT IN OHIO

Former Setats Official Will Make Full Confession as to Corrupt Practices.

Columbus, O.—At the conclusion of a conference participated in by Attorney General Hogan, County Prosecutor Turner and Rodney J. Diegle, former sergeant-at-arms of the senate, who was convicted of aiding and abetting bribery in the Ohio legislature, it was announced that Diegle would make a full confession of what he knows of corruptive practices in the last assembly.

For his part in aiding the alleged graft hunt, Diegle will receive mercy at the hands of the common pleas court when the time comes for sentence to be passed. Probably he will escape a penitentiary sentence. He was given two weeks to prepare his confession.

It is expected several lobbyists will be given like court as a result of Diegle's agreement to confess.

RISK FRAUDS ARE BARED

President of Stata Officials' Body Scores Risk Concerns—Forgery is Used.

Milwaukee—A number of industrial, health and accident insurance companies were severely criticised by Joseph Hutton of Virginia, president of the organization, in his annual address before the forty-second national convention of state insurance commissioners here.

Mr. Hutton said that an investigation by a committee of 14 or 15 companies doing a health and accident insurance business resulted in charges that were shocking in the extreme.

"As the commutitee which made the investigation has in its report nearly ready, I shall not anticipate the remedies they will suggest for the conditions disclosed, except to say that it is incumbant upon us to root out this evil without mercy."

COURTESY LEADS TO ARREST

Alleged Stage Bandit, Polite to Woman Passenger, to Be Tried.

Denver, Colo.—A bandit's softly modulated voice and an extremely courteous manner of addressing women passengers of a stage coach held up in the San Miguel canon of Colorado in 1910, caused the arrest of Alexander Peterson, accused of the crime, at Pagoee Springs, the state. He was brought to Denver to answer an indictment returned by the federal grand jury last November.

Cement Talk No. 3

Concrete is the hardened rock-like product made by using some brand of Portland cement with sand, gravel or broken stone and water. The cement is the material which binds fine and gravel or broken stone together; this binding action is produced by water. The terms "Cement" and "Concrete" thus have different meanings, although they are frequently used interchangeably. While cement is only one of the materials in concrete, it is perhaps the most important. To insure the best results in concrete work, the highest grade of Portland cement should be used. The concrete worker may rest assured that he has the best cement if he will make certain that the word UNIVERSAL is printed on each sack of cement. Naughty, but Nice.

Edith, who is eight years old, was invited to a children's party. Her blonde hair was perfectly straight, but becomingly arranged, and she started off in high feather.

But on her return she was rather silent, and, on being questioned as to her experience, said:

"I had a nice time, but it would have been nicer if my hair was kinky. All the other girls' hair was kinky, and I shan't go to another party unless my hair is fixed in kinks."

So the next week, when another invitation came for the little girl, her hair was curled and fluffed out in the most approved style.

Then her mother led her to a mirror, and said: "There, Edith, what do you think of it?"

Edith regarded herself soberly for a moment, and then, turning slowly around, she said: "It's vain, but I like it."

CHILD'S HEAD A MASS OF HUMOR

"I think the Cuticura remedies are the best remedies for eczema I have ever heard of. My mother had a child who had a rash on its head when it was real young. Doctor called it baby rash. He gave us medicine, but it did no good. In a few days the head was a solid mass, a running sore. It was awful; the child cried continually. We had to hold him and watch him to keep him from scratching the sore. His suffering was dreadful. At last we remembered Cuticura Remedies. We got a dollar bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a box of Cuticura Ointment, and a bar of Cuticura Soap. We gave the Resolvent as directed, washed the head with the Cuticura Soap, and applied the Cuticura Ointment. We had not used half before the child's head was clear and free from eczema, and it has never come back again. His head was healthy and he had a beautiful head of hair. I think the Cuticura Ointment very good for the hair. It makes the hair grow and prevents falling hair." (Signed) Mrs. Francis Lund, Plain City, Utah, Sept. 19, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 12 L, Boston.

GOOD HIGHWAYS HIT

SUPREME COURT HAS HELD SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS CANNOT BE LAID IN RURAL DISTRICTS.

UP TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Fate of One Thousand Miles of Highway in North State Depends on His Conclusions.

Standing squarely in the face of the constitutionality of the Elwell law under which the Northern Minnesota Development league proposes to expend $10,000,000 during the next few years for good roads, is the legal principle always handed down by the supreme court that all highways constructed outside of incorporated districts, that is cities or villages, are general and not local improvements, and consequently abutting property owners cannot be taxed any amount for their construction, on the special benefit principle.

The question of the constitutionality of the measure, always scouted by lawyers of the state, as well as the limit of the expenditures which the State Highway commission may make under it, are now being investigated by the attorney general's office. It probably will be several weeks before an opinion on the law is rendered, as many questions are said to be involved.

Chief Objection to Law.

The legal principle of the state supreme court, however, is considered by lawyers to be the chief objection raised against the constitutionality of the law, and on account of it the assertion was frequently made yesterday that Attorney General Simpson will hold the law unconstitutional. In every similar case that has been brought before it, the supreme court, it was pointed out, had ruled that a highway which is of general benefit cannot be taxed by a special assessment as authorized in the Elwell law.

In handing down this principle, it is pointed out, the supreme court has always held that any highway constructed outside of an incorporated district is of general and not special benefit, and hence the expense of its construction should be borne by the general public, either through the county or the state. The Elwell bill provides that the state shall bear half of the expense, the county or counties through which the proposed road shall pass a quarter and the property owners benefited the other quarter.

Approximately $300,000 will be raised by the quarter mill levy next year, according to George W. Cooley, secretary of the commission, while $20,000 more will be derived from other sources. However, under a resolution adopted by the last Legislature the commission will be compelled to distribute $100,000 of this among the fifty-four counties of the state which did not receive their full share of the famous pork-barrel appropriation of 1909. The amounts to each county range from $4,000 to $6,000.

Deducting this amount from the original fund, and then 10 per cent more for the non-payment of taxes, as is usually done with estimated receipts of this character, the commission will have approximately $200,000 next year for its entire good roads fund. Under the old law it received but $80,000.

With this amount available no county can receive, under the 3 per cent provision of the amendment, more than about $6,500, or less than $1,000, in the year, according to Mr. Cooley. Inasmuch as the usual cost of new construction varies from about $2,000 a mile upward, the commission under the Elwell bill, will be considerably limited in its expenditures.

Greater expenditures, however, will be permitted the commission if the 1-mill tax amendment of the Dunn bill is adopted when voted on next year. Under it the commission would derive approximately $1,250,000, and the 3 per cent provision would allow the counties an estimated maximum of from $36,000 to $40,000.

Thousand Miles of Road Projected.

Almost 1,000 miles of new roads are now projected for the northern part of the state by the Northern Minnesota Development league alone, while the good roads movement in the state is not centered in that section. Though its plans are extended to cover a number of years, the commission faces the problem of distributing its funds not only there but equally to the benefit of other counties.

Applications already have been made for the construction of a road, 450 miles long from Duluth through Bemidji to St. Vincent, and from Deer River to Northome, while the league's plans include other roads from Duluth to International Falls, Duluth to the Twin City, and Koochiching to Bemidji, approximately 1,000 miles in all.

CUTTING HIS WHEAT AT NIGHT.

Minnesota Farmer Predicts This Will Become Vogue in Northwest.

Argyle.—Eugene Labine, a Marshall county farmer, is harvesting 500 acres of wheat with one machine, working day and night. The binder is run with eight horses, four to a shift, and a headlight is used at night. The night shift of horses stand the work much better than those used in the heat of the day and Labine predicts night binding will become the vogue in the Northwest.

FILE ON LAND IN HURRY.

Ninety Entries Made at Duluth Opening in 52 Minutes.

Duluth.—A new record in the disposition of public lands was established at the United States land office in the Duluth federal building when ninety entries for land in the Fond du Lac reservation were completed in fifty-two minutes. It has been thought that the claims thrown open to entry would not require more than two hours to dispose of, but the officials and clerks handled all the business in less than one.

The opening was at 9 o'clock and found all those in the line who have waited, several for two months and others for shorter periods, anxious to learn if they could file on the property selected. Many had several choices and if they found their first had been taken sought other places. They were admitted to the office one at a time, less than a minute being required to record each entry.

While these scenes were being enacted at the Duluth land office very different ones were taking place on the lands sought near Brookston, where many landseekers preferred to secure their claims by settlement rather than entry.

These were waiting near the land they sought and at 6 o'clock hurried on it and pitched their tents.

JANES TO TRY DUMAS.

E. E. McDonald and T. C. Bailey Will Assist Assistant Attorney General.

Bemidji.—Attorney General Simpson and Assistant Attorney General Janes were in Bemidji in connection with the Dumas arson case.

Inasmuch as County Attorney Torrance was disqualified from acting in the prosecution of Dr. Dumas, Mr. Simpson said the county would thereby be left without a representative, but that he had decided to recommend to the court the appointment of E. E. McDonald of Bemidji as special assistant county attorney to act as a local representative in connection with the attorney general's office in the prosecution. The case will be tried by Assistant Attorney General Janes, he said, but the state will also be represented by Thayer C. Bailey of Bemidji.

The attorney general declared the state has no information in its possession as to the present whereabouts of Mika Davis or Ed La Claire. He had nothing to say as to the evidence or what the state might offer upon the trial.

BIG CHURCH MEET IN DULUTH.

Sixth Missionary District of Episcopal Sect Meets Next Month

Duluth.—Duluth will entertain the first week of September one of the biggest gatherings of religious workers ever held in the Northwest when the council of the sixth missionary district of the Episcopal church will meet here. This district includes Minnesota, Iowa, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, Wyoming and Colorado.

Fifteen bishops and the clergy of eleven dioceses will attend. Among those prominent in the Episcopal church who will attend are the primate of the Canadian church, Archbishop of Rupertsland, Winnipeg, the bishop of Kansas and Bishop Lloyd of New York.

Fire in Building at Cloquet.

Cloquet.—Fire was discovered in the attic of the Redfield building, supposed to have originated from crossed wires. The Bell Telephone company and Western Union offices are located on the second floor. Smoke poured from every portion of the roof of the building which covers half a block. The building upstairs and down was flooded with water and the damage will total $6,000.

STORM DAMAGE IN CLAY COUNTY.

Bolt Hits Barn of Senator Marden, Burning Live Stock.

Moorhead.—The barn on the farm of Senator Charles S. Marden, ten miles southeast of Barnesville, on section 19, in Atherton town was struck by lightning and burned, with six horses, two calves and, it is thought 200 sheep.

The elevator at Glyndon also was struck and set on fire, but the blaze was extinguished before appreciable damage was done.

In the vicinity of Hawley, the main damage was done from water, the rain having come down in torrents. There being no weather bureau station at Hawley it is impossible to estimate the exact rainfall, but it aggregated many inches. It is said that owing to washouts and the quick rise of the many creeks and streams and general condition of the roads, the thoroughfares will be impassable for a week.

INTERNATIONAL WEDDING.

Blacque Bey and St. Paul Girl United by Bishop Lawler.

St. Paul. — St. Paul has just witnessed a wedding of international importance, when Richard Edward Blacque Bey, first secretary of the Turkish embassy in Berlin was married to Miss Josephine Kalman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Kalman. More than 1,000 invitations were issued for the ceremony, which was performed in the sacristy of the Cathedral by Bishop Lawler, of St. Paul. Blacque Bey, is a Catholic.

128 File at Cass Lake Office.

Cass Lake.—At the opening of the land in the Cass Lake district 500 quarter sections were made available for settlement under the provisions of the homestead act, but only 128 persons availed themselves of the filing privilege.

Swan J. Erickson, living five miles west of Cass Lake, secured the first claim, and Arthur Robarts of Sterling, Ill., the second. Eight women secured homesteads.

A large percentage of the persons who filed were residents of Koochiching county, in which the greater portion of the land is located.

There were no "pioneer day" land opening demonstrations, no gambling was in evidence and police regulations were perfect.

Exhibits From North For Land Show.

Bemidji.—With a big "market day" exhibition at Spooner, August 30, and a northern Beltrami county fair at Baudette September 11-13, there is being gathered for exhibition purposes a large collection of grasses, grains, and all root crops, vegetables and dairy products. These exhibits will be shown at the state fair in September.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

PREVENT INJURY TO BARLEY

Requires More Judgment in Harvesting Than Almost Any Other Crop—Often Injured by Rain.

(By H. B. DERR.)

The time for harvesting barley differs widely, according to the location and conditions. In the southern states it ripens from May 1 to June 1. In the central states barley generally matures in June and July, while in the northern states it ripens in July and August. In the Pacific states the time varies from May 15 to September 1st, according to the elevation and the time of seeding.

Unfavorable weather conditions may extend the season, but usually a few days difference causes but a slight variation in the time of ripening.

Bundles Laid to Dry.

Barley requires more judgment in harvesting than almost any other cereal. If harvested too early the appearance and value of the grain are injured by shrinkage. If allowed to become over-ripe the heads bend over and shatter badly during harvesting while in humid regions the grain becomes discolored.

The hardness of the grain when pinched between the thumb and finger will indicate when the crop is ready to harvest. If the grain can just be dented with the nail, it is in the hard dough stage and should be cut at once.

In unfavorable seasons, when the grain ripens unevenly, it is better to cut when most of the heads are ripe, even though there is some loss from shrinkage. If the grain is intended for brewing purposes it should not be cut too early, as it increases in value until the grain is dead ripe. Barley should not be cut when wet with dew or rain as the bundles dry out slowly.

If weather conditions are favorable it is best to let the bundles dry before shocking. They should then be set up in oblong rather than round shocks, as the oblong shocks allow better ventilation.

Barley is frequently injured by heavy rains which in the shock. Moisture not only discolors the grain, but if excessive, may also cause it to sprout. Opening the shock is the only remedy. The common method is to scatter the bundles on the ground, but as there is danger that the grain in contact with the soil will absorb sufficient moisture to cause further injury, the method practiced in Germany and by farmers in some localities in the United States is recommended.

When the shocks are opened the first bundle is laid flat on the stubble; the second and succeeding bundles are then laid across the middle of the projecting ones, the butt ends resting on the ground and the heads projecting beyond the bundles upon which they rest, the object being to keep the grain off the ground, as shown in the illustration, the numbers indicating the order in which they are laid. By lapping the bundles in this way the heads are kept off the ground and are exposed to the action of the air, so that they dry out quickly. Even though rained on while in this position, they will soon dry and will be damaged less than if lying on the ground.

Use of Lime.

Any land which, when sown to clover and timothy, produces in their steed chiefly red-top and sorrel, will be benefited by the use of lime. Apply anywhere from 1,000 to 4,000 pounds or from 15 to 50 bushels. The chief thing is to get finely-divided lime into the soil.

Lime cannot take the place of fertilizer nor can fertilizer take the place of lime. Lime with manure will increase the yield and the use of lime without manure may decrease it.

Effect of Fertilizers.

As a result of fertilizers the Pennsylvania experiment station weighed 24 tons of well-cured hay from 5 2-3 acres. The previous year certain portions of this same area yielded at the rate of five tons of hay per acre. The same year the station had two fields of timothy and clover; from one field of nine acres 42 loads of hay were obtained; from another field of exactly the same soil type, eight loads were obtained from 20 acres.

Hillside Farms.

We must fight the encroachment of the gutters on our hillside farms as we fight weeds. Both can be held in check and often entirely eliminated.

Shape of the Silo.

The silo should be much larger at the top than at the bottom, so that the more the silage settles the tighter it becomes. [illegible]

MUNYON'S WORK TALK OF CITY

Big Success Shown by Numbers of Callers at Philadelphia Headquarters.

LOCAL MAN TELLS OF REMARKABLE RELIEF FROM RHEUMATISM IN YEAR'S TIME.

The apparent success with which Professor James M. Munyon, the world-famous health authority, has been meeting has started much discussion. Every street car brings dozens of callers to his Laboratories at 53d and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., and every mail brings thousands of letters from people inquiring about Munyon's Famous Health Cult. Professor Munyon's corps of expert physicians is kept busy seeing callers and answering the mail. Peculiar to say, these physicians prescribe no medicine at all for 50 per cent. of the callers and mail inquiries; health hints, health advice and rules for right living are given absolutely free. Medical advice and consultation absolutely free.

Munyon's followers seem to be enormous. Those who believe in his theories seem to think he possesses the most marvelous powers for the healing of all sorts of diseases. Munyon, himself, laughs at this. He says: "The hundreds of cures which you are hearing about every day in Philadelphia are not in any way due to my personal skill. It is my remedies, which represent the combined brains of the greatest medical specialists science has ever known, that are doing the work. I have paid thousands of dollars for a single formula and the exclusive right to manufacture it. I have paid tens of thousands of dollars for others of my various forms of treatment. This is why I get such remarkable results. I have simply bought the best products of the best brains in the world and placed this knowledge within the reach of the general public."

Among Munyon's callers yesterday were many who were enthusiastic in their praise of the man. One of these said: "For six years I suffered with rheumatism. My arms and legs were afflicted so badly that I could hardly work, and I could not raise my arms to my head. The pain was most severe in the back, however, and I was in perfect torture. I tried in many ways to get cured, or even to secure temporary relief, but nothing seemed to help me until I was persuaded by a friend to try Dr. Munyon's Uric Acid Course. It was the most marvelously acting remedy I ever saw. Within a week the pain had most gone and inside of a month I considered myself entirely cured. I can now go out in the worst weather—cold, wet or anything else, and I have not felt any suspicion of a return of the disease. I think that every person who has rheumatism and does not take the Uric Acid Course is making a great mistake."

The continuous stream of callers and mail that comes to Professor James M. Munyon at his laboratories at 53d and Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa., keeps Dr. Munyon and his enormous corps of expert physicians busy.

Write today to Professor James M. Munyon personally, Munyon's Laboratories, 53d and Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. Give full particulars in reference to your case. Your inquiry will be held strictly confidential and answered in a plain envelope. You will be given the best medical advice, and asked more questions. Remember there is no charge of any kind for consultation, or medical advice. The only charge Munyon makes is, when his physicians prescribe, his remedies you pay the retail selling price. It is immaterial whether you buy from him or from the nearest druggist.

Dangerous Bacilli in Dust.

A statement issued recently by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis speaks of the dangers from house dust, especially in rooms that are not well ventilated. The association warns against dry sweeping and against the use of the feather duster, or other devices that scatter, but do not take up the dust. Since the ordinary dust blown about in the streets is impregnated with disease germs, the National Association urges the adoption of methods that will prevent the further dissemination of such bacilli. It also urges for the coming months of fall and winter, more open windows and more fresh air in house, shop and schoolroom.

Mosquito—I say, you are keeping on that piece of paper as if you liked it.

Fly—Well, to tell the truth, I am stuck on it.

The next time you feel that swallowing sensation gargle Hamlins Wizard Oil immediately with three parts water. It will save you days and perhaps weeks of misery from sore throat.

Some men are honest because it is too much trouble to be otherwise.

Particularly the Ladies.

Not only pleasant and refreshing to the taste, but gently cleansing and sweetening to the system, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is particularly adapted to ladies and children, and beneficial in all cases in which a wholesome, strengthening and effective laxative should be used. It is perfectly safe at all times and dispels colds, headaches and the pains caused by indigestion and constipation so promptly and effectively that it is the one perfect family laxative which gives satisfaction to all and is recommended by millions of families who have used it and who have personal knowledge of its excellence.

Its wonderful popularity, however, has led unscrupulous dealers to offer imitations which act unsatisfactorily. Therefore, when buying, to get its beneficial effects, always note the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package of the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

The great northern Minnesota fair will be held at Crookston on September 12-13-14-15. This is not a county affair, but a northern Minnesota fair, and it will be a big one.

Superintondant Whitter should be removed from the state training school at Red Wing. There is enough evidence produced of his crual and brutish treatment to boys under his charge to make it a disgrace to the state to allow him to remain in that position. Fire him bodily.

We do not Indorse the opinion of some editors in trying to get Halvor Steenerson into the Senitorial race, although the occasion may arise for him to become a candidate later on. Northern Minnesota need him where he is, and we view with alarm any attempt to side-track him and leave him at Crookston.

If Tawney could not carry the first district in his race for congress last year, what show could he expect to stand running for congressman at large in Minnesota, as a stand patter? The further north you get the worse the people get after stand pat republicans, and up near the Canada line they are likely to scalp um.

If Taft and Knut Nelson are of the opinion that the country papers do not voice the sentiment of the people they will find out their mistake next year. Knut is o.k. as long as he stays by his speech on Reciprocity, but if he turns his coat and indorses Taft he will be promptly sent to keep Tawney company, or to help J. Adam Bede publish his 2 x 4 monthly magazine at Pine City. That is the place for them ducks, for the people of Minnesota have no further use for them in congress.

The speech makeing tour of the west, by Taft will have about the same affect on the farmers as a tour of Abe Lincoln in the south would have had on the planters, if he had went down there to explain to them why he had issued his Emancipation Proclamation. The farmers of the Northwest justly feel that they have been "did" by Taft on his Canada treaty against the will of their representatives in congress, and with them it is a case of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." The trusts backed up by a purchased daily press may again nominate him for president, but he will be badly defeated at the election, and any candidate for public office, in the grain produceing Northwest, who would support him for reelection should be put to sleep in the same bone yard.

The Taft administration want Knut Nelson to run for Senator as they cosider Minnesota a doubtful state. They believe with Mr. Nelson on the ticket the president would be the gainer. The facts of the case are that there is no doubt at all about what the Minnesota farmers will do to Taft, as soon as they get the chance, and if Knut Nelson comes before the people of Minnesota as an indorser of Taft he will be promptly sent to the same bone yard. His speech on Reciprocity made in the U. S. Senate would be enough to convince any man and particulary the farmers of Minnesota that they should not vote for Taft, and we do not believe that Knut Nelson would go around this state next year adviseing people to indorse Taft for renomination for president. There is no doubt about Minnesota, they are anti Taft all right, and if the trusts and interests nominate him Minnesota will still be anti Taft in November.

If governor Eberhart makes an attempt to shoot off his mouth for Taft in this state next year, he will be sent over the dump so swift that you can play a game of euchre on the long tail of his coat.

Aside from the Peopels Press, of Thief River Falls, we do not know how the other papers of the County stand on this Taft Reciprocity deal, but we feel as if the Northwestern farmers have been unjustly robbed by Taft forceing this bill through congress. If that bill had not been passed you would see the $ sign in front of the price of evry bushell of wheat that the farmers had for sale. Does not that make a difference to you my farmer friend who is president? Do you think a newspaper is representing your interests that would advise you to support Taft for re, election, so as to give him the power to give you another dig?

The Worldly View.

"I suppose," said Collector Loeb, "that in the past a good many people looked on a strict observance of the customs laws from a selfish and worldly point of view. They are like Aunt Mary Persimmons.

"Aunt Mary called one day on the village lawyer.

"'Well, old lady,' he said, 'what can I do for you?'

"'Ah want to divo'ce mah husband,' said Aunt Mary.

"'Divorce old Uncle Bill!' cried the lawyer. 'Good gracious, why?'

"'Belase he's done got religion, dat's why,' said Aunt Mary, 'an' we ain't had a chicken on de table fo' six weeks.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Take No Chances.

Do not kick a man when he is down. Turn him over and feel in the other pocket.—Galveston News.

All Doing the Same.

"What is he so angry at you for?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. We met on the street and were talking just as friendly as could be when all of a sudden he flared up and tried to lick me."

"And what were you talking about?"

"Oh, just ordinary small talk. I remember he said, 'I always kiss my wife three or four times every day.'"

"And what did you say?"

"I said, 'I know at least a dozen men who do the same,' and then he had a fit."—Houston Post.

When a Peanut Sprouts.

"Few persons are perhaps aware that a thing of beauty is a common peanut plant growing singly in a six or eight inch pot and grown indoors during the colder weather," said a florist. "Kept in a warm room or by the kitchen stove, a peanut kernel planted in a pot of loose mellow loam and only moderately moistened will soon germinate and grow up into a beautiful plant, extending its branches over the pot. The leaves close together like the leaves of a book on the approach of night or when a shower begins to fall upon them. The plant bears tiny yellow flowers. There is nothing else just like it."

Lengthy and Monotonous.

One of the most curious contracts entered into by an operatic artist was that agreed to by Farinelli. When he visited Spain, Philip V. was suffering from mental depression, from which nothing aroused him until the arrival of Farinelli. The queen was so delighted to see her royal spouse once more interested that she engaged Farinelli at a salary of $10,000 to remain in Madrid. This he did, singing the same four songs to the king every night for ten years.

Dig The Ditches.

It is to be hoped that the County Commissioners will let the contract to dig ditch No. 53 to a contractor that will do the work. What is the use of considering a bid from a contractor that has a record of not doing the work? It looks, to a man up a tree, as if there had been a little "grease" used in the letting of some of them contracts to men that can not do the ditching.

All the farmers want and what they petitioned for is to have them ditches dug and roads built. They are not looking for any trouble with contractors or their bondsmen, but want the work done. However if you have some poor god-forsaken cuss that is looking for a place to roost with an old worthless ditching outfit, that you owe a job, send him on the south side of the Red Lake River as you may as well have all can't ditchers in one bunch. The farmers on the south side have been ditching for three yeas, and aside from one ditch dug by Arpin, they have not got as much ditching done as a good Swede ditcher could have dug with a hay knife and dung fork. If the work can not be let at reasonable prices to men that you know can do the work let it go over until it can be let, but for god sake do not let any more contracts to men who are puting in bids for speculation, and have shown by their past record that they do not dig the ditches.

REMEMBER THE MAINE?

REMEMBER the Maine? It was back
In the nineties
When Weyler, the butcher, was having his fling
And the liberty loving were slipping the Cubans
Arms, ammunition and that sort of thing.
Well, the Maine was patrolling the way into Cuba,
Restraining the headstrong and wretching the crank,
When something exploded within or about her,
And the gallant ship sank.

Well, well! Whether Spain or an accident did it
We never gave any one time to find out.
The chance it was Spain in a time of excitement
Appeared to admit of no shadow of doubt.
At any rate, what with the clamor for vengeance,
Guilt seeming certain and nobody flinching,
We did what was probably characteristic
And had a big lynching.

You may wonder we all lost our heads in that fashion,
But the fact is the country was not at its best,
And just at the height of the national passion
T. Roosevelt, shouting, rode out of the west,
That settled it. Once we caught sight of him riding
And hankered the cavalcade following him
We all gave a yell as if thereon deciding
And hung Spain to a limb.

Or guilty or innocent, what did it matter?
We had the suspect, and the habit was strong.
After the lynching was time to discover
If Spain had been guilty or we had been wrong.
A bloody night's business, you'll say of it likely,
And one it may some day be hard to explain,
But what has been has been, whatever may happen—
Remember the Maine!

His Little Game.

A man who used to be in politics and was a constant borrower found himself in need of a new hat. But he couldn't find anybody who would lend him a cent.

Finally he went to an acquaintance and said:

"I want to borrow $50 for five minutes."

"You can have it if you will put up a couple of fingers for security."

"Nix. Now, I've got a scheme. You lend me the fifty and you needn't let me get out of your sight. If you do it I'll stake you to a new hat."

Mystified, but curious, the acquaintance agreed to this, and the two repaired to a prominent hat store.

"Wait a minute," said the adventurer and left his backer doing sentry duty on the sidewalk.

Picking out the most important looking personage in the store, the politician went up to him and said:

"I am So-and-so of the —— district I have come to pay for two hats for which I gave orders out yon to two of my constituents."

With that he flashed a fifty dollar bill.

There was a scurrying around, a search of books and a reply that no such orders had been presented.

"Just look out for them, will you?" said the district leader, waving the big bill, which was hypnotic in its way, for the clerk bowed low and said yes.

Half an hour later two orders were presented, and two hats left the store.

The SPONGE INDUSTRY in the AMERICAS

By F. A. PIERCE

SPONGE FISHERS AT BATABANO, CUBA.

WHERE do all the sponges come from? We see them every day, and while everyone knows that they are products of the sea, few know how they are gathered and how limited are the fishing districts where they are caught. To most people familiar only with the sponges of the shops, the animal as it comes from the sea would be rather unrecognizable. When brought to the surface they are black and slimy. The sponge of the market is merely the skeleton—the supporting framework—which gives strength and form to the soft gelatinous tissues of the living animal.

Sponges are known to the general public almost solely for their use in the toilet—one of their minor applications. They are vastly more valuable in the arts. To the surgeon the sponge is invaluable, almost as a life-saver in taking up blood and checking hemorrhage; while the doctor formerly prescribed burnt sponge for glandular swellings, nowadays iodine and bromine, which are the chemical and useful constituents, are used alone, in many trades they are practically indispensable, and despite the efforts and ingenuity of inventors no satisfactory substitute has ever been produced and it is doubtful whether one can be found. The properties that give a sponge its value are many; they are found in combination in no other natural or artificial product, and the perpetuation of the sponge supply is of no small moment to civilization.

ANCLOTE YELLOW SPONGE - FLORIDA

Sponge life does not thrive in fresh water. Of the food of the sponges practically nothing is known. That it is taken in through the coast system and that it must be in a finely divided state is practically certain, but of what it consists is not known. They appear to have but few natural enemies. The so-called "roots" of sponges perform no other purpose than that of anchorage. The rate of growth of the sponge under natural, undisturbed conditions, is also a matter of uncertainty, but it is estimated that the average 6-inch sponge is probably only four years old.

The industry in the Americas is a most important one. The fisheries as at present developed are almost entirely confined to the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, with its contiguous waters. As early as 1822 the inhabitants of Key West, Florida, lashed, from spontaneous thrown up on the beaches, of the presences of several species of useful sponges. For some thus they were in limited domestic use among the inhabitants, but not until 1849 was a cargo sent to New York. Up to this time the entire sponge supply of the United States was derived from the Mediterranean, though of inferior grade a few sponges come from the Bahamas. While sponge fishing in the Americas is rather a modern industry, it produces more than two-thirds of the world's supply in weight; but the fisheries of the Mediterranean now produce about one-half of the world's supply in value. An idea of the number of sponges produced by the fisheries of the Americas can perhaps best be grasped if it is realized that last year's crop of dry sponges weighed 4,000,000 pounds; and as each pound is capable of absorbing 14 pints of water, is will be seen that the total crop of the American sponges valued at $1,500,000. The two places where sponge fishing is best studied in the Americas are at Tarpon Springs, Florida, and at Batabano, off the southern coast of Cuba.

On the Florida coast there are two well-defined sponge regions. The Key grounds on the east, consisting of a chain of keys starting from this mainland near Miami and extending in the shape of a horn far into the Gulf of Mexico; and the flay grounds on the west, also extending into the Gulf of Mexico. The Key grounds, which formerly held a secondary position commercially, now yield practically the entire production of Florida sponges, and are by far the most prolific in the Americas. The Atlantic side of these regions is not adapted to the propagation of this animal because of the heavy surf and low temperature of the waters and the frequent disturbances of hurricanes. These valuable sponge grounds have been overfished in and out of season to such an extent that congress found it necessary to enact a stringent law for the protection and conservation of this industry. This law prohibits divers from working between the 1st of May and the 1st of October in waters less than 30 feet deep, and vessels of the revenue cutter service patrol the Florida waters today to see that this law is enforced. While the sponging areas of Batabano, Cuba, are the Tarpon Springs, Florida, are figurative within a stone's throw of each other, yet the methods of gathering in this interesting animal at these points are entirely different.

In Florida the old method of gathering the sponge was to wade into the shallow waters and pull up the growth by hand. Later the sponge hook was introduced. This was a two-tined short hook attached to a pole of moderate length; a third tine was added to this implement after a while. With the introduction of the sponge hook deeper water was explored. The fisherman standing in his boat could easily scanned the bottom of the water for sponges, tearing them loose with the hook as discovered. To overcome the ripples in the water, which interfered with their fishing, the sponges soon learned to make use of oil, and that extracted from the liver of sharks was found to be the best. Another change in the method soon followed, for a man standing upright in his boat found considerable difficulty in seeing the bottom with sufficient distinctness. To overcome this obstacle, a "sponge glass," or "water telescope," was introduced, which was merely an ordinary wooden pail with a glass instead of wooden bottom. This device was introduced in 1776, and necessitated two men for each boat, one to propel the boat and the other to search for and gather up the sponges. Later large vessels came into use in the Florida waters and sponging was often carried on at a distance of 20 to 30 miles from shore. The average size of these vessels was about 15 tons capacity, rigged as schooners in the majority of cases, and carrying a crew of from 5 to 12 men. As a rule the proceeds of the sponging trips go into a common fund, from which each man receives his share according to his duties.

When a vessel reaches a sponging ground, if the weather is favorable and the water sufficiently clear a bar is located by means of "sighting" with a water glass. The crew is sent out in small boats, two men in each, called the "oculer" and the "hooker," the duty of the former being to propel the boat in obedience to the signals of the latter and assist in handling the hooks when necessary. A proficient oculer has perfect command of the boat, stopping it almost on the instant. Upon the hooker devolves the work of finding and catching the sponges. He leans over the side, watching the bottom through his water glass, the hook with its pole resting conveniently across the boat where it may be seized upon the instant. The position is a trying one physically, especially when the sea is choppy, and when the waves grow rough the work is impossible. The sponge glass or bucket, with its glass bottom below the surface of the water, operates by dispelling reflection, and to heighten its efficiency the hooker usually wears a straw hat which cuts off a large part of the direct light when his head is thrust into the mouth of the bucket. By this means the bottom may sometimes be seen in clear water in depths of 50 feet. When a sponge is sighted, the oculer maneuvers the boat into position at a word or signal from the hooker; the latter seizes his hook, resting the pole on his shoulder, and with his right hand lowers it. It is then injected into the sponge, more or less distinctly visible through the water glass, which is held in position with the left hand. In pulling or tearing the sponge a certain degree of skill is required to prevent mutilation, which, of course, impairs its value in the markets. Sometimes the formations adhere so tightly that it requires the united efforts of both men to loosen them, and in most cases parts of the base of the sponge are left behind.

In deep water—that is, in depths over 15 or 20 feet—probably not more than one-third of the hookers have sufficient strength, keenness of sight, and skill with the pole to work successfully. In consequence of this and the fact that only when the water is exceptionallyclear can the sponges be seen at all in the greater depths, most of the hooking is carried on in less than 5 fathoms of water.

In 1895 the Mediterranean method of sponging with diving apparatus was introduced into the Florida field. It was most successful.

As compared with hooking, the diving system requires a much more expensive equipment. Its pumps, suits, and gear are all more costly than the sponge hooks and glasses, which constitute the secondary equipment of the hooker. The expense of operation and cost of maintenance are also heavier, and to meet this additional cost the yield per man must be cancelled orehly larger.

Another method of gathering sponges which has not yet made its appearance in American waters is the sponge-fishing submarine boat, considered by many a practical and useful craft. This unique boat has been built at a French shipbuilding yard and sent to the sponge fishing grounds of Tunis, where it is now in operation. It is propelled by two steel oars, which are operated through two water-tight joints. Attached to the forward section of the keel is a wheel upon which the vessel travels over the level bottom of hard sand upon which the sponges are found. The sponge-grappling apparatus consists of a movable arm which projects from the bow through a water-tight spherical joint. This is operated by a man inside the hull from a view obtained through the forward window. Electric lights furnish illumination. The sponge ee fast es seized are thrown into a basket suspended from a forward arm of the boat.

EQUIPMENT OF SPONGE FISHERMEN, BAHAMAS

Thus it will be seen that while both the diving and hooking methods are in vogue in the sponging industry in the Americas, a number of sponges which "get the hook" fully equip the number obtained by the diver. The small boats with their loads to be carried by the diving vessels, which after a few days, changes to the same kind of cargo. The schooner then returns to its home of operation and places its catch in pens or "crawls," usually about the docks and built of wattled stakes driven in shallow water in the shelter of some key or land, so that the flowing tide washes the sponges on all sides. This washing process takes about one week, after which the sponges are thoroughly squeezed out and loaded with coral still in the mass to disappears. They are then strung in bunches upon pieces of rope. After drying the sponges are cleansed out quite thoroughly by hand, sorted according to kinds, arranged in piles to show them to the best advantage, and packed in water in order to avail them to their largest proportions. They are now ready for market, and this phase of the industry is a most important one. At appointed times, sponge buyers assemble and, proceeding from pile to pile, bid for each separately, heating their bids on the number of bunchns and the size and grade of the sponges.

After purchasing, the buyers forward the sponges to their packing and warehouses, which they maintain at convenient points on the coast. Here they are thoroughly cleansed of the remaining dirt, all foreign particles are removed, and the irregular and torn parts are clipped with shears, the clippers requiring a degree of skill to reduce the sponge to a regular shape with the minimum waste After being trimmed the sponges are sorted according to size and quality, and pressed into bales, which are wrapped in burlap and bound with wire. After being trimmed the sponges are sorted according to size and quality, and pressed into bales, which are wrapped in burlap and bound with wire.

In Cuba the sponge is found on the north and south coasts. The most important fields are the numerous coasts in the vicinity of Batabano, between the mainland and the Isle of Pines.

While sponges are found in several other sections of the Americas, the distinction of furnishing the greatest variety belongs to Florida and the West Indies, the more popular grades being sheep's-wool, velvet, yellow, grass, glove, reef, and wire. The highest priced sponge is the Turkish. These have brought as high as $40 per pound, but their production is extremely limited. Next is America's sheep's-wool variety, as called because of its resemblance. Notwithstanding that this is a much cheaper grade, it is often preferred in the Turkish sponge as a toilet article. Then, in order, follow the velvet, yellow, grass, and glove sponges.

Dr. H. F. Moore, scientific assistant, United States bureau of fisheries, who was awarded the prize of one hundred dollars and the North American International Fishery Congress, in 1905, for the most comprehensive paper on sponge fisheries, has conducted a series of experiments which have resulted in the production of the rootless sponge. The root of the sponge is the most vulnerable part, and at this point it first begins to tear. A rootless sponge, therefore, will far outlast the common variety.

HARVESTER AT WORK

Unounted Miles of Bountiful Crops Make Glad the Farmers of Western Canada.

YIELD WILL BE RECORD ONE

Practically Beyond Reach of Accident, the Fruit of the Fertile Fields is Being Gathered—Elevators and Railroads Will Be Taxed to Their Capacity.

On a beautiful Saturday afternoon, four weeks ago, the writer started for a twenty-mile drive into the country, from one of the hundred or more new towns that have been well started during the past spring, in the Province of Saskatchewan, in Western Canada. Mile after mile, and mile after mile, was traversed through wheat was the continuous wheat field, the only relief to the scene being the roadways that had back into near settlements, where would have been repeated the same great vista of wheat.

What a wealth! Here were hundreds and thousands, and millions of bushels of what was declared to be a quality of grain equal to any that has ever been grown in the province. As we drove on and on I thought of those fellows down on the Board of Trade at Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Duluth. While they were exploiting each others' energies in the farmer of Saskatchewan, Amarta and Manitoba were contemplating how much he realized results out of his crop, how past any danger of accident, over what his anticipations were two months ago. One man said to me: "The profits of that field of wheat will give me sufficient money to purchase 320 acres of land, for which the railway company is asking $5,400, and pay it in cash." Another with a field of flax—it was only 320 acres—said he could do the same and still have a balance in the bank. Flax production is wonderfully well, and the current price is about $2.50 per bushel. We then drove over into another township, getting further back from the railway, and the main traveled roads. Here we found ourselves in the center of a Swedish settlement. Those forming the settlement were originally from Nebraska. Invited to put up our horses and stay over for dinner, and a dinner that was enjoyed not only on account of the generous appetite created by the exhilarating drive, but also because of the clean linen, the well-prepared dishes of roast fowl, potatoes, cabbage, and a delightful dessert, some of the history of the settlement was learned. The host and hostess were modest in describing their own achievements, and equally modest as to those of their friends, but enough was learned to satisfy us that they had come there about three years ago, in moderate, almost poor, circumstances. Most of them had received their homesteads as a gift from the government, and by careful diligence had purchased and paid for additional land. They had plenty of cattle and horses, some sheep and hogs, and large well-kept gardens, showing an abundance of potatoes and cabbages and other vegetables. Their buildings were good, schools were in the neighborhood and there was evidence of comfort everywhere.

Steam Plowing in Western Canada.

On to the Park Country.

Reluctant to leave these interesting people, the horses thoroughly rested, were "hooked up" and driven to the door a short stiff high in the heavens, with the horses pulling on the bit and traveling at a 12-mile an hour gait over a road that would put to shame many of the macadamized streets, we were whirled along a sinuous drive through the woods and then out in the park country.

Here was another scene of beauty, groves of poplar, herds of cattle, fenced fields of wheat and oats and barley and flax. Here was wealth and happiness and surely contentment. The crops were magnificent. The settlers, most of them, by the way, from Iowa, had selected this location because of its beauty. Its electric charm was wholesome. Fuel was in abundance, the soil was the best, the market for the cattle afforded by the groves gave a splendid supply of food, while hay was easy to get. They liked it. Here was a sturdy farmer with his three boys. He had formerly been a merchant in an Iowa town, his children had been given a college education and one of the boys was about to marry the accomplished daughter of a neighboring farmer.

Through Land of Wealth.

The invitation to remain to supper was accepted, but that given to remain over night was tabled. It was only a 15-mile drive into town over the best of roads, through such a splendid country, all one beautiful picture, and such as no one's imagination in figuring up the amount of the wealth of the crops through which the trip into town took us, was not to be enjoyed every day. And away we started.

It was delightful. We drove and drove through avenues of wheat, which today, having yellowed with the beneficent sun, is being laid low by the reaper, stacked and threshed by the thousands of hands required to do it, and in great wagons is being taken to the elevator.

A night's ride by train took us through 225 miles of the great provinces of Saskatchewan—into the southwestern part—not from appearances it might have been as though a transfer had been made across a township. There were wheat fields, oat fields, barley fields and flax fields, and many more that could not be seen. Yet there they were, and during the night we had passed through a country similarly cultivated.

It will all secure a market and get its way to ocean or local mill by means of the great railways whose well-arranged systems are penetrating everywhere into the agricultural parts.

Prosperous Alberta.

We afterward went over into Alberta, and here again it was grain and cattle, cattle and grain, comfortable farm homes, splendidly built cities and towns, the best of churches and the most thoroughly equipped schools. While talking with a Southern Saskatchewan farmer he sold that the land he was working, and for which he had been offered $60 an acre, had been purchased five years ago for $12 an acre, but he won't sell. He is making a good profit on his land at $60 an acre, and why should he sell? Farther north, land was selling at from $15 to $18 and $20 an acre. It was learned afterward that the soil was similar to that in the south, the price of which today is $60 an acre. The climate was similar and the markets as good. In fact the only difference was that today these northern lands occupy the same position that the more southerly ones did five years ago, and there are found many who easy they will come into a price nearer their legitimate value of $60 or $80 an acre quite as quickly as the southerly lands. And I believe it.

Throughout all this great country, practically 500 by 300 miles square, there are still a great many homesteads which are given to the actual settlers. Many who have secured patents for their homesteads consider their land worth from $18 to $25 per acre.

Immense Crops Assured.

Throughout the southern portion of Alberta, a district that suffered more than those of the eleven lines, there will be harvested this year one of the best crops of fall wheat, spring wheat, oats, flax and alfalfa that has ever been taken off these highly productive lands.

In Central Alberta, which comprises the district north of Calgary and east two hundred miles, through Camrose, Sedgewick, Castor and Deer, Wetaskiwin, Edmonton, Lacombe, Vegreville, Tofield, Vermillion and a score other prosperous towns, there are settled large numbers of Americans, the wheat, oats and flax, three weeks ago, were standing large and erect, large heads and promising from 30 to 35 bushels of wheat and as high as 100 bushels of oats on carefully tilled fields, while flax would probably yield from 15 to 18 bushels per acre. In these parts the harvesters are busy today garnering this great crop that will shortly be known whether the great anticipations are to be realized.

Throughout all parts of Saskatchewan, whether north, south, east or west, the same story was heard, and Arthur will be the scene of the splendid yield.

Rich Yield in Manitoba.

In Manitoba the great grain fields of the province promised to give to the world there a harvest, and so high as 35 bushels of wheat and 60 bushels of oats were freely discussed.

It would appear as if the expectation of an average of 25 bushels of wheat throughout the entire province would be met.

In a few days the 40,000,000-bushel elevator capacity throughout the country will be taxed, the 25,000,000 bushels capacity at Fort William and Port Arthur will be taken up, and the railways and their equipment will be taxed upon to their best. Among the great, broad, yellow fields are industrial haunts, the self-binder is at work in its giant task of reducing into sheaves the standing grain, the harvesters are busy stocking and stacking, the threshing machines are being fed the sheaves, the large box wagons are taking it to the elevators, and no matter where you go it is the same story and a picture such as can only be seen in the great grain fields of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL RELATION TO THE WOMAN

By Cyrus Townsend Brady

Illustrations by Bronson Howard

COPYRIGHT 1910 BY HARPER AND BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a Brainless prospector in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blinding blizzard, but are confronted by the wronged husband. He is shot by the tenderfoot in the struggle, but gives a note to the schoolboy boy pledging upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the woman's horse fails exhausted; the youth puts her on his own and follows hanging to the stirrup strap. Seeing he is an impediment, the woman thrusts her escort loose, and, mounting, rides on. Half-frozen, he is taken into the hotel at Station Just in time to see the train pull out. Twenty-five years later, this man, George Gormly, is a multi-millionaire in New York. He meets Eleanor Haldane, a wealthy settlement worker, and becomes interested with her in her work. Gormly proposes a partnership in the Red Rock tunnel and track extension plans by granting allowances backed by the Gotham Traction Company. An automobile accident on Thirty Christmas eve brings the Haldanes to his country home. Gormly is a confirmed bachelor and confirmed. Miss Haldane withdraws on her settlement work and loses that he shall become involved with his wealth and business talents. He determines to do so, and announces that he will be mayor of New York and redeem the city from corruption.

"I know little about the social obligations of the world to which you refer. It has not been my privilege to have an entrance therein."

"Merely a matter of choice on your part, I am sure," murmured Haldane deprecatingly.

"Possibly," was the cool reply. "I have not hitherto been greatly interested in effecting an entrance within the charmed circle, nor am I especially now, saving your presence of course and meaning not the slightest offense in the world."

"None whatever is taken, and I pray you to proceed. You interest me exceedingly."

"In my business, Mr. Haldane, and I have no doubt that the experience is your own, I have found that what I supervise myself is well done, and what I delegate to others is frequently ill done, and sometimes not done at all."

"The remark is as old as Ben Franklin," laughed Haldane, "and the principle is older still." But surely," he went on, "in a great business such as yours is, you can't attend personally to every detail yourself."

"By no means," returned the other. "I have succeeded in surrounding myself with a very capable corps of subordinates—perhaps I had better call them assistants—who have been tried and tested, and upon whom I have devolved responsibilities commensurate with their capacities, and from whom I expect results. But I supervise every department of the business myself. I am in possession of frequent reports concerning it even in its details. I make regular and rigid inspections. In short, so far as one man can do so, I have it all in my own hands, certainly in my own mind."

"My own practice, Mr. Gormly, with my affairs, which are somewhat large and extensive, is similar to yours."

"I take it, sir," was the answer, "that we are in line with all successful men in that."

It irked Haldane a little to be so coldly included in the same category with Gormly; for he had never been in trade and had acquired much of the old world prejudice against the keeping of a store. However, it was not worth quarreling about. Not that Haldane had the slightest objections to quarreling with Gormly; on the contrary, he would have enjoyed it immensely, and indeed intended in one way or another to do that very thing before he got through with him; but it would be bad policy to do it without preparation for victory, and it would be to establish data to precipitate antagonism in the enjoyment of his hospitality. Therefore he swallowed his dislike and proceeded as follows:

"Even the best of subordinates make mistakes once in a while."

"They are no more immune from that," was the self-sufficient rejoinder, "than the ablest of employers."

Haldane laughed it was exceedingly well done. For the moment it even deceived his acute companion. He spoke with an air of the utmost frankness.

"I have no personal concern, of course, in the matter, but I have been greatly interested in the remarkable series of articles that have appeared under your name. I suppose you were betrayed into this unfortunate position through some error on the part of one of your subordinates."

"No," said Gormly, "that was a mistake of my own, one of those employer's errors to which we alluded a moment since."

"It is like to cost you dear, I fancy, before you get through. The Gotham Freight Traction company, which, I hear is an immensely strong financial organization and is naturally relentless and inexorable in matters of business, is apt to exact compliance with its demands, or leave your warehouses, as it were, in the air."

"I have never credited them with any other intent."

"Then I suppose in the end you will [illegible] medicine as the young man [illegible]-ay, and content yourself with your-[illegible]—proclamations?"

"My experience has been that publicity, if coupled with surrender, is never very efficacious. If I should accede to the demands of the Gotham Freight Traction company, the fact that I had exposed them would be of little moment."

"Oh, then, you propose to do your own freighting by wagon and give up the battle?" asked Haldane, his sagacious little mind darting with statistics just two years later, this same George Gormly, a multi-millionaire in New York, his guests Eleanor Haldane, a socialist and wealthy settlement worker, and Governor Griffin with her in her wake. Gormly proposes a partnership Haldane finds Gormly's scheme of tunnel and track extension plans by granting allowances backed by the Gotham Traction Company. An automobile accident on Thirty Christmas eve brings the Haldanes to his country home. Gormly is a confirmed bachelor and confirmed. Miss Haldane withdraws on her settlement work and loses that he shall become involved with his wealth and business talents. He determines to do so, and announces that he will be mayor of New York and redeem the city from corruption.

"And you have no personal interest in the matter?"

"I have already assured you as to that."

"It will not accept any such offer, if it should be made me by authority. I will not pay a single cent over and above the actual cost of building the switches and a proper and reasonable amount for the privilege of the connection."

"Of course, you must make your own decision. In that case, however, I fear you will never get the switches."

"I am quite sure that before I get through I shall have not only the switches, but——"

Gormly paused, and looked his companion hard and directly in the face.

"But what?" said Haldane, flicking the ashes from his cigar daintily, and spasmodically watching the blue curl of smoke that rose languidly from its end in the air.

Gormly thought quickly. He was not now deceived by the well assumed indifference of Haldane. He was convinced that there was something back of it; that the reluctance of Haldane to the whole affair was more than a mere casual one; that Haldane had not told him the plain, unvarnished truth.

"Well, Mr. Haldane, I will be frank with you. I not only intend to have my track connection, but I intend to have the Gotham Freight Traction company as well."

"My dear sir!" said Haldane gently, not turning a hair before the astounding declaration. "Are you aware that the bonds of the Gotham Freight Traction company are two hundred and fifty million dollars; that stock for twice as much more has been issued and sold and is already at a premium; that it is in the enjoyment of a ninety-nine-year franchise with the privilege of renewal; that its promoters include some of the shrewd financiers in the city?"

"Much of what you say is a matter of public notoriety. You have given me, however, some information that I did not possess and which is of real value," said Gormly quietly.

Haldane did not acknowledge the touch, though he winced inwardly at it.

"And yet you spoke," he went on,

Gormly Deliberately Laid All His Cards on the Table.

"of controlling the company?".

"I do."

"This is most interesting. I am curious to know how you propose to do it?

"The business that you have built up is evidence of your capacity in that line; but you have, I take it, never mingled in Wall street, never dealt on the exchange?"

"Never. I didn't mean to, either."

"How then do you expect to obtain control of such a corporation as this, especially when it has back of it the city government as well as the finest society?"

The question was one Gormly could have declined to answer without a moment's hesitation without giving any offense, for it was one that Haldane had no right to ask. He thought deeply, if swiftly, and before he spoke, Haldane continued:

"You are, I take it, a wealthy man; but no single man could command the resources of this corporation; that is, no single man outside of those few who are in it," he went on, "and it would be sheer madness for you to attempt it."

"Mr. Haldane," said Gormly, coming to another conclusion, "there is a power in this country greater than the money power."

"And what may that be, sir?"

"The power of the people."

"In this instance, the people are already on the side of the Gotham Freight Traction company."

"Are they so?"

"Certainly. Through their representatives they have voted them a franchise which the line has been constructed and by which it is operated, through the provisions of which it will be held."

"Have the people surrendered their rights absolutely to the Gotham Freight Traction company?"

"I should say that they had."

"Are they delivered, bound hand and foot, to this corporation?"

"Well, you put it rather inelegantly; but in substance your remark is true."

"And have they no redress or recourse?".

"Certainly."

"And what is that?"

"I haven't the slightest objection to telling you. They can revoke the franchise—at the expiration of the ninety-nine-year term."

"Is that all they can do?"

"Absolutely all. You see, therefore, it would be quite hopeless for you to attempt to fight this corporation, even with the alliance and support of the people, which it is by no means certain you could gain."

"And that is your unprejudiced opinion?"

"It is. Therefore I urge upon you the acceptance of my offer to mediate between you and them."

"And you say your interest is purely impersonal?"

"Entirely."

"I am glad, as I said before, to know that," the merchant continued, "because I should not like to find myself in opposition to one who has manifested such friendliness to me as you have."

Haldane looked up suspiciously; but Gormly's appearance was absolutely guileless.

"For notwithstanding what you tell me," the merchant continued, "all of which is doubtless true, I propose to wage the contest with the Gotham Freight Traction company. I have never allowed myself to be robbed; I have never been the victim of trickery and chicanery; and I don't propose to be robbed or beaten now."

"Then I shall therefore wish you good-day, sir," said Haldane rising, "if you engage in this contest.

"But sir, they are trying to hold me up—to use a blunt phrase—for a million dollars for a thing that should not be worth a tenth of that amount on a liberal basis. Morally——"

"Morals, my dear Mr. Gormly, somehow seem to have little to do with business. You must do what they like, or——"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"We shall see," said Gormly. "I believe, though I am not a student of military history, that an able general is one who takes advantage of the mistakes of the enemy, and that more battles are won by such sharp-sighted endeavor than by deliberate planning."

"But suppose you did succeed, what then? How would that affect the Gotham Freight Traction company?"

"Meanwhile," said Gormly, and in this instance he deliberately laid all his cards on the table, "I propose to take advantage of the one blunder of the Gotham Freight Traction company."

"And what is that?" asked Haldane with intense eagerness. There was no longer the faintest pretense between these two. His cards were on the table as well, although he had not admitted it.

"In order to make the franchise of the Gotham Freight Traction company worthy of value, to complete the system, without which it begins and ends in the air, they must have the old New York Street Car company franchise which expires next spring. It covers the only available routes and the only available way to connect the two ends of the Gotham enterprise. Somehow or other the astute minds controlling the corporation failed to secure the renewal of this franchise. It has to be voted upon and passed in the autumn."

"The present administration," was the quick reply, "will be in power until the April election, when its franchise expires in March. No re-grant of it could be made until then. It will be renewed before a new administration could supplant the old, even if your wild dreams were successful."

"That is to be seen," answered Gormly coolly.

"My dear sir, it is self evident."

"By no means. Public opinion shall be aroused on the question of the renewal of the franchise of the New York Street Car company, with a clear explanation of the principles and consequences involved, to such an extent that I do not believe any opposition on earth will dare to counter it."

"And who will do this arousing?"

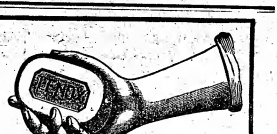
"I will."

"How?"

"By offering myself as a candidate for mayor of New York and by fighting the battle on that issue, and that alone."

"I might," said Haldane slowly, after a deeply thoughtful moment.—"I might secure the privileges you desire unconditioned.—"

"I don't desire them now, Mr. Haldane," returned Gormly. "I am in the battle to stay. I ask nothing from the Gotham Freight Traction company; it can confer no favors upon me. I shall take what I am entitled to by the grace of God and the will of the people."



Haldane stared a long time at the dark, determined face of his host.

"You will make a splendid enemy, Mr. Gormly," he said at last. "The battle between you and the Traction company will be one worth going a long distance to see."

At that instant the tall clock in the hall struck the hour of 12.

"It is the hour," said Gormly bowing formally, "to wish you a very Merry Christmas, Mr. Haldane."

"AND SO SAY ALL OF US."

Waste in Our Lumbering Methods

SO much has been said and written to recent years about the wasteful waste of the logging and lumbering methods pursued to the United States that the average person without a very intimate knowledge feels sure that the case must be exaggerated. And in some degree he is right. Great as have been the sins of the timber harvesters who have garnered the wealth of our forests with n free hand, they have scarcely been guilty in the measure that has been charged in some quarters. And, moreover, there is no doubt but that in most cases the prodigal policy has been the result of ignorance rather then prompted by a wanton spirit as some of the critics would have us believe.

The general public has heard most regarding the wastefulness and extravagance of American methods of lumbering since the development within the past few years of the movement in behelf of the conservation of our natural resources. However, for years before that crusade began, and with redoubled energy since, returned European travelers have been exclaiming upon the contrast between forestry methods in the old world and the new. Now, it has been very impressive to hear how in France and Germany great forests are cultivated with the care of a well-ordered garden, and how even the twigs that fall from the trees are picked up and sold for fuel, but as a matter of fact the boasted German methods of forestry would not be at all suited to the United States.

However, for all that, as has been hinted, there are two sides to this question of the wasteful American methods of lumbering, the fact remains that our people have not made the most of the priceless heritage of our forests. Nor has all the fault in this respect been at the door of the professional lumbermen who, given a seemingly almost inexhaustible source of supply, naturally gained a contempt for small sources of waste. In some measure responsible, also, have been the farmers who were the pioneers in the settlement of the various sections of our country. Eager to clear the land they had taken up and to get to the actual work of tilling the soil, these settlers were prone in many instances to think only of the quickest and cheapest ways of getting rid of the timber. In many cases they took no pains to get the most out of the standing timber or to so cut it that n maximum yield would be insured.

It is the professional lumbermen who have, figuratively speaking, slashed right and left without much regard to consequences in getting out their timber. Trees have been felled without the proper regard to the damage done to other forest monarchs in the crash of the heavy trunks to earth, and logs have been "snaked" or dragged out of the forest with few, if any, precautions against damage to the young growth—the source of the lumber supply of tomorrow. Added to these, and worse then all else in effect, is the deadly destruction wrought by forest fires. These wholesale annihilations of standing timber have been largely traceable to human carelessness and shortsightedness—carelessness fn extinguishing camp fires and other forms of human negligence that precipitate the fires, and shortsightedness in not providing adequate alarm systems and fire-fighting facilities to combat the flames once they have gained headway.

A very spectacular form of lumber waste, and one that never fails to astound Europeans who tour the United States, is the lavish use made of marketable timber in providing facilities for logging operations. In the states of Oregon and Washington, for instance, there may he seen in the lumber regions ponderous bridges, the piers of which are formed from crossed logs placed crisscross on top of one mother. It is no exaggeration to say that such a bridge contains the makings of lumber sufficient to build all the houses and other frame structures in a good-sized village. Another utility of the American logging system that consumes a surprising quantity of material is the "skid road" which forms the artery of commerce between a logging scene and the nearest loading point on the railroad.

A "skid road" may be several miles in length and it is composed throughout this entire length of logs or greased skids placed crosswise of the highway to form a smooth end comparetively level pathway over or along which the logs fresh from the forest are dragged by a heavy steel cable attached to e donkey engine of several hundred horse power. Similerly the fomiliarity that breeds contempt has prompted many of the loggers to not os spendthrifts in the use of large and sound logs to form a skidded platform, loading stage, etc., at the railroad siding where the logs are placed aboard the cers that are to carry them to the mills. To pursue this sone subject further there might be cited the immense amounts of lumber that have been used in the construction of the dumes or artificiel conels mounted on trestlework in which logs are floated when other means of transportation are not available, some of these flumes being 40 miles in length and costing nearly as much as a railroad.

Perhaps thd greatest bus ued cry that has been precipitated by any phase of America's wasteful lumbering methods has gone up as a result of the plan employed in felling the giant trees of the Pacific northwest. It is one of the first principles of the new conservative policy of lumbering that the severing of a tres by sewing or chopping should be done at a point as near to the ground as possible, so that the waste rongound os possible, so that the stump should be reneat in the form of the stump should be reduced to a minimum. No wonder, then, that consternation has prompted many of the loggers to not os spendthrifts in the use of large and sound logs to form a skidded platform, loading stage, etc., at the railroad siding where the logs are placed aboard the cers that are to carry them to the mills. To pursue this sone subject further there might be cited the immense amounts of lumber that have been used in the construction of the dumes or artificiel conels mounted on trestlework in which logs are floated when other means of transportation are not available, some of

No wonder, then, that consternation has prompted many of the loggers people who are of this way of thinking gasp with astonishment when they go to northern California and the famous Puget Sound country and witness the methods of felling trees in vogue in the tnhe region, so plentifully endowed with timber wealth.

The timber"jacks" of this favored region, far from attempting to make their "cut" on near the ground as possible, are not, eem content to stand on the ground and swing their axes on a level with their wnists, as did the old-time lumbermen of Maine and Michigan. Instead, these Pacific coast fellows construct a "shelf" on the side of the tree to be felled and at such a height that the chopping and sawing is done at o point at leest ten or twelve feet shove ground. The result is, of course, to leave a huge stump containing enough material to build e small house. The lumbermen justify their action by the trodition that the "swell" at the beat of one of these big trees is of inferior material—presumably too poor to bother with. However, most of the expert foresters of the country say that this is not true, at least not in the mnjority of cases and that this method of mutilating timber in the cutting is o flagrantly wasteful one.

One of the most seriously wasteful methods of lumbering in vogue in the United Stetes—looked at from the standpoint of future generations—is the practice of taking from e forest annually an amount of lumber far in excess of new growth. Obviously this will serve to either speedily wipe out a forest or else to indeed, this plan of intelligent harvesting of the timber with reference to the supply of future years is what renders so steadily profitable the edmirebly conducted forests of Germeny and Switzerlend.

Of course the American lumbermon is engoged in logging as a source of livelihood and his moln defense against every charge of wasteful lumbering is that there is so much timber in proportion to the population that it does not pay, es a business proposition, to save more than the better part of each tree felled. Unquestionable there is a grein of truth in this, provided a lumberman is thinking only of prosperity in the present generation, but at the same time there is much waste in lumbering that is not only unnecessary but is actually costly to the lumberman himself. However, conservative lumbering is making headway and is supplanting the old wasteful methods in many sections of the country. The new ideas of conservative lumbering are based on three principles. First, the forest is treated as a working copitel the purpose of which is to produce successive crops. Second, a systemetic working plan is followed in harvesting the forest crop. Third, the work in the woods is carried on in such a manner as to leave the standing trees and the young growth as nearly unharmed by the lumbering as is possible. In the actual operations of tree felling the new policy calls for greater care, so that no tree trunk may be split or broken in falling and likewise very little pressure so that the bark of valuable standing trees will not be rubbed or torn off, the tree trunks that are also "skidded" out of the forest. Finally e ban has been placed on the wasteful practice of cutting promising young trees for corduroy or skids simply because these happen to be convenient and are straight. Under the old plan the e were doer not end when a log gets to the sew mill. There is a further loss of nearly all the sinhs and odgings and all the sawdust used for fuel, so that it is doubtful If more then half of the cubic contents of the standing tree fs finally used.

Bullet Wound Saves Life

Remarkable Result of Old-Time Combat on So-Called "Field of Honor."

Alexander Gralihe fonght two dnels at The Oaks, with consequences which were remarkable, though he came off second best in both, relates the New Orleans Picayune. The first of these dnels was with M. Augustin, who afterwfird became district judge and general of the Louisiana Legion. Augustin ran his sword into Gralihe's lunge and the latter hovered for a long time between life and death, and when at last he did come out of his room he was bowed like an octogenarfan. Complications hnd ensued and surgery was not what it is now. The doctors doclared that it was only a matter of a shqrt time until he would dis. However, that did not prevent him from getting into a qnarrel with Colonel Mnnieville de Marlngy and challenging him to a dnel. It was fought at The Oaks. The weapons were pistols at 15 paces, each to have two shots, advance five paces and fire at will. At the first shot Gralihe fell forward pierced by Marlngy's bullet, which struck the exact place where Augustin's sword had entered. Marlngy, pistol in hand, advanced to the utmost limit, when Gralihe, although suffering intense pain, said, "Shoot again; you have another shot." Marlngy raised his pistol and fired into the air, saying: "I never strike a fallen foe." Gralihe was carried home more dead than alive, but instead of sinking rapidly, began to mend and some time afterword walked out of his room as erect as ever and soon regained his health and stately bearing. Morlngy's bullet had penetrated the nhoscea which threatened his life and made an exit by which it was dreined and his life saved.

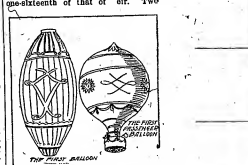
Noiseless Lawn Mowers.

"My noiseless lawn mowers," proudly remarked a suburbanite to a visitor, pointing to a cage full of guinea pigs. "When I get a few more I'm going to hire them out to the golf club to keep the green clipped.

"I put a low harrior of wire netting around the lawn that I want cut and then turn in the guinea pigs. They regnized his health and stately bearattack the worst weeds first—plantains, dandelions, etc.—because they like them the best. Then they take a little rest and tackle the grass. In a short time the lawn looks as though it had been cut by the closest machine. I'm sure that a golf green clipped in this way would be as fast ocsin as it would be mowed in the ordinary way."

BIRD MEN OF OLD

Greek Mythology Tells of First Aero Experiments.



Flew With Legendary Wings of Wax to Escape Wrath of An Ancient King—Criminal Made the First Flight.

Washington, D. C.—The first aeronautical voyage history chronicles was that of the legendary Daedalus and his son. As mythology says, the father, Daedalus, had some kind of a tiff with Minos, his majesty the king of Crete. One sunny day when the kingly wrath had reached the boiling stage, Daedalus and his son, Icarus, decided a different climate would be good for them. So the wings were waxed on and they sailed awey. But they rose so high that the beat from the sun melted the wax and Icarus dropped into the Icarian sea.

Archytas of Tarentum made a pigeon of wood that flew in the fourth century, B. C. Simon, the magician, in 66 A. D., endeavored to do a little air experimentation and broke his neck. In the reign of the Emperor Commenus a Saracen met a similor fate in Constantinople, and flying was abandoned for a few centuries.

Joseph Montgolfier, a paper manufacturer of Annonay, France, discovered fn 1782 that heat rarified air and made it occupy a much larger space than it did before being heated. He made a small poraliceloped of taffeta and filled it with heoted air, it rose to the roof of his apartment and he was convinced. A larger balloon was made, and on June 5, 1783, the first public ascension was made. No one who rode in this Montgolfier, es it was called, but the flight lasted ten minutes. To commemorate it a yearly festival was established.

Hydrogen had been discovered by Cavendish six years before. It was found to have a specific gravity about one-sixteenth of that of air. Two months after Montgolfier's triumph Professeur Charles of Paris sent up an inflated hydrogen balloon which, after traveling 15 miles, was torn to pieces by the superstitious peasantry. A month later another Montgolfier was sent up containing o sheep, a cock and a duck. Louis XVI., king of France, witnessed the flight, and he demended that e human should make an ascension. He ordered that e criminal should be sent up. The famous Pilatre pleaded for the honor, and it was granted. On October 15, 1783, the first known ascent was made by Rozier in e hot air bag, remoining up 4 minutes and 25 seconds.

America caught the fever, and James Wticox, a carpenter of Philadelphia, flew over the Schuylkill river in an aerostnt made by the scientists, Rittenhouse and Hopkins. Two other flights, one of 27 miles in a Montgolfier from Paris, and a shorter one by Professor Charles in a hydrogen balloon, closed the first year of real flying known to the world.

In 1784 more than 60 ascents and voyages were made, the first trip in England being recorded in September of that year. A year later the English channel was crossed from Dover to Calais by Blanchard and Dr. Jefries, an American. So it went. Flight after flight was made and the fad become more popular.

For almost a century the balloon scarcely altered in design, all of them were made with fabric impervious to air and willow basket was not used. However, many improvements were effected in the method of inflation, the construction of the valve, the ripping panel and the quality of the scientific instruments used. Before the balloon was looked upon much es an amusement, and in order to defray the ballooniats' e expenses the public had to pay to see their flights.

The sizes of the balloons increased, previous balloons of only early years had been 20,000 cubic feet capacity, but one was constructed in Paris of 215,000 cubic feet in 1853. In 1859 a captive balloon of 450,000 cubic feet was made. However, most modern balloons do not run more than 80,000 cubic feet. That is the largest balloon which is allowed to compete for the James Gordon Bennett cup race. In 1836 the record flight was 500 miles in 18 hours. In 1870 balloons made a thousand miles and last year Hawley and Post established a new world's record of about 1,200 miles, flying for the Bennett trophy from St. Louis.

Slim Diet for Convict.

VOL. XI. SUNBEAM, PENNINGTON COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1911. NO. 24.

Is a City of Magnificent Distances

WASHINGTON. — Cities outgrow their clothes just as children do. Washington was known three-quarters of a century ago as the City of Magnificent Distances. The White House was known as the "President's Palace," and the government buildings, planned on generous lines, were considered to be far and away too great for the business of the country. Now the national capital is over 100 years old, and has outgrown everything that was planned for her. Tremendous wings were built to the capitol even before the war. The White House has been remodeled and remodeled until it presents very small appearance of the original. We have outgrown our beautiful treasury building, our state, war and navy building, we have outgrown two postal departments, and we long ago outgrew the ten miles square of the district boundaries. In fact, the residents of Washington have lapped over into Maryland and Virginia at a great rate.

The treasury building is of ancient Greek temple design, and simply cannot be remodeled. To add to or take from it a single stone would be to ruin it, architecturally speaking. It is said to be the most perfect example of Greek art in this country, but the treasury department had to have more room, and so they unpinned the roof and shoved it up some on the sides and made a little more room skyward. The state, war and navy building always was hideous, being what is called Italian renaissance, and not at all suited to the solid, last-forever necessities of the United States government, and it looks as tawdry as possible when brought, as it is, into juxtaposition with the White House and the simplicity of the Greek temple of finance.

When the building was put up which was to house the United States postal department and the city post office some architects planned a sort of Cologne Cathedral building, which is a long ways off from being big enough for either department and doesn't match anything in the government building line in Washington. After this structure was put up there was a reform in ideas for government buildings, and since then they have been along the stately, substantial line. The

Bulk of Concealed Assets Recovered

THE United States has recovered nearly $750,000 from the concealed assets of Gaynor, Greene and Carter, who defrauded the government out of $2,000,000 in Savannah harbor improvement contracts in 1897. The actual amount unearthed and attached was $636,966.69. This does not include $40,000 forfeited surety of John F. Gaynor. This sum the government is endeavoring to recover by civil suit in the United States district court for the northern district of New York. More than half of the recovery came from the concealed assets of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, the engineer officer in charge of the work at Savannah harbor and co-conspirator of Greene and Gaynor, the contractors. The total assets of Captain Carter seized by the government amounted to $501,855.39. From B. D. Greene $105,460.25 was recovered, and from John F. Gaynor $29,651.05.

Most of the assets of Captain Carter were in trust funds. They were traced to and corralled in the hands of receivers for the estate of Captain Carter. These trust funds included real estate, bonds, stocks and cash. The government made attachment in this case. Of the $501,855.39 recovered from the Carter concealed assets the Supreme Court of the United States allowed $111,054.23 for Carter's counsel expenses.

All the proceedings in the courts in the Carter case have been terminated, but all of the assets turned over to the government have not been converted into cash.

Government to Start Picture Shows

UNCLE SAM himself is going into the moving picture show business. With the authority of President Taft, a contract has been entered into by the government officials and a Chicago firm for the purpose of reproducing in moving pictures all of the various activities of the nation. The pictures will be shown in hundreds of moving picture houses. Marines at work on battleships, gunners firing at the hulk of an old battleship, cavalry drills, mine and rescue work, plant and animal industry, road building and every single activity of the government will be shown on the films.

In the United States office of public roads, for instance, the director, Logan Waller Page, arranged to have pictures taken showing the effects of good and bad roads. In the case of the latter, the films will show the farmer trying to carry loads of produce over a bad road; how he became sick; how the doctor is unable to reach him, and how, because of the mud ruts, the undertaker finds it exceedingly difficult to get him to his grave. Another film will show another farmer carrying his produce—twice as much—over a model road constructed under the supervision of the government.

The department of agriculture will be able to show, in entertaining as well as instructive style, the effects of pure food and impure food; the secretary of war will be able to show the advantages of army life, and the secretary of the navy the advantages of life on the bounding waves, while the interior department will be showing how forest fires are fought and entombed miners are rescued.

Uncle Sam Builds Prison for Women

A PRISON within a prison is being built at Leavenworth, Kan., and it will be the first exclusive federal prison for women in the United States. The new jail is being built within the walls of the United States penitentiary, but it will have a wall of its own and the inmates will be more securely shut off from the world than the more desperate men confined in the men's prison.

This inside prison will have room for about 500 women, there being now about that number in the various state penitentiaries in the United States, the government paying the states for their keep. These women have been convicted mainly of violations of the postal laws, smuggling, counterfeiting or white slaving.

While the women's prison will be under control of the warden, there will be a woman superintendent and under her a corps of subordinates. Because of being confined behind double walls no guards will be necessary. It will be a rule that no men, especially men prisoners, be allowed in the women's prison.

The women will be kept too busy to think about men, however, for upon them will devolve the making of all the bed clothing, tablecloths, towels and other things of that nature used in the prison and the repair of the men's clothes. They will make their own clothing, of course, although no type of uniform has been decided upon. It probably will be a one-piece blue dress, but without numbers or anything to denote the wearer is a prisoner.

The women will have their own chapel and various entertainments will be provided for them.

RECTOR WHO SCORED ASTOR

Society has been forced to sit up and take notice of the denunciation which has been hurled by Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, rector of St. John's Episcopal church in Philadelphia, against the proposed marriage of John Jacob Astor, a multi-millionaire, aged 47, to Miss Madeline Talmage Force, a beauty aged 18 years.

The denunciation which was made from the pulpit has been followed by more sharp criticisms—a criticism which has extended to others of the smart set who marry and divorce with the ease and nonchalance with which they put on their coats.

Mr. Astor, it may be recalled, was divorced from his wife, who was a Miss Willing, of Philadelphia, and it is because this divorce is to be followed by remarriage that Rev. Mr. Richmond is aroused to the fighting point.

"The Episcopal church," he said, "is opposed to divorce. We score unholy alliances both among the poor of our slums and the rich society dwellers of Newport, Bar Harbor and other sinners' summer retreats. We abhor this Astor Alliance. It is unholy in its origin and its end will be a defiance of God's laws and of our holy religion. We need a national uniform divorce law which will put an end to this overriding of court decrees by such as John Jacob Astor and the social set with whom he associates.

LONG DISTANCE SKY PILOT

Rapidly as the public is becoming accustomed to aeroplane novelties, it received fresh cause for wonder and enthusiasm in the achievement of Harry N. Atwood. When he landed in Chicago on the first lap of his St. Louis-to-Boston trip he broke the American record for a day's flight and demonstrated the remarkable efficiency which has been reached in aeroplane construction. Express trains travel between Chicago and St. Louis in 8 hours; Atwood's time in the air was 7 hours and 30 minutes. When he reached Albany, N. Y., Atwood had flown 1,123 miles, breaking all cross-country flights.

Atwood's boyish appearance attracts attention. He is a tall, slender youth, looking anything but the part of the most daring and successful aviator in the United States. Atwood shuns notoriety and reception committees as far as possible. He cares little for anything except achievement in the aviation world. He is retiring to an unusual degree, and it is difficult to induce him to talk of his own achievements. His flight over the New York skyscrapers and around their towers; his trip from New York to Washington and call on the president, had already made Atwood one of the greatest of American aviators.

KENTUCKY'S NEXT SENATOR

The next senator from Kentucky will no doubt be Representative Ollie M. James, as his Democratic opponent, Senator Paynter, retired from the primary contest.

Ollie James is the biggest man physically in the house. He won fame as an attorney in the Goebel murder case in Kentucky, being one of the lawyers for the prosecution of Caleb Powers. It is something of a coincidence that both James and Powers are now members of the house, the one a Democrat and the other a Republican.

In that murder case James also won a reputation for physical courage, for the times were stirring and there were threats of violence going around, so that anyone prominent upon either side of the case was in physical danger. James would have made a good target for any bullet, as there is so much of him to shoot at, but he went through the prosecution in a manner that demonstrated he was possessed of a good nerve and was not to be deterred by fear.

WANTS TO MARRY FOR LOVE

Col. Edward H. R. Green, president of the Westinghouse company, with assets of $125,000,000, owner of the Texas Midland railroad and son of Mrs. Hetty Green, is going to marry within a year. Who the bride-to-be is he doesn't know, but he says in all seriousness that his bachelorhood will end before he is a year older. Here is the secret of why Col. Green, who is 43 years old, has so long lived the life of single blessedness. He promised his mother 19 years ago, when she took him down to Texas to "break him in" as a railroad section hand, that he would remain a bachelor 20 years. He has kept his word, but when the time limit expires next year he is going to take unto himself a wife.

Three hundred proposals of marriage have reached Col. Green since he decided to live in New York a year ago to take charge of his mother's interests. Scores of the aspiring maids enclosed photographs and letters have been received from half of the states of the Union, while some have come from Europe, Russia and even the Hawaiian Islands. He has answered none of the letters.

Organize a Ball Team for Weak Minded

NEW YORK.—The urgent need of an appropriation of $600,000 from the legislature for Letchworth Village, the new state institution for the feeble-minded at West Haverstraw, was discussed at a meeting of the board of managers at the office of Frank A. Vanderlip, the president, at the National City Bank. The board went over final plans for the erection of buildings on the 2,000 acres of land owned there by the state, which will eventually house 2,500 adults and children of both sexes.

Dr. C. S. Little, the superintendent, told of the arrival at the institution of the first quota of inmates, thirty-two boys from Randall's Island. Dr. Little said that the boys took to farm life quickly. "I have to take back with me a baseball outfit for two teams and a suit of armor for the umpire," explained Dr. Little to the managers. "We expect to organize a league within the institution. A state league, taking in teams from the institution for the feeble-minded at Rome and Sonyea, is not an impossible idea."

Dr. Little said he didn't want it understood that play was to be the only thing in Letchworth Village, because much of the work of building up the institution and running it after it is built is to be done by the inmates.

"Only those who are able to work will be required to do so," said Dr. Little. "The boys the first day worked in the garden until 10 o'clock, then went swimming in the creek that flows through the village and in the afternoon went back to the garden."

Chinese Masons Have a Weird Funeral

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The most spectacular funeral ever held in New Orleans took place the other day when the body of Ching Sing, secretary of the Chinese Masonic lodge here and one of the wealthiest Chinamen in the south, was taken to the Firemen's cemetery.

Arrayed in the robes of their offices, Chinese high in rank of the local order of Masons participated in the ceremonies, which included the placing of a cooked chicken, of rice, tea, and other foodstuffs, favorites of the Chinaman, at the grave, the beating of tom-toms, to drive away the evil spirits, the chanting of Chinese hymns, the burning of incense, and joss sticks.

Gowned in a brownish costume and wearing a black cap, the body was in an elaborate coffin. At the head was a picture of the dead man and on each side of the coffin were long white banners, which gave a brief sketch of the dead man. Chinese guards in quaint costumes, peculiar to Chinese Masons, stood around. Chinese banners were hung about the room. At the feet of the dead man was erected an altar, before which hymns were chanted and prayers read.

Grand Master Charley Foo opened the ceremonies. Waving his hands, he advanced to the coffin, making an address. The other Chinese bowed in reverence. Chin Bak On, the assistant grand master of the order, followed Foo. Gee Toi Sing followed.

At the cemetery Chin Bak On, assistant grand master of the lodge, led the procession into the tomb, where, with a few waves of his hands, he drove the evil spirits from the place. The foodstuffs that had been placed at the feet of the corpse in the undertaking establishment were placed in front of the grave. A grate in the tomb contained a fire, in which incense was thrown. Then there was more chanting, the cover was fastened upon the casket, and the ceremony was over. The body will be shipped to China.

Dog's Caress Brings Death to Child

WINFIELD, L. I.—Martha Quis, 4 years old, and Toto, a little terrier that for a year had been the child's inseparable companion, were frolicking in the yard of the Quis home in this city one morning about a fortnight ago as a neighbor's dog slunk past. With frantic yelps Toto started in pursuit, though Martha called in pleading tones for him to come back. It was the first time Toto had disobeyed his little mistress and she was heartbroken.

The other dog attacked Toto fiercely and in a few moments Martha's play-fellow limped back to her whimpering from a dozen wounds. Taking the dog in her arms she washed the smarting dust from the cuts, which soon healed under the tender ministrations of the little nurse.

Martha was suffering from heat rash, which caused her great discomfort. She scratched the heat sores till she drew the blood. In pain himself from his wounds, Toto seemingly sympathized with Martha, and to demonstrate his affections he would lick her hands.

Then one morning Martha went to the rear yard to get Toto, as was her custom. The doghouse was empty and its tenant was nowhere to be found. Martha was inconsolable.

Soon, however, the child became delirious. Always she called for Toto, appealing to him to come back to her and not make her cry by being so "bad." Her pitiful pleas wrung the hearts of those at her bedside. A doctor was summoned, and after one glance at Martha he called in consultation a fellow practitioner. They both agreed that Martha had hydrophobia.

Everything was done to combat the disease, but soon Martha was beyond any human aid. Chloroform was administered and the child was kept under its influence till death ended her suffering.

Boston Orders Police to "Swat" Flies

BOSTON.—The Boston police have added to their duties the job of killing flies. It is claimed that they have already demolished or otherwise put out of active business some 150,000 or 200,000 and that before the end of the season the busy bobbies of the Athens of America will have sent 500,000 of the biting and tickling diptera to fly heaven.

Just what the police are up against may be inferred from the following figures: A female house fly which has hibernated in a dwelling house, or elsewhere, writes Prof. F. L. Washburn, may produce in the spring, at the lowest estimate, 120 eggs. Assuming that one-half of these batch as females and allowing that the breeding goes on without check for four months, we have as the descendants of a single hibernating individual enough flies to make quite a broad belt around the earth at the equator, placing close together.

Why is this army of flies? It invades, it attacks, it is more fearless and elusive than any other army known to the thing called life. Each unit of that army is a threat of disease, the buzzing of it the initial thrumming of the cataclysm that is to swell into the horror of the crack of doom.

Each unit comes from places so disgusting that the very thought of it alighting on the nose or on any part of the body sends a shiver up and down the spine that is like the rigor mortis. It is a knell of disease and death on a billion wings in every city and town in the world, dreadful as the scourge of Egypt.

THE SUNBEAM.

SUNBEAM. MINN

FRIENDS OF THE FARMER.

The Department of Agriculture has come in the relief of the grosbeak. He is a very much maligned bird, this high authority avers, and instead of being destructive to crops, is of great benefit to the farmer. Little Jun lassed by Secretary Wilson says that seven kinds of finches known as grosbeaks summer within the boundaries of the United States. They are easily distinguished from other finches by their stout form, bright plumage, massive bills and melodious voices. Those which most interest the farmer are five in number—the rose-breasted, the cardinal or redbird, the black-headed, the blue and the gray. The bulletin concludes as follows: "Present investigations prove that the services of the grosbeak in destroying insect pests are invaluable. Each kind pays especial attention to certain pests which if unchecked would cause enormous loss. Few of our birds are to be credited with more good and with fewer evils than the grosbeak, and none more clearly deserves protection by the practical farmer." The probability is that the farmer would do better to protect the whole race of birds than to look with toleration on their indiscriminate slaughter.

New York and New Jersey are making a joint study of the evils of cold storage. A bill is pending in congress looking to a reformation of the same evil, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The question is a large one, with many angles. It is not so much talked about as it was a year ago, but still merits the attention of legislative bodies. Cold storage of food products is a modern necessity. Rightly used, it serves the public by keeping prices steady, by storing in the season of plenty for use in the season of natural storage. No one argues against cold storage as an institution. It is when food is held back in order to maintain abnormally high prices, when it is kept so long that it becomes poisonous, when cold storage is made a curse instead of a blessing to mankind, that government must step in with a restraining hand. The period of storage should be strictly limited, and the sale of stored products rigidly regulated.

Long ago the wasp waist, considered so fashionable, departed from feminine favor. Now the small foot is following in its wake, which proves that womankind is falling into line in approving safe and sane fashions. Occasional freaks like the bobbie skirt may appear, but in the main women are deciding in favor of common sense and freedom as opposed to the ridiculous and unbeautiful restrictions of other days.

LUMBER INDICTED

RETAILERS' BODY, SCOUT PUBLISHERS' AND SECRETARIES' BUREAU NAMED.

IN SUIT JUST FILED AT DETROIT

The Proposed Litigation Is Designed to End What Is Claimed to be An Unlawful Combine.

Detroit, Mich. — Charging conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce in lumber and its products, United States District Attorney Frank Watson filed a bill in the United States circuit court here to enjoin the Michigan Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, the Scout Publishing Company of this city, and the Lumber Secretaries' Bureau of Information of Chicago from further alleged unlawful business methods.

It is alleged that members of the retailers' association endeavor to prohibit manufacturers or jobbers from shipping to competitors who are nonmembers of the organization. A manufacturer shipping to competing dealers is subject to a fine of ten per cent of the value of the sale, it is charged, and if the manufacturer refuses to pay the penalty the proposed retailers are informed of it. In case any association member continues dealing with the manufacturer, following notification that he has refused to pay his penalty, the member is subject to expulsion from the body.

The Scout Publishing Company issues The Scout, a lumber trade journal. It is charged that from time to time editorials were published advocating the principles of the retailers' association. The manufacturer or jobbers who observed the ethics of the retailers' organization.

The government also asserts that The Scout published the names of the shippers who engaged in interstate commerce and trade in a manner alleged to be in violation of the rules of the Retail Dealers' Association, thereby answering all purposes of a "blacklist" for the defendant organization.

Secretaries on Guard.

When a manufacturer or jobber failed to abide by the rules of the defendant organization, it is alleged that the secretary of the association would complain to the Lumber Secretaries' Bureau of Information and the latter would in turn give notice to the several lumber dealers' associations throughout the United States, all of which the district attorney holds to be in restraint of trade. The Secretaries' Bureau of Information is also said to have kept The Scout informed of any violation of the rules of the retail dealers.

According to the government's bill the organized dealers do not object to the shipment of lumber to railroads or transportation companies or for sash, doors and blinds to hardware merchants who might keep a regular stock of such goods, providing the material is sold in not less than carload lots. The classes of competitors said to be most specifically opposed are mail order houses and farmers' co-operative societies.

Duluth, Sept. 1.—Wheat, September, $1.01¾; December, $1.02¾. No. 1 hard, cash, $1.01¾; No. 1 northern, $1.01¾; No. 2 northern, $1.01¾.

South St. Paul, Sept. 1.— Cattle: Steers, $4.25@7.50; cows, $3.00@5.25; calves, $3.75@7.50; bogs, $7.00@7.35; sheep, spring lambs, $3.50@6.00.

Chicago Grain Market.

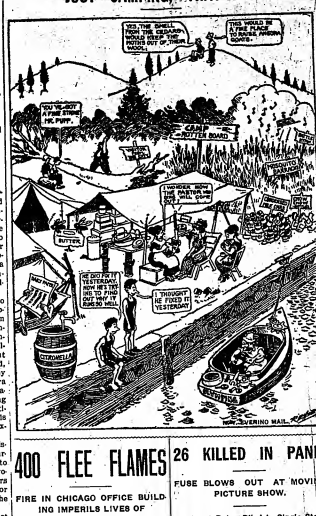
Chicago, Sept. 1.—Announcement today of an increase in the visible put strength in the market for wheat. The advance of insurance rates, military preparation to make certain the neutrality of Belgian territory, and the pessimistic outlook for the resumption of negotiations regarding Mexico all joined to cause a rise in prices here. There were also reports from parts of Australia, the latter showing from the opposite hemisphere a scarcity of offers from Russia. The opening was a rise to 1@2¾c higher. December started at 1@1¼c, a gain of ¾c to 1@1¼c, but reacted to 93¾c.

The market later reacted because of heavy sales, but the effect did not last. The close was firm and unchanged. December sold at 93¾@94c.

Assertions that the crop is slow in maturing tended to make corn firm. Trade, however, was light and contemptible interest developed. December opened at 61¾@62c, sold off to 62¼c, and advanced to 62¾c.

Speculation was probably without avail. German import duties on corn led to a further marketing of prices. The close was firm at 63¼c for December, a net gain of ¾c.

Sharp buying orders were limited helped to lift oats. December started at 34¾c to ¼ up at 35¼@35¾c and ascended to 35¾@35¾c.



Slow loss selling acted as a weight on provision. First transactions were 10c lower to 7½c up, with January delivery $16@$16.05 for pork, $9@9.02½ for lard and $8.80 for ribs.

FIRE IN CHICAGO OFFICE BUILDING IMPERILS LIVES OF SCORES.

COOL HEADS PREVENT PANIC

Elevator Operators Stick to Post Until Last Person Leaves Burning Structure — Police Rescue Telephone Operator Overcome by Smoke.

Chicago.—Fire starting in e storeroom of the Chicago and Alton Railway company in the Puiton building, Harrison street and Fifth avenue, imperilled the lives of 400 men, women and girls employed on the eighth and ninth floors.

Only a few were injured slightly, cool-headed men and women preventing e stampede that might have resulted in great loss of life. With scores of frightened women clinging to the fire escapes man in the street gave warning that there was great danger and prevented several from jumping.

A. B. Greig proved the hero of the elevators. He was the operator of one and he never left his post until the last person was out of the building. When he brought down the final "load" he had to be carried from his car, but quickly revived in the open air. The three other elevator men also did heroic work, all sticking to their cars till the last.

The loss is estimated at $25,000, not including priceless records of the Chicago & Alton railroad.

WOMAN TO RUN POSTAL BANK

Chosen to Manage Savings Concern at Los Angeles Because of Special Fitness.

Los Angeles, Cal. — When the postal savings bank opens in Los Angeles it is to be in charge of Mrs. B. C. Shelton, who for years has been assistant superintendent of the money order division. 26 KILLED IN PANIC

FUSE BLOWS OUT AT MOVING PICTURE SHOW.

Dead and Dying Piled in Single Stairway in Frantic Rush to Escape.

Canonsburg, Pa.—Twenty-six persons were killed and sixty injured in a panic which followed the explosion of a moving picture film in the Grand opera house in this city. The dead and thirteen were children under fifteen years of age and seven were women.

Operator John McCullough had just thrown the title of the next series of pictures on the screen, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," when the film exploded and his cabinets cabinet was filled with flame.

Some one yelled "Fire!" and the 1,500 people in the audience turned in their seats, saw the smoke and made a frantic rush for the one doorway leading to the narrow eight-foot stairway, with 50 steps leading up from a vestibule. Here the pitiful scene on 200 people crowded into the passage, awaiting the end of the performance to take the piece of those who had seen the show.

Immediately the narrow stairway was packed and jammed ten feet high with the dead and dying, the struggling injured and the screaming unhurt.

29 ARE KILLED IN WRECK

G. A. R. Veterans Returning From Rochester Meeting Among Victims of Accident.

Rochester, N. Y.—The Chicago, Buffalo & New York express on the Lehigh Valley railroad, loaded with Grand Army men returning from the Rochester encampment, was wrecked at Manchester. Twenty-nine persons lost their lives and 60 were injured. The sleeper was crushed by spreading rails. Two engines and two cars passed over the rails in safety. The third and fourth cars plunged over the bridge 60 feet below.

The disaster was due to spreading rails. The locomotive and the baggage car had passed over the trestle when the tracks gave way. A dining car filled with passengers at luncheon was the first to plunge headlong into the water. Two coaches followed, one standing end in the water with all its passengers hurled into a heap, which completely filled two-thirds of the car, crushing and maiming all who were underneath.

GALE FATAL TO 15

DAMAGE UPWARD OF $1,000,000; GREATEST LOSS IN SOUTH-EASTERN SECTION.

TWO DROWNED AT SAVANNAH

Hotel Guests on Isle of Palms Spend Night of Terror—Six Torpedo Boats Torn From Moorings and Driven Ashore.

Charleston, S. C.—At least 15 persons are dead as the result of the storm which swept this city. Conservative estimates of the damage place the loss at upward of $1,000,000. Both bridges into the city have been badly damaged.

The greatest damage was suffered in the southeastern section of Charleston.

Shipping has suffered heavily, but it is impossible at this time to fix the loss in dollars. Scores of launches have broken away and efforts are being exerted to catch them.

Heavy rains have contributed to the height of the water in the streets and yards caused by the abnormal tide, many lower floors being inundated and household effects being damaged.

The Clyde Line steamer Apache made port after a thrilling experience off this harbor during the hurricane. Passengers were life preservers for several hours and ware prepared to leave the ship at any moment.

It is stated by passengers that the stokers were kept at work at the points of revolvers, although the captain denies the tale.

Sevannah's parks are scenes of desolation as a result of the winds.

Two men are reported to have been drowned in Lazerette creek.

Augusta, Ga.— Seventy-five guests of the hotel on the Isle of Palms spent a night of terror while the storm raged. Congregated in the lobby, the only spot immune from the wind and rain, women wept and prayed, and one man had a pistol in readiness to shoot himself to avoid drowning.

Washington.—The storm which swept the South Atlantic left its imprint on the navy. Six torpedo boats were wrenched from their moorings at the Charleston navy yard and tossed as toys high upon the beach by the gale. Many buildings of the yards are believed to be wrecked.

DISHONESTY IN ARMY POSTS

Major-General Grant Recommends That They Be Managed by Civilians.

Washington. — The ravelation of irregularities in some of the post exchanges in the department of the east during the fiscel year, which ended recently, has caused Maj.-Gen. Frederick D. Grant to recommend to the war department that post exchanges be placed in the hands of civilians.

Bad menagement and dishonesty hos been disastrous to the post exchanges, he says, causing the lose of funds and the trial of one officer, and several enlisted men. He attributes the trouble primarily to tha fact that the army officers, occupied with military duties, are unable to give the exchanges the proper attention.

TWO DIE IN RACE

DRIVER BUCK AND MECHANICIAN JACOBS KILLED AT ELGIN.

Nearly 100 Persons Hurt When Grand Stand Collapses, Precipitating 2,000 to Ground.

Elgin, Ill.—Tragedy raced with the record-breaking speed demonstrated by and overtook one of the cars in which two men were careening around the road course. Just before the winner of the National trophy flashed across the finish line, one of the automobiles of the Pope-Hartford type, jumped into the air and turned a somersault. The mechanician, Samuel Jacobs, was killed instantly and the driver, David Buck, suffered injuries that resulted in his death a short time later.

The trophy was won by Lee Zengel in a National car, who ran at an average speed of 68.45 miles an hour, four miles an hour faster than the record of 1910.

Zengel sustained an engine killing speed for the 305 miles. His car ran in splendid luck, outstripping Ralph Mulford's Lozier, Ralph Da Palma's Simplex and Spencer Wishart's Simplex, three of the most touted cars in the race. Every one of them fell before the tremendous pace, leaving the trophy between Zengel, Grant and Hughes, who finished in the order named.

The crowd had a touch of excitement not on the program at the end of the first lap when the grand stand folded up like a window shutter and tobogganed 2,000 persons to the ground.

It is stated by passengers that the stokers were kept at work at the points of revolvers, although the captain denies the tale.

Two men are reported to have been drowned in Lazerette creek.

Augusta, Ga.— Seventy-five guests of the hotel on the Isle of Palms spent a night of terror while the storm raged. Congregated in the lobby, the only spot immune from the wind and rain, women wept and prayed, and one man had a pistol in readiness to shoot himself to avoid drowning.

Washington.—The storm which swept the South Atlantic left its imprint on the navy. Six torpedo boats were wrenched from their moorings at the Charleston navy yard and tossed as toys high upon the beach by the gale. Many buildings of the yards are believed to be wrecked.

BEATTIE CONFESSED, SAYS KIN

Accused Virginian's Cousin Paul Gives Damaging Evidence Against Defendant at Trial.

Chesterfield Courthouse, Va.—Paul Beattie, cousin of the man now on trial for his life in connection with the murder of his young wife, made his effort to send Henry Clay Beattie, 19, to the electric chair.

Without tha least hesitation Paul Beattie declared that Harry Beattie had himself said that he killed the bride of a year. This testimony created a sensation not equaled since the opening of the Beattie case.

The prosecution sprung another surprise when it introduced as a witness, without warning, the Rev. V. Owen, mother of the slain girl.

The tactical, the survival of which was timed to coincide with the moment Sheriff Gill exhibited in the courtroom the clothing worn by Beattie on the night of the murdar. Mrs. Owen appeered and took the witness stand.

Prosecutor Wendenberg questioned Mrs. Owen as to her knowledge of the domestic life of the Beatties and brought out a point intended as relevant to the alleged motive for the murder, namely that Beattie's physical condition, due to dissipation, had caused much unhappiness to his wife.

The witness stated that on the night of the murder she had cautioned Mrs. Beattie not to go out alone with her husband.

Grierson's Triumph

By Hollis Otway

Grierson limped slowly along the track. Some 1,900 miles ahead was Chicago. At various intervals along the track were telegraph offices. Grierson had only to send a wire and transportation would be rushed to him, but this was not Grierson's way.

When he had left home with the touring company there had been a scene in his father's office that would have resulted in no open rupture had not both men held their tempers under perfect control.

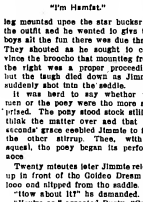
Then he went down to the station to join the Harding Metropolitan Stars, and Gaswell Grierson turned back to his rosewood desk, trying to derive some satisfaction from the thought that the experience would cure the boy of his stage fever.

The crash came in Nevada. The manager had suggested to Jimmie that he could have a half interest if he would move the company, pointing out that with a railroad president for a father the procurement of passes should be a matter of great ease.

Jimmie's reply had not been marked by temperateness.

Then he had set his face east and more than 500 miles of ties and tracks had already been covered when he came into sight of Elcho.

Adorning the station platform were some of the boys from the baseball outfit and they were pleased to be facetious at his expense. Jimmie was too tired to be angry, and chaffed back as well as he could. At last Dusty Millar, the foreman, suggested that they needed a man.



"I think I can fill the place," smiled Jimmie. "Want to take me on?"

"Can you ride?" demanded Dusty.

"I guess I can," was the modest answer. "It won't be any worse than walking, anyhow."

Dusty led the way to where the ponies were tethered and the amused population gathered to watch the fun.

With mettle aforethought, Jimmie climbed into the saddle from the off hand side. He knew that he was be-leg mounted upon the star bucker of the outfit and he wanted to give the boys all the fun there was due them. They shouted as he sought to coax the broncho that mounting from the right was a proper proceeding, but the tough died down as Jimmie suddenly shot into the saddle.

It was hard to say whether the men or the pony were the more surprised. The pony stood stock still to think the matter over and that ten seconds' grace enabled Jimmie to find the other stirrup. Then, with a squeal, the pony began its performances.

Twenty minutes later Jimmie relaxed up in front of the Golden Dream saloon and slipped from the saddle.

"How about it?" he demanded.

"You're on," assented Dusty. "Come inside."

But great was Jimmie's surprise when a couple of days later he was riding across the range, to be accosted by Grace Beavers, the niece of the owner of the ranch.

"Are you the Shakespearean cowboy?" she demanded, as she reined in her pony. "You are the man they call 'Hamfat' are you not?"

"I'm Hamfat."

"The colonel was telling me about you."

Later, when she came to know Jimmie better, she dropped the inquiring air and they frankly discussed the drama and ranch life while their eyes spoke messages that Jimmie longed to put into speech.

But it was not long before he cared speak of his love. They had been riding across the range and in attempting to cross a gully, Grace's horse had slipped and she was thrown. As she pitched forward Jimmie spurred his horse, but he was too late to save her and she struck the soft earth.

For a moment Jimmie thought that she was killed and he knelt beside her, reproaching himself for not having shown more care in watching her horse. Grace opened her eyes to look into his own and it needed no spoken word to tell each other that they loved.

For a moment she lay in his arms, too shaken to speak, and then she gently pushed him away.

"I am so sorry, Jimmie," she said pathetically. "I am so sorry that you care. I was interested in your Shakespeare at first and then—well, it was too late. I am uncle's ward, you know, and he would never give his consent."

More than once Jimmie was tempted to tell her who he was and so smooth the way, but he was a born fighter and he wanted to win on his own merits and not on the strength of his father's name, so he gritted his teeth and wondered how long it would be before opportunity came.

One morning the wrangler had sent him out to bring in some horses from the herd and long before the sun had risen he had started out with a string of ponies to be roped into the herd and fresh horses cut out.

As he jogged along he dreaded over bits of his former plays and sought to plan some coup whereby he might win Grace's consent to his speaking to her uncle. He was well toward the mouth of the gulch when there came the thunder of hoof beats and the herd already had come. There was a commotion among the horses of his string and in an instant Jimmie guessed the cause.

It was the famous Black Devil herd of wild horses, taking its name from the coal black stallion that led the band. They had made a descent upon the Blazing H herd, stampeded the ponies and added them to their numbers. Jimmie cut his string loose and turned tail. His own mount was fairly fresh, but he saw no hope to ride around the herd. On the other hand he could drift with them and gradually work his horse to the rear. It would be a hard fight to pull out from the bunch, but he believed that he could hold his pony.

The quirt fell across her flanks and the race was on. There were more than a hundred horses in the band, most of which had been stampeded by the half dozen belonging to the original bunch. According to tradition, they had been cavalry mounts in an Indian battle and had escaped during a massacre. Fleeing to the hills they had evaded recapture by the Indians and had reverted to their primal instincts, augmenting their numbers as opportunity offered.

To seek to ride through the herd would be suicide, and mindful of his old hunting days Jimmie lifted his horse along. He wanted to be free of the gulch before the band caught up with him.

As they swung 'round the mouth of the gulch he was several hundred yards in advance. He gave a glance forward and his heart stood still, for right ahead was a grey-habited figure upon the big roan. If the band ever caught Grace's horse she would probably be trampled to death.

Flying whip and spur he forced his pony toward her and she, in her terror, came galloping toward him. Her horse had long since become unmanageable and as they met it was all he could do to turn the roan's head to keep pace with his pony.

"It's all right," he shouted above the thunder of the hoofs. "Keep your head. Don't be afraid."

She smiled bravely at him, but at that moment the herd caught them, the stallion sweeping past, and the flatter of the horses streaming on either side. Jimmie longed to take a shot at the stallion, but with Grace to look after he dared not. By keeping a firm hand on her mount's bridle he kept beside her, but her horse was frenzied from his own and it became apparent that soon he must be outdistanced. They were in the center of the bunch now and were slowly falling back.

"Kick your stirrup," he shouted. "I am going to take you over here."

Slowly she slipped her feet from the stirrups and nodded to him. She could not trust her voice. Even his clear, reigning tones seemed faint and far away.

"Lean over," he shouted. "Now!" and, as he released the roan's bridle and the horse shot forward, he caught her by the waist and swung her to his saddle.

Dusky weighted his pony dropped back rapidly and presently they were clear of the herd. There was a sharp fight for mastery, but Jimmie won and presently the little pony was cantering slowly to right angles to the herd's course, plays and sought to plan some coup whereby he might win Grace's consent to his speaking to her uncle. He was well toward the mouth of the gulch when there came the thunder of hoof beats and the herd already had come. Jimmie smiled down into the girl's face.

"I guess it's all over," he cried cheerfully, "but you'll have to get another saddle horse."

"Want it awful?" she shuddered. "I thought we should both be killed —Jimmie," she said softly.

"You may speak to uncle if you want to. If he says 'no,' I'm going to marry you anyway."

"You don't have to marry me be cause I helped you out of a scrape," he protested naturally.

"It's not because you saved my life," she protested. "It's because you are so strong and brave—and lovable. And she stooped and kissed the tanned face.

FIRE CELEBRATION

SEVENTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF HOLOCAUST OF SEPTEMBER 1, 1894, WAS OBSERVED.

GOVERNOR SPEAKS AT HINCKLEY

Sand Concerts and Banquet to Visiting Officials to Mark the Day's Memorial Exercises.

With addresses by Governor Eberhart and others, band concerts and a banquet to visiting officials, residents of the new Hinckley, celebrated the seventeenth anniversary of the holocaust of flame that swept over Pine county in 1894, destroying in one day —September 1—Hinckley, Sandstone and six other prosperous towns, causing the death of 418 residents and making 2,000 others homeless.

Famous in the annals of Minnesota for the devastation that it caused is the Hinckley fire, when the residents of the village, penned like rats in a trap, were smothered and buroed to death in the worst forest fire in the history of the United States. Lest we, when Chisholm and Baudette, with other Northern Minnesota villages, were visited by fires, the minds of Minnesotans traveled back in memory to the day sixteen years before when what had been a happy prosperous village was transformed into a "veritable hell on earth," in the words of a survivor, so quickly that but few escaped.

Warning of Approaching Danger Unheeded.

Not unheralded had been the catastrophe, for the woods had been burning for weeks and a heavy pall of smoke hung over the village, and hung in the sky, at times almost shutting out the light of the sun. Other towns in the neighborhood had been threatened, but beckfiring had saved them, and now and then a homesteader would come fleeing to one of the little villages of the district, his family and what worldly possessions he could scramble together loaded on a wagon dragged by a jaded team. But there had been no loss of life.

So the residents of old Hinckley somewhat inured to the ever-present danger, ignored it. Chroniclers since have held the entire blame for the great loss of life upon the persons themselves, for failure to heed the warnings and to leave the district.

For the summer had been unusually dry, no rain falling for three months, and the woods and underbrush were like tinder. Fortunately there had been but little wind, and the fire smoldered in the brush heaps, windfalls and old logs—only some dead, standing monarch of the forest, ablaze at night, serving as a beacon, locating the progress of the flames.

Sun Like Red Ball of Fire.

Hot and ominously still was the morning of September 1, 1894. The sun hung like a great red ball of fire in the sky; the air was fearfully oppressive—there was every indication of cyclonic conditions. Yet to these warnings the residents of Hinckley paid no heed—they were sturdy, hard fellows, those men of the north, ern pines, and they felt they could cope with an ordinary blaze.

And so they attended to their business as they had always done that morning. The first intimation the resident of Hinckley had that anything unusual might occur was about noon when the smoke samed to grow more dense, and was accompanied by considerable heat. Again they paid no heed, and chroniclers tell of little groups gathering here and there throughout the village, watching the southern sky and joking about their ability as firefighters.

But about about 2:30 in the afternoon, the storm cloud rose, like an almost perpendicular wall of black smoke, surging and roaring and fairly sweeping everything in its way to destruction. In Pine City, fifteen miles away, where it appeared to be only a short distance off, its roar was heerd-in Hinckley its progress was terrific. Following the wind had blown a gale from the south, and, gaining strength at 1:30, it reached a velocity of sixty miles an hour within a short time.

Heat of First Wave Fatal to Hundreds.

By the intense heat of the first wave most of the 418 persons were killed. Hinckley itself many of the victims were burned, but in the surrounding country many were found without a blister on them, the heat being such that the lives of the victime were snuffed out by poisonous gases generated by the flames.

A freight train on the Eastern Minnesota road reached Hinckley at 2:40, and waited for a southbound passenger, which arrived at 3:25, when a combination train was made up and proved to be the principal means of escape of the affrighted people.

A south-bound limited on the Duluth road, now the Northern Pacific line to Duluth, due at Hinckley at 4:05, ren through the smoke and flames to within about a mile and a half of the village. There it was met by refugees from the town, and its crew, learning of an unsafe bridge, was run back to Skunk Lake, a little lake near the track, about five and a half miles south of Hinckley, where its passengers passed through a frightful, yet successful bottle for their lives.

Gravel Pit Refuge for Horses.

Directly east of the town itself was a gravel pit owned by the Great Northern, about three acres in extent filled with three or four feet of water at the time of the fire. This was the nearest means of escape from the fury of the flames. Many deeds of heroism were recorded, of villagers who helped in the rescue of their friends, and especially of the crews of the two railroad trains.

The first news of the disaster reached the Twin City, relief expeditions were organized and special trains were equipped with supplies, physicians and nurses, were rushed to the scene. Senator Knute Nelson, who was then governor, immediately called a mass meeting, of which the late Cherles A. Pillsbury was made chairman. He also served on committee of the permanent relief committee, which established headquarters at Hinckley, dispensed money and provisions to the sufferers.

Country-wide Response to Appeal.

From all over the United States responded to the appeal for funds, and $185,000 was raised in a short time for the help of the refugees. This was sufficient to care for their immediate needs, and to a part of it was used to help rebuild the burned town.

Hinckley is now the center of one of the most prosperous communities in the northern part of the state, the ashes of 1894 having been converted meanwhile into thrifty dairy farms, and the village has a population of two or three times as many people as lived there before the fire.

Mrs. Highee at Sauk Center Arranging for State Meeting.

Sauk Center.—Mrs. C. G. Highee of St. Paul, president of the Federation of Minnesota Women's clubs, was in this city arranging preliminaries for the annual convention of the federation which will be held in this city September 29 to 30. Mrs. Highee assisted in arranging details for the entertainment of the visitors. Delegates will be entertained in the homes of Sauk Center residents during their stay here.

SOY KILLS PET HERON.

Immense Bird Victim of Mischievous Kid.

St. Cloud.—A blue heron, measuring five feet nine inches from the beak to toe, was killed by Lee Brockway, aged 13. The bird was probably the pet of the man in charge of the government dam at Gull lake. It has a broken leg fastened to its leg by iron rings which was stamped: "U. S. Dam, Gull Lake," and on the reverse side: "Taylor, M. C."

Rushing Dan Patch Line.

Faribault.—The surveys appointed by Judge Childress to value the land wanted for right of way by the Dan Patch line between Faribault and Northfield have completed their work. Settlements were made with most of the farmers along the line, without condemnation proceedings. The amounts fixed by the appraisers range from $150 to $2,100. The work of grading between this city and Northfield is being pushed rapidly and it is expected that cars will be running into Faribault by the fall.

ROCHESTER'S NEW SCHOOL

HANDSOME STRUCTURE HAS EVERY MODERN CONVENIENCE.

Opening of Building Marks Important Epoch in City Educational History.

Rochester.—When the Rochester school opens on September 4, its high school will assemble in its handsome new structure just completed. The building has been fitted with every convenience for a successful school course, and will cost about $140,000. Besides the class rooms, laboratories and superintendent's office, there is a splendid gymnasium with shower baths and lockers for the girls and dressing rooms for class plays and other public functions. The building is fitted with modern ventilating devices as well as a vacuum cleaning system operating by electricity.

The opening of the new high school in Rochester marks an important epoch in her educational history, for while arrangement has been made for the regular high school course, the building has been constructed with a view of broadening the curriculum, which will give a practical training along any line, and four new departments have been added this year, domestic science, manuel training, agriculture and a normal training course of one year for high school graduates desiring to secure first grade teachers' certificates. A commercial department hes also been provided for.

The regular corps of teachers for the usuel high school course consists of Prof. C. L. Woodfield, the superintendent of schools; Prof. Edward Shusy, high school principal; Prof. C. D. Sullman, director of athletics; Miss Agnese McClinton, Maud Schafer, Adelia Swanson, Jena Neubit, Ethel Hure, and Mergsurita Tremain, teachers in the science and languages; Mise Mauda Lillis, lestructor in music; Miss Genevieva Trautman, drawing.

For tha new courees, the following have been engaged: Prof. John Hay, the Manhattan, Kan., agriculture; Prof. Roy Sprigg, of Lewieton, manual training; Mrs. Pearl B. Edwards, of Spring Valley, normal training, and Mise Cecollina Mullen, of Lewiston, domestic science.

NORMAL TERM IS ENDED.

Summer School at St. Cloud Graduates Nine.

St. Cloud.—The State normal summer school in St. Cloud closed, when nina graduates were presented with diplomes.

The members of tha graduating class were preceded by fifty members of the Alumni association who marched in and took seats on the platform. Mise Irene Swesson sang two solos, with Miss Zona Taylor as accompanist. President Shoemaker delivered the address and presented the class to tha normal board. Resident Director C. L. Atwood responded for tha hoard and presented the diplomas.

In presenting the class to the normal board, President Shoemaker in his remerks to the class members spoke of the growth of the local institution which has now 2,300 alumni. Resident Director C. L. Atwood presented the diplomas for the board.

Tha following were tha graduates:

Advanced Course—Joseph Roy Campbell, St. Cloud; Florence Bertrude Oliver, Selah, Wash.; Dassa Leona Terry, Parker's Prairia, Beda Tonnell, St. Cloud.

TO SURVEY RED LAKE.

Purpose is to Ascertain Its Feasibility for a Reservoir.

St. Paul.—Robert Follansbee, head of the United States geological survey, which is working in combination with the State Drainage commission, is in tanta survey, says that Red Lake would be surveyed this week to ascertain whether it be feasible to use it as a reservoir.

The survey of Little Fork river, in Koochiching county, has been completed, and it was found possible to use it both for storage of water and for power. The other surveys started this summer will be finished before the fall, is tha opinion of Engineer Follansbee.

"Minnesota is far ahead of the other states in its geological survey," said Mr. Follansbee. "The state drainage department and the United State geological department work together. Minnesota is one of the few states in the country that has a geological department, and the Legislature of the state should be praised for making an appropriation towards the maintenance of this department."

HEADS SEATTLE SCHOOLS.

Edward T. Quigley of Minneapolis Is Selected.

Seattle, Wash.—Edward T. Quigley, long connected with the University of Minnesota and a resident of Minneapolis, has been elected superintendent of the Seattle public schools and will enter on his new work at the opening of the fall term of school. Quigley comes here highly recommended and is to get an increase in salary

LIFE SAVED BY FRIEND'S ADVICE

"About three years ago I suffered with spendicitis and after having an operation performed it left me with a severe case of kidney trouble. I was doctored by several physicians and getting no relief I took the advice of a friend and purchased a bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. After taking the contents of the first bottle I felt greatly relieved and decided to continue it. After using the contents of three more dollar bottles, I experienced a complete cure.

I cannot recommend Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root too highly to anyone suffering from kidney or bladder trouble.

Yours very truly,

After a False Start.

"In 1890 I began to drink coffee. "At that time I was healthy and enjoyed life. At first I noticed no bad effects from the indulgence but in course of time found that various troubles were coming upon me.

"Palpitation of tha heart took unto itself sick and nervous headaches, biding troubles followed and eventually my stomach became so deranged that even a light meal caused ma sarious distress.

"Our physician's prescriptions folled to help me and then I dosed myself with patent medicine till I was thoroughly disgusted and hopeless.

"Finally I began to notice that coffee was the cauea of my troubles. I experimanted by leaving it off, except for one small cup at breakfast. This helped some but did not altogether relieve my distress. It satisfied me, however, that I was on the right track.

"So I gave up coffae altogether and began to use Postum. In ten days I found myself greatly improved in many nerves steady, my head clear, my kidneys working better and better, my heart's action rapidly improving, my appetite improved and the ability to eat a hearty meal without entiegy or suffering-restored to me. And this condition remains.

"Leaving off coffee and using Postum did this, with no help from drugs, as I abandoned the use of medicines when I began to use the food drink." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Senator Clapp in an interview at Long Branch last week said: 'Knowledge that he has no chance for reelection has made Taft ill tempered, distatorii and bull headed\". \"Taft don't know how to handle the people,\"Clapp continued,'and nobody knows this as well as Taft himself.The knowledge has made him sour,reevish and fretful."

The State Forest Rangers are likely to do lots of good in preventing fires Big fires start from small fires that are set out by careless people who don't care if it does get away from them and burn the whole country up. A forest ranger, or patrolman are in the same position regarding fires as a game warden is about games. If law violators about setting out fires know that there is a man in the locality watching for a chance to catch the bugs, and put them over the road,they will not he so likely to set out fires.

If the unexpected should happen and Canada should not indorse the Reciprocity treaty,wheat would jump upward about 25 cts. a bushell, which would expose Taft in all his nakedness to the Northwestern farmers. Canada sees the advatage to their farms by this treaty, but some of the "old heads" are afraid that it would lead to them being annexed to the U.S.,and that they would have to live under the same laws as them wild Americans do, who are likely to lynch a man before breakfast, call their president a traitor, and picture him out as an old tramp with a big patch on the back of his pants.

That Dam Log Jam.

There does not seem to be any hope of the war department doing any thing to make the lumber companys open their log jam and dam so as to let the water out of Red Lake into the river. The jam is about five miles loog and the lake has drifted sand in between the logs so as to shut off the water from coming out of the lake. But what can be done about it? Nothing! The lumber companys have complet control of the situation, and there is not a newspaper between Grand Forks and Sunbeam that DARE publish one line of tronth about how they have shut off this river by damming up the outlet, where water comes from the lake into river. But why dare they not publish the facts? Because the lumber companys threaten to take their mills out of their towns, if they do. There is not now over six inches of water in the river, and by January 1st, there will not be a live fish in it, from Thief River Falls to Red Lake, and next spring the stink of them will drive the people out of the country, but we may as well prepare to take our medicine, for the lumber Kings are the boss, and the people can be damned.

Will the government connell them to open the river or not? There will be no use for them to say next spring that they did not understand the situation, as the facts are before our Congressmen, Steenerson, both of our Senators from Minnesota and the war department at Washington D.C. If that log dam stays in this river some of the Socialist speakers tell the trouth.

Twel ve corn binders were core binders were sold in Crookston last Saturday by the firm of A. J. & A. McKinnon. to farmers rasiding in the surrouding territory. Who says we are not raising corn in northern Minnesota?

DIARY OF A BRIDEGROOM.

Mo Begins to Learn on Third Day of His Honeymoon.

WE'VE been married almost three days now. Today she informed me a dozen times that she is sure I smoke too much. Two of her second cousins and a man who used to live next door to her folks twenty years ago died from tobacco heart.

Did a little butter with her gown today; hooked it right the second time, but my hands were sticky, and I smudged the fabric. She reminded me that I was to buy the new ones hereafter and it would pay me to be careful.

Had another surprise. Mamie has an insatiable appetite for spring onions. I was forced to eat three to self defense. She even served them for breakfast.

Mamie asked me to look if her white shirts showed yesterday morning. I told her they didn't. It annoyed her terribly later in the day when she discovered that they did.

So far, outside of the bellboys, the captain, mate, head waiter and waiters and all the passengers, I don't think anybody suspects that we are bride and groom. The orchestra played the wedding march when we went into the dining room last evening, and Mamie spent the entire meal hour trying to pick out the couple it was intended for.

Went up to the smoking room for an hour this afternoon. When I got back to the stateroom I found Mamie crying. She said she just knew I didn't love her any more because I forgot to kiss her goodby.

Sat on something sharp this afternoon; later discovered it was rice. I wish people would boil their rice before throwing it.

For the nine thousand eight hundred and seventy-sixth time I have insisted her that I think our house will be all right when we get back.

Also for the nine thousand five hundred and sixty-fourth time I have told her that I think the cut glass pickle dish her Aunt Elizabeth sent us is really beautiful.—Detroit Free Press.

Suspicious.

"Let me show you 'Love Letters of Wise Men,'" said the clerk in the book emporium.

"Are they signed?" asked the cautious bookworm.

"Yes, indeed, every one of them."

"Then they must be forgeries. Wise men never sign their names to love letters."—Chicago News

Dividing the Danger.

"Help, help! I'm drowning!" shrieked the young woman in the surf.

The men on the shore seemed to hesitate. It was an old dodge, and they knew it. But the young woman appeared really to be in distress. A manly young man, the best swimmer in the throng, spoke up:

"If I save her will somebody in the throng volunteer to marry her?"

"I will," spoke up a weak-kneed, pale faced youth, and immediately the work of rescue began.—Detroit Free Press.

The greatest danger of the man who has a command of language is that ere he is aware language will have command of him.—Puck.

Mysterious.

"There's something mysterious about the word 'psychic,'" said the student of occult things.

"Yes," replied the plain person, "and the most mysterious thing about it to me is the way they spell it."—Washington Star.

The Spirit of the Age.

He had earned a hundred dollars,
And he got it in a lump,
He, you understand, was married.
Home he hustled bones he carried,
Nor upon the way there tarried—
He went to it on the jump.

To his wife he showed the money,
And they counted it with care.
She could hardly keep from crying
As the dollars she stood eying
Where before her they were lying.
All disarmished yet and fair.

Then she turned and kissed her hubby,
And she said: "You darling man!
To the neighbors let us show it,
So that they shall surely know it,
Then let's hurry out and blow it
In as quickly as we can."

Always Answered.

Children often are highly logical, though not quite to the adult standard. They intuit conclusions by those processes of "pure reason" which being quite unbiased by the opinions of others, sometimes result in startling truths.

Almost everybody, for instance, has heard of the little lad who, listening to the questions of an irreligious friend of the family as to what would happen if it were supposed that one good Christian should pray for an east and another for a west wind at sea, innocently answered that of coarse there'd be an awful tempest, but not every one has heard of the equally pertinent and naive solution recently offered by a thoughtful youngster for the ever perplexing problem of "Are prayers answered?"

The child was talking with another, who asked the weird and puzzling question, explaining at the same time that he didn't believe that prayers were answered, because he never got anything he asked for.

"You don't pray for the right things," answered little Mr. Wiseman. "Of course all prayers are answered, but sometimes the answer is 'Yes' and sometimes it's 'No.'"—Chicago Record-Herald.

When a Peanut Sprouts.

"Few persons are perhaps aware that a thing of beauty is a common peanut plant growing singly in a six or eight inch pot and grown indoors during the colder weather," said a florist. "Kept in a warm room or by the kitchen stove, a peanut kernel planted in a pot of loose mellow loam and only moderately moistened will soon germinate and grow up into a beautiful plant, extending its branches over the pot. The leaves close together like the leaves of a book on the approach of night or when a shower begins to fall upon them. The plant bears tiny yellow flowers. There is nothing else just like it."

Lengthy and Monotenous.

One of the most curious contracts entered into by an operatic artist was that agreed to by Parisetti., When he visited Spain, Philip V. was suffering from mental depression, from which nothing aroused him until the arrival of Farinelli. The queen was so delighted to see her royal spouse once more interested that she engaged Farinelli at a salary of $10,000 to remain in Madrid. This he did, singing the same four songs to the king every night for ten years.

Too Much For Him.

Voltaire could not speak much English. The reason why he refused to study the language is this: It was drilled into him that "plague" was pronounced "plig," which he thought very pretty and acceptable. But right on top of it he was introduced to "ague," which his teacher said must be called "a-gue." Finding it impossible to reconcile the difference, he went off into a philosophical tantrum and dropped the study.

TREE TRUNK CANNON.

Wonderful Wooden Hids Wound Guns of the Antilles.

The mention of wooden guns suggests a company of boy soldiers commanded by a captain who wears a tin sword. The revolutionary soldiers of Cuba, Haiti and the Dominican Republic, however, have from time to time made cannon from tree trunks and applied them to practical purposes. In the Antilles there grows a peculiar tree with a winding grain, so tenacious of fiber that to split it by ordinary means is almost an impossibility.

When wanted for artillery purposes the tree is felled, a section some five feet in length and one foot in diameter is selected and cut, the bark is removed, and uneven places on the surface are dressed down.

The embryo cannon is then placed on rude trusses and a bore burned in it, a process that serves further still to harden the wood. While the bore is being burned green ox hides are cut into long strips by beginning in the centre and working toward the outer edge as one would peel an apple.

When all is in readiness one end of this rawhide band, which is about three inches in width, is spiked to the wooden cannon near the breech. A lever or bar is attached to the butt. Two or three negroes grasp the arms of the bar and slowly turn the hollowed log on its axis. The band of green hide is kept under a strain, and in this way the core of the cannon is wound with one of the toughest materials, wire excepted, in the world.

The first layer of hide is tightly wound to the muzzle of the growing gun and back toward the breech again until a number of layers have thus been wound on and the promising piece of artillery has grown several inches in diameter.

It is then placed in a draft of dry, hot air and allowed to harden. When the hardening and curing process is complete the persevering inhabitants have a fairly serviceable weapon.

One of those homemade wood and rawhide cannon used during the last Cuban insurrection is said to have withstood 104 charges of powder before becoming useless. The projectiles for it were made of scrap iron, broken stone and fire hardened clay balls.—St. Louis Republic.

REAL JAVA COFFEE.

You May Get a Cup Almost Any Place Except In Java.

It seems strange that in the far east where tea and coffee come from, it is very difficult for the traveler in nearly all places in India, the Straits Settlements and elsewhere in the orient to procure a cup or really good tea or coffee. This, says Sir Frederic S. Isham, the novelist, although seemingly paradoxical, is only on a par with conditions in so many of our little American hamlets and villages where good butter, rich cream and good chickens for the residents are practically unobtainable, all of them having been "sent to town."

In Calcutta I heard an American in the best hotel there say to the waiter: "If this," indicating the contents of a cup before him, "is tea, bring me coffee. If it is coffee, bring me tea." And the waiter (an Eurasian, who had no sense of humor, took away the drink and phlegmatically brought something else—equally bad, no doubt.

HANDS WOULD CRACK OPEN

"About two months ago my hands started to crack open and bleed, the skin would scale off, and the good flesh would burn and itch dreadfully. When my hands first started to get sore, there were small blisters like water blisters which formed. They itched dreadfully, it just seemed as though I could tear the skin all off. I would scratch them and the skin would peel off, and the flesh would be all red and crack open and bleed. It worried me very much, as I had never had anything the matter with my skin. I was so afraid I would have to give up my employment.

"My doctor said he didn't think it would amount to anything. But it kept getting worse. One day I saw a piece in one of the papers about a lady who had the same trouble with her hands. She had used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and was cured. I decided to try them, and my hands were all healed before I had used one cake of Cuticura Ointment. I am truly thankful for the good results from the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, for thanks to them I was cured, and did not have to lose a day from work. I have had no return of the skin trouble." Bee Keeping and other "Side Lines" on the Farm

T is admitted by almost all students of the situation that if the present growth in the population of this country keeps up—as may have 150,000,000 people by the middle of the century—farming conditions will feel, as much as anything else, the influence of the greater congestion. The expected sequel is the total disappearance of the big farms. Indeed, for that matter, the "bonanza farms" that excited the wonder of the world a decade or two ago have been produotly disappearing in later years and probably the next generation will find scarcely one of them left unless it be in the most isolated sections of the country.

Now, of course, Uncle Sam's vast domain can support double or tripic our present population without any suggestion of that crowding which is noticeable in Europe, where some of the countries have a population that averages 500 or 600 to the square mile. At the same time the new turn of affairs will tend to bring into favor here the small farms that have long been the standard agricultural holding abroad. Probably we shall not have many farms as small as the majority of those in Europe nor will the small farm be as universal in the New World in our time as it is across the big pond, but withal it is manifest that the era af the small farm is dawning. Given a small or moderate size farm, two general plans of deriving a livelihood therefrom present themselves to the American farmer. He may specialize, as so many of his brothers of the soil are doing—that is, concentrate all his energy and investment on the production of one product, in handling which he aims to become an expert, or, if he ha bastitates to thus put "all his eggs in oan basket," he may carry on diversified activities. Which of these plans is best cannot be determiaed by any rule of thumb. Each individuai case must ha a law unto itself. Much depends upon the size and location of the farm; its proximity to markets; tha size of the farmer's family; the labor problem in tha locality, and finally on the temperament of the farmer himself. Even given two farms af equal size, side by side, the owner of one might be qualified for specialization where his neighbor would attain better results by favoring that variety which to many people is the spice of life.

Probably, says an agricultural expert, in the case of the average, well-located small farm the ideal policy theoretically, is that which prescribes specialization, but also plans for one or more "side lines," which will contribute to the farm income almost from the start and may ultimately develop into an important factor from a financial standpoint. This means, in effect, that the farmer should concentrate largely upon one product or group of products, which can derive the benefits that almost always accrue from undivided attention, but that he or members of his household should have minor or supplementary sources of income, such as bee keeping, poultry raising, etc., which, while well worth while, would not represent sufficient investment or present serious enough problems to distract the mind of the farmer from the main business in hand. With this latter consideration in view, it is especially fortunate when the "side lines" on the farm are such that the whole responsibility for them can be taken over by the women and children of the household without bothering the farmer with the matter at all during his busy season.

Ottimes a "side line" becomes a double blessing, because it discloses a means of making use of waste products on the farm. It is being discovered that the neglected "by-products" of our farms bold proportioaately as much wealth as the "by-products" that have been utilized so successfully in the manufacturing world. As illustrations af the application of this principle on the farm there may be cited the cases of the farmer who now make lavish "pin money" by preparing preserves and jelly with the surplus fruit and vegetables that would otherwise be wasted, and of the country housewives who in their leisure momeats make cushions and all manner of saleable novelties (not forgetting fancy bats from the corn stalks) that are worse than useless. Similarly, ona rural resident is growing rich from raising water lilies on her little farm, and in the south and southwest some lugnatious people have taken up "ostrich farming" and are selling the plumes from the birds at prices that make the enterprise well worth while.

Poultry raising is a side iiaa that comes to mind the mlauta mention is made of any such activities. There have been thousands of instances where chickens, allowed to run wild on the farm, have ultimately been the means of swelling the family bank account, and to pursue the subject still further, it may be cited that many a farmer or farmer's wife who began to "keep chickens" solely with a view to marketing the poultry has been surprised in due course to find that the eggs, to which scarce a thought had been given as a source of revenue, have rivaled the dressed fowl in the income yield. Particularly has this been the case in recent years when eggs have brought as high as sixty cents a dozen in city markets. Eggs as a "by-product" would yield even bigger dividends if care were taken to gather them at least twice a day and to get them to market somewhat more promptly, for, as it known, "guaranteed 24 hour eggs" will always bring five or ten cents a dozen more than the ordinary run of fresh eggs.

Without disparaging the merits of poultry as a side line, however, it may be suggested that bee keeping is perhaps the most truly ideal incidental occupation on the farm. Indeed, the experts strongly advise that bee keeping be not made a sole occupation, although there are many localities where an experienced bee keeper can make a good living by devoting his entire time and attention to the work, once he has the requisite knowledge. The beauty about bee keeping is that by beginning on a small scale the bees can be made to pay for themselves and for all additional apparatus, as well as to return some profit all the while. It may as well be admitted, however, that for all its advantages there are few occupations that require more study to insure success than does bee keeping. In years when the available nectar is limited, surplus honey is secured only by judicious manipulation, and it is only through considerable experience that the bee keaper can, under such circumstances, carry out the proper manipulation to save his crop.

All authorities on the subject emphasize the fact that the only way to make bee keeping a profitable business is to obtain naught but the first-class product—honey comb honey or carefully prepared and neatly packed extracted honey. Under good management the average annual honey yield per colony will probably he 35 to 30 pounds of comb honey, or 40 to 60 pounds of extracted honey. Such yields can be expected only, however, when bees are kept in hives of up-to-date type, with movable frames. Plain boxes may ha wall enough to start with if the bee keeper is not able to afford say investment for the superior apparatus, but all such make-shifts should be discarded at the earliest possible moment, as in such environments the bees will produce only a restricted amount of honey and that of inferior quality. The problems of American bee keapers have been considerably simplified of late years through the passage by various states of laws providing for the annual or county inspection of apiaries for bee diseasa control.

Another "side line" that has attained in favor in the rural districts almost as rapidly as bee keeping is found in tha raising of pigeons, doves, etc. The backbone of this industry is found, of course, in the raising of squabs for the market that has developed of recent years in all our large cities, but there is also much headway made in raising the fancy varieties of pigeons for disposal as pets. Indeed, tha whola pet stock industry in all its branches may be advantageously carried on as "side lines" on farms. Shetland pony farms bava become a recognized institution in various parts of the country these past few years; rabbits and guinea pigs yeild an income to many a farmer boy, and there are dozens of farmers' wives who derive profit as well as pleasure from raising blooded cats, gold fish, canaries and other furred or feathered household companions. In woodland districts the making of rustic furniture offers a profitable occupation for the men in the long winter days, and the women and children can employ their time to equal advantaga in the production of pine pillows and those bark and grass novelties for which trara is always a good market at remunerative prices.

Have Their Good Traits

English Humorist Puts "In a Good Word for Felins Pets of the Household.

Cats have the credit of being more worldy wise than dogs—of looking more after their own interests, and being less blindly devoted to those of their friends. And we men and women are naturally shocked at such selfishness. Cats certainly do love a family that has a carpet in the kitchen more than the family that has not; and if there are many children about they prefer to spend their leisure time next door. But, taken altogether, cats are libeled. Make a friend of one and she will stick to you through thick and thin. All the cats that I have had have been most firm comrades. I had a cat once that used to follow me about everywhere, until it even got quite embarrassing, and I had to beg her, as a personal favor, not to accompany me any further than down to High street. She used to sit up for me when I was late home and meet me in the passage. It made me feel quite like a married man; except that she never asked where I had been and then didn't believe me when I told her.

Another cat I had used to get drunk regularly every day. She would hang about for bones outside the cellar door for the purpose of sneaking in on the first opportunity and lapping up the drippings from the beer cask. I do not mention this habit of hers in praise of the species, but merely to show how almost human some of them are. If the transmigration of souls is a fact, this animal was certainly qualifying most rapidly for a Christian. For her vanity was only second to her love of drink. Whenever she caught a particularly big rat she would bring it up into the room where we were all sitting, lay the corpse down in the midst of us and wait to be praised.—Jerome K. Jerome, Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow.

A Greenland Duel.

It is rather a pity for the gayety of nations that French men of letters cannot fight their duels as duels are fought in Greenland. In Greenland when one man has been insulted by another the adversaries each compose a satire in verse. This each man recites to his household until the servants and the women know it by heart.

When she received his reply she nearly fainted. Here is what the wretch wrote:

"Dear Mabel: I would like awfully much to return your photos, but, honestly, you girls all dress and pose so much alike for the camera that I can't tell any two of you apart. The RING and the MAN

WITH SOME INCIDENTAL REFLATION TO THE WOMAN

By Cyrus Townsend Brady

COPYRIGHT 1910 BY HASTINGS, HOUSE & COMPANY.

SYNOPSIS.

A foolish young tenderfoot becomes fascinated with the bold, artful wife of a drunken prospector in a western mining town. They prepare to elope in a blockade billiard room. The husband, in a maudlin moment, tells the story to his wife, but the chivalrous boy pins a note to the body taking the crime upon himself. In their flight to the railroad station the woman's horse falls exhausted the youth puts her astride his own horse and, leading her, starts across the desert. Suddenly the woman thrusts her escort into a snow drift and rides on. Half-frozen he stumbles into the railroad station just as the train bears the woman away. Twenty-five years later, this man, George Gormly, is a multi-millionaire in New York. He is engaged to marry the beautiful and wealthy settlement worker, and co-operates with her in her work. Gormly becomes owner of a steamship line and finds himself involved in pier and track extension plans by grafting officers, backed by the Gordon Traction company. An automobile accident on a lonely road brings Gormly and Miss Haldane to her country home. Gormly makes the impromptu party comfortable. In a confidential talk with Gormly, Miss Haldane outlines on her settlement work, and hopes that he shall benefit mankind with his wealth and business talents. He tells her that he has political aspirations. He will be mayor of New York and redeem the city from corruption. Mr. Haldane in a long desired interview with Gormly, makes an indirect proposition to compromise the fight which the latter has been waging in the newspapers against the Gordon Traction company. Mr. Haldane is suspected of being the tool of Gormly boldly announces his plan of campaign to Haldane.

CHAPTER VI.

Gormly Announces His Candidacy.

The ball into which Miss Haldane stepped early the next morning had been transformed into a perfect bower of winter beauty. There had been no time to buy anything; but the most available pine trees on the place, of which there were several, had been ruthlessly sacrificed, and under Gormly's personal supervision the hall, a magnificent apartment under any circumstances, had been lavishly decorated with the fragrant evergreen in honor of Christmas.

Gormly had been busy during the night. He actually did not slept a wink. So soon as he had got the party safely to bed, he had gone to the stable, and in default of anyone else who could do so, he had himself ridden across the country through the snow and storm, which was even then dying out, to notify the people at the Haldane place of the predicament of the family and to arrange that maids and men with proper clothing should be brought over to his own cottage early in the morning.

Ilence Miss Haldane was under no necessity of appearing in evening costume at eight o'clock in the morning, or of making a guy of herself in Mrs. Mullen's extraordinary attire. She had learned, of course, from her maid how the news had been brought and how she happened to be there with the change of apparel.

Miss Haldane had not slept very well; for one reason her thoughts had dwelt unceasingly upon that strange conversation she had had with her host. She had awakened earlier than the rest, had dressed immediately, and had descended to the hall in hope of seeing him. Her pleasure and satisfaction sparkled in her eyes as she extended her hand.

"How delightfully Christmasiike is the room; how good it smells!" she said after the first words of greeting.

"I am glad indeed that it pleases you," answered Gormly, smiling. "And if you will permit me, I will repeat my words of last night, or early this morning, and wish you again a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year as well."

"And I will give you back your wish with interest," returned Miss Haldane, "as I did last night. I am sure that we are all intensely grateful to you for your forethought in having the maids and clothes brought over. Felice, my maid, has told me that you rode over yourself very early this morning to carry the news of our plight, and to bring them. It must have been hard riding."

"It took me back to boyhood days, Miss Haldane."

"In the west?" asked the girl.

"Well, yes," was the somewhat reluctant answer, "although the greater part of my boyhood was not spent in the west."

"And the ride in the storm, was it like the other rides and storms you have experienced?"

"This was a very mild affair compared to those. I could wish it had been harder."

"Why?"

"This time I was riding for another woman, a different woman."

Miss Haldane rather thrilled to the direct statement; but womanlike she cheeged the subject.

"Did you have this Christmas arrangement of pines made in the hall?" She asked irrelevantly.

"For you—and your party," interposed Gormly with a perceptible break after the pronoun so as to allow the fact to permeate thoroughly. "I wish," he added, "that circumstances permitted me to signalize the season by offering you an adequate Christmas present.

"I have, however, something that may possibly interest you, which I may venture to hope you may regard as a personal tribute from me in lieu of such a gift."

"And what is that?" asked Miss Haldane, her curiosity getting the better of her discretion.

"It is here!" said Gormly, extending to her a copy of The New York Planet of Christmas morning, which had been brought over from the station by special messenger by his direction.

"The morning paper!" exclaimed the girl, with a laugh.

"Not so much the morning paper, interesting though it usually is, but something that appears therein."

"What is that?"

"Allow me."

He took the paper from her, opened it until he came to the advertising section, and then handed it back to her, in bold type covering a whole page she read the following:

"Mr. George Gormly offers himself to the people of New York as a candidate for the mayoralty in the forthcoming election. Mr. George Gormly submits the following as his platform:

"Honest administration of the laws in the interest of the people; the preservation of all the rights and privileges of the people; the operation of the public franchises by the people, or if by corporations, the due safeguarding of the rights of the people; the abolition of graft; a non-partisan administration in which "Honesty" and "Honor" shall be the watchwords, which shall be conducted on business principles in the ancient and admirable acceptance of those words.

"Mr. George Gormly pledges his business and personal honor, which the people of New York who have dealt Haldane, her curiosity getting the better of her discretion.

He Handed Her the Paper.

with him for a quarter of a century have had ample opportunity of testing, that, if elected, he will administer the affairs of the city honestly and with the same care and ability with which he has striven to carry on his own business to the satisfaction of the public. He would advise the voters, if they are in doubt as to what his business methods are, to refer to their mothers, sisters, wives, and daughters who have been patrons of his store.

"In the hope that better days are drawing for New York, Mr. George Gormly has the honor to wish his friends, and those whom he must to be his great regret characterize as his enemies, a very Merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year."

Eleanor Haldane read this extraordinary announcement aloud. Then she handed the paper back to him and extended her hand, joyfully exclaiming,

"It is perfectly splendid. It's the finest thing I have ever heard. Nothing could have delighted me more. I am so glad to see you irrevocably committed to the step! I am sure you will be elected, and—"

"What, my dear child," broke in the cold voice of Mrs. Haldane, who was just descending the stairs, "is giving you such joy, may I ask?"

"Mother," said the young woman, turning to her and lifting the paper from the table, "what do you think? Mr. Gormly has announced himself as candidate for mayor of New York at the spring election."

"Indeed," began Mrs. Haldane loftily, surveying Gormly through her lorgnette, "I am quite surprised."

"I think it's awfully jolly," broke in Miss Stewart, who had followed the elder women into the hall. "I didn't know that gentlemen mingled in politics as a rule. I thought it was all reserved for the Bowery society."

"What you don't know about the politics of New York would fill a large book, Miss Stewart," said Livingstone Haldane, who had entered the room with Dr. Deveaux at the same time.

"I am afraid it will be a sad day for the men," said the doctor, "when the women begin to take intelligent interest in men, not merely as men but as politicians."

"What has started the political discussion?" queried young Haldane.

"Mr. Gormly has," answered his sister. "He has announced himself as candidate for mayor of New York."

"And I said that I never knew that gentlemen went into politics," interposed Miss Stewart.

"They often enter," said the doctor, "as gentlemen; but infrequently leave with the same degree."

"That's right," answered Livingstone. "It is rather a nasty game to play."

"But don't you think," asked Gormly, "that if a few more gentlemen would play it, it would become a cleaner game?"

"Of course, it would," assented the vivacious Miss Stewart. "Mr. Haldane, why don't you enter it yourself?"

"By Jove!" exclaimed the young man, "that wouldn't be a half bad idea, would it, sis? Father's always talking to me about a career and all that. I wonder why that wouldn't be a good game!"

"Its expensive enough as a pastime," said Dr. Deveaux, "to rank with horse racing and automobiling and other pleasant enjoyments of the harmless rich."

"I should not think," said Mrs. Haldane ponderously, "of allowing my son to—associate himself with—"

"Mother," cried her daughter, "you forget that Mr. Gormly—"

"Quite so, quite so," said the lady vaguely; "but for persons in—er—trade."

"Yes," said Dr. Deveaux, "politics as a rule is made up of harlot and sale, I believe."

"If that's the case," interposed young Haldane facetiously, "I'll get father to buy me the office, and—"

His sister turned on him contemptuously, "Livingstone," she said, "this is a serious matter. The people of New York have been robbed right and left in every way. Everybody knows that. We have the worst administration that has ever disgraced the city. Mr. Gormly, for the sake of the people, is going to try to make things different."

"They all say that," laughed Livingstone. "I don't mean anything personal of course, Mr. Gormly."

"Say whatever you like, Mr. Haldane," returned Gormly composedly. "I expected that the notice would cause amusement; indeed I wrote it for that purpose. And while much that you have said, Dr. Deveaux, about politicians and the political situation is generally true, I wish to assure you that I reserve harder end treats for my business, and if I cannot be elected by the votes of the people on a plain, straightforward issue such as I present, then I shall cheerfully devote the rest of my life to minding my own business."

"The man who minds his own business," said Haldane the elder, who had entered unobserved by the rest of the group, and had listened long enough to catch the drift of the conversation, "as a rule is not cut out for a politician. The chief function of the politician is to attend to the business of other people, and the successful politician is the one who can keep all persons the people that their business needs attention; and generally, that no one can give it such attention as he himself; that he is the one indispensable man."

"I do not assume to be the only man who can give New York a business administration; who can stop graft and stealing, who can safeguard the rights of the people; who can stand for justice and equal opportunity, the administration of the law, and the abolition of privilege. There are doubtless thousands of men who could be trusted to do those things, or at least to make a brave attempt in that direction; but none of them has come forward with an offer to do so."

"You are fully committed to the enterprise, I see, Mr. Gormly," said Haldane gravely.

"Absolutely."

"Well, I supposed as much after our conversation last night. Nothing can alter your resolution."

"Nothing; at least nothing that is likely to be offered."

"Eleanor," said Haldane—at which Mr. Gormly started violently, the word came in so pat—"what do you think of this scheme?"

"Father, I think it is splendid, glorious!" said Mr. Gormly's niece, her attention lest night, as he seems to have told you. I have always said that the man who does something is a large way for his fellow men is after all fulfilling more nearly than any other the highest obligations and privileges of his manhood."

"My dear child," said Mrs. Haldane disapprovingly, "are you intending to enter the political field?"

"Not on the same terms as Louise; but so far as wishing Mr. Gormly success in his enterprise, I am fully committed thereto."

"For you wish to gain your sister's good opinion, Mr. Haldane," said Miss Stewart, "I see that you will have to do something."

"Would that also gain yours?"

"It is very doubtful," was the reply. "You see I haven't that innate predisposition to like you which would naturally be a family characteristic."

"Jesting aside, Mr. Gormly," said Haldane, "I suppose that you realize the tremendous nature of the undertaking you have set to yourself, if you are in earnest."

"I never was more in earnest in my life. I think I realize perfectly."

"Every vested interest, every political influence will be against you."

"Certainly."

"And what will be for you."

"I shall be," said Miss Haldane impulsively.

Gormly bowed. "With you and right on my side, Miss Haldane," he said not ungracefully, "I am sure of a majority."

"Don't delude yourself," continued the older man gravely, "with the belief that because your gallant, somewhat quixotic, declaration wins the support of a certain section of the community, which like my daughter here, is made up more or less of dreamers and theorists, that you are thereby making possible the achievement of your desire."

"I think," returned Gormly, "that all my life I have been something of a dreamer." When I was a young clerk in an obscure store on the east side, I dreamed of that Broadway building, and the dream has come true.

"And I dream dreams of a regenerated New York as well," continued Gormly swiftly. There is one power which is above every other force or organization in communities like ours, if it can only be awakened to its responsibilities and made to feel its force; and that power—"

He stopped and looked smilingly at the elder woman.

"Is the people," cried her daughter with enthusiasm. "And that power I am sure you are going to have."

She stretched out her hand to him impulsively. Gormly took it, bowed over it, and but kissed it.

"I am going to try for it, at least," he said smiling gratefully at her.

"Sir," said the quiet voice of the butler at this moment, "breakfast is served."

"We will breakfast with you, Mr. Gormly," said Haldane on condition that you will take your Christmas dinner with us." He spoke with the utmost cordiality and cordiality in a manner so foreign to his usual hearing that his son and his wife looked at him with amazement. The host continued the elder man, "that my wife joins me most heartily in this invitation. My dear—"

His voice took a slight touch of sharpness, scarcely perceptible, but quite sufficient to awaken the astonished Mrs. Haldane to action.
